FOREIGN.

LONDON, Dec. 27.—A mail steamer from the Cape of Good Hope has arrived, and brings accounts of the manner in which the announcement of the annexation of African territory to the British dominions was received by the inhabitants.

The intelligence that the treaty had been finally concluded produced much excitement.

Mr. Brand, president of the Free State, has issued a formal protest against the transfer of the diamond fields to Great Britain.

Discoveries of gold in considerable qnantities had been made in Transvaal Repnblic, the reports of which have attracted many adventurers to that quarter. Diamond seekers were abandoning their districts for the newly discovered gold country.

Cape Town continued thronged with arriving and returning fortune hunters. The business of the colony was making great strides.

ROME, Dec. 27.—The Bishop of Palestine and Vice Chancellor of the Roman Church is dead, aged seventy eight years. He was elevated to the cardinalate in 1837.

HAVANA, Dec. 27.—General Valmaseda has issued a proclamation in which he says the pardon offered to insurgents cannot last forever. He now proclaims that every insurgent captnred after the fifteenth of January will be shot. Those snrrendering after that date will be sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. Negroes are to be treated the same as whites. All negro women captured will be delivered to their owners and be compelled to wear a chain for four years. All white women captnred in the woods after the fifteenth of Jannary will be banished from the country.

Chiefs of insurgent bands will be allowed to surrender till the fifteenth of Jannary under the condition hitherto granted.

PARIS, Dec. 28.—The papers here assert that Bismarck is seeking a pretext for reoccupying the French provinces which have been evacuated by the Germans.

MADRID, Dec. 28.—It is reported Marshal Concha has been appointed Captain General of Cuba, and Admiral DeBarniby succeeds Senor Roberts at Washington.

ROME, Dec. 28.—A decree has been issued inaugurating the commercial treaty with the United States.

LONDON, Dec. 29.—Alarmed at Gladstone's republican tendencies, the conservative section of Liberals, led by the Duke of Somerset and Viscount Halifax, are seeking to form a coalition with the Tories for the purpose of securing the election of Mr. Bouvie as speaker of the House of Commons instead of Mr. Brand, and to compel the retirement of Mr. Gladstone.

A letter is published from the Queen, in which she says she desires to express a deep sense of the touching sympathy exhibited for her family by the whole nation at the illness of her dear son, the Prince of Wales. This sympathy, she says, has made an ineffaceable impression on her heart. The letter concludes with the hope that her faithful subjects will continue to pray for the complete recovery of the Prince.

GLASGOW, Dec. 30.—While a large road wagon propelled hy steam, and carrying heavy boilers, was passing throngh the streets to-day, snrrounded and followed by a throng of children, one of the boilers exploded. Five children were killed outright, and seven so badly injured that their recovery is doubtful. The dead and injured were frightfully mutilated.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The idea has been started of transferring the property of the Atlantic cable company to the joint governments of Great Britain and the United States. The proposition is received with favor in certain quarters, that it may result in the purchase of the present lines and the establishment of a line of steamers for the transmission of messages in case of accident to the cables.

MADRID, Jan. 2.—The reported ministerial crisis over … affairs, and the recall of Mr. Roberts from Washington, is contradicted.

ROME, January 2.—King Victor Emanuel sent a special embassador to the Vatican on New Year day with congratulations to the Pope. Cardinal Antonelli received the embassador, and informed him that the Pope was indisposed and unable to receive visitors.

CONTINENTAL MISSIONS.

Nothing in the history of modern … is more remarkable than the opening up of all parts of the continent of Europe to missionary effort. It is not many years since it was difficult to introduce copies of the Bible in the vernacular into almost any country of southern Europe. Now the gospel may be freely preached in them all. Italy, Spain, Austria have, one after the other, proclaimed the great principle of religious liberty; and even in Rome itself, under the walls of the Vatican, Gavazzi and others are delivering lectures, exposing the corruptions of the papacy. This most remarkable change, brought about by agencies from which it could never have been expected, and by means which no one could have foreseen, has been effected by a Power higher than that of man, and for purposes of great good to the world. The opening up of the way for the dissemination of the light must be regarded as an indication to the church of her duty, in a large and liberal spirit, to enter on the work of continental evangelization.

The continent of Europe, with England and North America, may be said to be the heart of the world. Missions to all nations are important, but they are doubly important to nations which occupy so influential a position. If all of these were won to a pure Christianity the rest of the world would soon be conquered. THE NEW ZEALAND MASSACRE.—No later news has been received respecting the massacre in New Zealand, reported by telegraph. The dispatch was:

"Bishop Patterson, of Melanesia, the Rev. G. Atkins and a native teacher have been murdered by the natives near Nukapu, in revenge for the kidnapping of natives by English vessels."

Bishop Patterson, says the Church Journal, is well known to our readers as one of the noblest … s of the Colonial Church … for his missionary zeal in behalf of the snrviving descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty. The name of Atkins will also be remembered in the same connection. We hope there is some mistake about these dreadful tidings.

MISSIONARY.

INDIA.—From a recent letter from one of the missionaries of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, we get important intelligence of the missionary work in India. The success of the gospel among the Hill tribes is thus given:

"The Santhals or Hill tribes, which inhabit the western frontier of Bengal, number about two hundred thousand persons, and they belong to that section of the aborigines of India which physically resemble the Chinese or the Malay. The Church Missionary Society commenced a mission among them in 1855, and there are now in connection with this mission eight hundred native Christians. There are two European missionaries in charge—the Rev. W. T. Storrs and the Rev. H. W. Shachell. The former, writing concerning the native Christians, says: 'When these people do receive the trnth, how simply they believe, how common sense their ideas of what befits their calling and position as members of Christ and children of God! How childlike the steady faith of these Santhals; how much Christianity has done for them socially; how the clean house becomes cleaner still, and even ornamented; how the semi-nudity of the heathen is exchanged for decent though simple clothing; how their self-respect and their self-restraint increase; how they cease to be the slaves of the Mahajens, and how the chronic malady of debt, which depressed their vitality, and made them such mere drudges, so down-hearted, ceases, and they can assume such a thoroughly independent bearing!'"

TURKEY.—The Christian Work contains most valnable information respecting the progress of the gospel in Turkey. We extract the following:

"Forty years have now passed since the Rev. William Goodell, slowly making his way in a sailing vessel up the Sea of Marmora, cast anchor in the Golden Horn. His errand was to commence in this city a mission of the American Board to the various nationalities in this part of the Tnrkish empire. In the progress of these forty years that one has become four distinctly organized missions, covering with their network of stations a portion of European Turkey, and the whole of Asia Minor. The first Evangelical Armenian Church was organized in 1846. Dnring the twenty-five years that have since elapsed, that one church has become seventy-three. Of these, five are in European Tnrkey; the remaining sixty-eight are scattered all over Northern Turkey, from the Bosphorns to the Persian frontier. Abont one-third of the whole number have already become self-snpporting. The remaining two-thirds receive more or less aid from missionary funds for the snpport of their pastors, and for other expenses; bnt all are entirely self-governed, the missionaries neither exercising nor claiming any anthority over them beyond that of fatherly advice and brotherly co-operation. For purposes of mntnal counsel and co-operation, the churches have organized among themselves four 'evangelical nnions,' as they are called. The largest of these is that which has for its center the city of Harpoot, in Mesopotamia. It embraces twenty-six churches, and is a very efficient body, doing much not only for the evangelization of the commnnities around them, bnt for the spread of the gospel to the regions beyond, in the wilds of Koordistan."

The Mnrdered Missionary Bishop.

We mentioned, a fortnight since, the murder of the English missionary, Bishop Patterson, and another clergyman, on one of the Anckland islands, in the Sonth seas. The murder was an act of retaliation on the part of the islanders npon the English, who had repeatedly decoyed the natives on board their vessels and taken them to the New Caledonia and Fiji plantations, to be employed as slaves. In one case the kidnappers are said to have actually assnmed the disguise of the missionary bishop and ship, as a cover to their nefarious designs, and as an inducement to the natives to place themselves in the power of the kidnappers. It is no wonder that the natives should retaliate upon the … English when an opportunity was given, nor that the unsnspecting bishop and missionary, whose name and character had been treacherously used, should be one of the first to suffer. The murdered bishop, who was about forty-four years of age, had devoted a large portion of his life and fortune to missionary work, in pursuit of which he went out to New Zealand ten years ago, taking with him a fine steam yacht, purchased at his own expense, and which he used in going from island to island, in furtherance of his work. He took out with him a printing press and type, and printed the Bible and other books in the native tongues; and has established native schools and churches in New Zealand and adjacent islands, always displaying such benevolence and consideration for the people among whom he dwelt as to render him exceedingly popular and beloved. In England he is remembered for the same characteristics, those acquainted with him describing him as a most genial man. About two years ago he narrowly escaped being massacred at the same island, but he always resisted the entreaties of his friends to return home, and continned going among the semi-savage tribes of the antipodes unarmed. The Rev. Mr. Aitkin, who was assassinated with him, was the deceased bishop's chaplain.—New York Observer.

MADAGASCAR.

Our readers well remember the effort that was made about a year ago by high churchmen in England to take advantage of the success of the London Missionary Society's laborers in Madagascar by sending out a bishop. It was simply an unwarrantable interference with the work of apostolic men, and was designed not to make the people Christians, but to make Christians Church of England men. It was a proselyting and not at all a missionary scheme, and was a repetition of the Sandwich Island enterprise, which proved a miserable failnre. In the case of Madagascar the man who was appointed bishop had the good sense to decline, and the project was abandoned for the time.

The following extract from a letter recently received by Rev. Mr. Ellis, from the prime minister of Madagascar, shows how the proposition was received at Madagascar, and how much a Church of England bishop is needed there:

"I have heard the report concerning a bishop to come to Madagascar; also a report that the prayer book is used within the precincts of the palace; also that the Queen desires that a bishop may come, and was disappointed when he did not come. These reports are not true, for the prayer book has never been used in the worship which the Queen attends. She was not at all disappointed because the bishop did not come. But the work which you, the missionaries of the London Missionary Society, have done here in Madagascar we indeed know, for a work of blessing to our country truly it has been, and you have never forsaken us from the very beginning unto the present time. The Queen is well and visits you. May you live! May the blessing of God be with you.

Saith your friend truly,

RAINILAIARIVONY."

FROM MEXICO.

In Mexico the Romanists have organized the "Societad Catolica," a semi-secret society, with spies and police of its own, designed to counteract the rising spirit of inquiry and toleration. An English Methodist at the capital says:

"The past month has been one of great excitement and intense anxiety to all those interested in this work of God our Savior in this land. Christians have been put into prison, in an arbitrary manner, by the local authorities; houses have been broken into, robbed and burnt by those whose office it is to do justice; and many of our brethren mobbed out of their own town and stoned, not because they had committed an offense against the law, but because they think for themselves, read the Bibles, and worship God according to their own consciences.

"In Tizayuco, a town about twelve leagues from here, there was a congregation of eighty persons who regularly met for worship, and whose lives, so far as known, were consistent, and gave every reason to believe many to be true Christians. A party of popish missionaries have visited that place, and have lighted up the fires of bigotry and fanaticism; and to such a pitch did it arrive on Sunday, the second of September, that the authority of the place poured upon them, while they were preparing for worship with an armed force, conversing twelve of our brethren to prison, and taking away the Bible and money found in their houses. Some came to this city in their night …

…state their case and be a comfort … while the others after some days confinement, were escorted to the confines of the district or state and turned out of the place by the authorities.

"The names of the suppliants showed their marriage to be among … the native class, while their husbands, fathers, brothers and friends were either in power or … fugitives.

"After some days some of our brethren returned stealthily to their homes, where for awhile they remained in peace, but on Sunday last our brother Segnias Lucas was furiously attacked by a murderous mob, who entered, and very quickly riddled him with knives, who, like the first martyr, Stephen, fell calling on his Savior, saying Jesus, help me. Jesus, commending me. He was also dragged about the street … and then left for dead, as did the wife and … of a former mob, who had been … by these 'Christian' murderers, from the pulpit. That … Protestant would go straight to heaven after death. And to show their hatred of God's holy word, one of them tore up a volume of the precious truth, in the … and spit on it. As if a … cruelty was necessary, they … mob tore away Segnias little boy from his mother, and brought him to look at his father, who lay weltering in his blood, and his daughter, a girl of twelve years, disappeared … whether taken away by the mob or gone into hiding to save her life and honor is not known. Segnias, poor fellow, although left for dead … strange to say, still lives, and the doctor says probably he may recover; but, with the proof, the evil doctor is doing all in his power to get him to make confession, and threatens to leave him to his fate if he does not do so. Others have suffered, having their houses and all belonging to them burnt to the ground; and the women here, some of them, arrived here with scarcely enough clothes on them for decency. The congregation, so … now scattered.

Pleasant Hill and Many …

Mr. Evans. The Conference … is closing, and we are … can state that we have … we could. We were appointed to Pleasant Hill and Many circuit. We went around the first time and found Many station without a preacher, and took that in. We went around the second time and found Natchitoches station without a preacher, and took that in also, making in all twenty-two appointments. We have held three camp meetings this year, one on the Hill circuit and one on each station, resulting in great good in the awakening of sinners and conversion of souls. We have had about one hundred conversions this year, the parents of about eighty of the above, baptized thirty infants, and organized three Sabbath schools, as all which have suspended for want of superintendents. We have organized a Methodist church in the town of Natchitoches; have thirty members and an interesting Sabbath school, and we have commenced raising funds to build a church in Natchitoches. Our membership in the town is too poor to build such a house as we need, and the citizens of Natchitoches demand it in such a place as Natchitoches. Will not those who have the means come over and help Natchitoches? We have got the … on which to build. … the public … Rev. THE SMOKING FLAX AND BRUISED REED.

When evening choirs the praises hymned
In Zion's courts of old,
The High Priest walked his round, and trimmed
The shining lamp of gold;
And if, perchance, some flame burned low,
With fresh oil vainly drenched,
He cleansed it from its socket, so
The smoking flax was quenched.

But thou, who walkest, Priest Most High,
Thy golden lamps among,
What things are weak and near to die
Thou makest fresh and strong;
Thou breathest on the trembling spark,
That else would soon expire,
And swift it shoots up through the dark,
A brilliant spear of fire.

The shepherd that to stream and shade
Withdrew his flock at noon,
On reedy stop soft music made,
In many pastoral tune;
And if, perchance, the reed were crushed,
It could not more be used—
Its mellow music marred and hushed,
He brake it when so bruised.

But thou, good Shepherd, who dost feed
Thy flock in pastures green,
Thou dost not break the bruised reed
That sorely crushed hath been;
The heart that dumb in anguish lies,
Or yields but notes of woe,
Thou dost retune to harmonies
More rich than angels knew!

Lord, once my love was all ablaze,
But now it burns so dim!
My life was praise, but now my days
Make a poor, broken hymn;
Yet ne'er by thee am I forgot,
But helped in deepest need—
The smoking flax thou quenchest not,
Nor breakest the bruised reed.

THE TEMPLE.

BY GEORGE HERBERT.

In time of service seal up both thine eies,
And send them to thine heart; that spying sinne,
They may weep out the stains by them did rise:
Those doores being shut, all by the eare comes in.
Who marks in church-time others' symmetrie,
Makes all their beautie his deformitie.

Let vain or busie thoughts have there no part:
Bring not thy plough, thy plots, thy pleasures thither.
Christ purged his temple; so must thou thy heart.
All worldly thoughts are but theeves met together
To cosin thee. Look to thy actions well:
For churches either are our heav'n or hell.

Judge not the preacher; for he is thy judge:
If thou mislike him, thou conceiv'st him not.
God calleth preaching folly. Do not grudge
To pick out treasures from an earthen pot.
The worst speak something good: if all want sense,
God takes a text, and preacheth patience.

FRAGMENTS OF MY EXPERIENCE.

Mine was a happy childhood, and ths earlier earser of my sventful life gave promise of a glorious manhood. My parents taught ms to regard ths acquisition of knowledgs as ths sure road to honor and success, and I set about the work of ssif-culture with all diligenes. I embraced religion at ths ags of ssventeen, and at once became an sfficient laborer. I was a zsalous Sabbath school teachsr, and at one time the superintendent of a flourishing school.

I continued in the path of reetitude uutil I had reached my twenty-ninth year, at which period I bid adieu to the bright scenes of my boyhood to sesk bstter business opportunities than those I had found at home. My anticipations were more than realized, and complete success attended all my sfforts in a business direction. Not so with respect to moral advanesmsnt. The allurements of metropolitan life opened avenues of enjoyment to which I had not been accustomed, and as thsrs were no good outside influsnces to restrain my naturally impetuous nature, I became a rsady listener to the counsels of ths nngodly, and gradnally rseeded from the straight and narrow path. From occasional indulgsnce I became an inveterate ale drinksr. This soon gavs way to a desire for a mors stimulating bevsrags, and alcoholic liquors were substituted. The appetite thns formed grsw upon ms with fearful rapidity, nntil at last I became rsckless and unconcernsd.

During a period of fifteen years I have passed through all the gradations of a drunkard's life. From the gay scenes of fashionable resorts I found my way to the dens of the lowsr class, and where, at times, I associated with drunkards of that species known as "bummsrs." I have slept in lumber yards and station houses, and, for want of a home or lodging place, have traversed the streets many nights in snccession. I have suffered hunger, exposure and other hardships bsyond the power of language to describe. I have lost business opportunities again and again. I have been deserted by the friends of my prosperous days. Finally, I became an object of contempt, and an outcast from society. All feeling of self-respect having deserted me, and fully realizing that I had not a friend to extsnd to ms a single word of kindness, I dceidsd upon the fsarful alternative of drinking myself to dsath; but God, who has spared my life for the accomplishmout of some good pnrpose, interposed his almighty power, and I arose to consciousness. I signed the pledge, and once mors found remunsrativs employmsnt. For a time the prospect was sncouraging; but appetite again asserted its sway, and I relapsed into my old habits. I was fully dstermined, howsver, not to give up the contest until I had gained the victory.

The appetite now assumed a psriodio form, so that there would be psriods of from three to six weeks in which I would entirely abstain. Evsry conceivable human agency has been applied to my case. I have bsen encouraged and assisted by msn of businsss in varions ways. Pecuniary rewards have frequently bsen offered as inducements to remain sober. Ths frisnds of the temperance canse have labored long and persistently for my dsliversnce. Christians, both in thsir individual and church capacities, havs worksd and prayed incessantly for my salvation. Medical men have exerted their skill in vainly striving to shsck the growth of the appetite, or to entirely destroy it. I have employed all kinds of substitntes to no purpose. I have tried the inebriate asylum.

The effsctual, fervent prayers of the righteous have alone prevailed, in answer to which the great Physician of souls has applied the all-powerful and never-failing remedy—his own most precious blood.

It cleanses from all sin, and will forsver wash away the foul staiu of intemperance. When I consider that in this country alone more than sixty thousand of my fellow-men go annually down to the drunkard's grave by the path I was pursuing, my heart swells with gratitnds to God for the deliverance I have found in Christ. To him be all the glory.

I sarnestly appeal to my Christian friends, sspecially those who have been savsd from the power and dominion of the perfidious destroysr, to bs up and doing. Let us follow ths perishiug ones into thsir haunts of dsbauchery and death, and lead them out by a way thsy have not yet known; guide them gently to the grscs of prayer and supplication; and by words of kindness and manly sympathy make them to fsel that thers is yet hops for them. Temperance societies do not strike deep enough to get at the root of the evil. Thsre ars many reformsd drunkards who will bear me out in the assertion that the vice must bs met and fought on an intellectnal and spiritual basis.—J. G. B., in the Christian at Work.

SALVATION FOR THE CHILDREN.

Ths evangelical church is sadly negligent of her duty to ths children. It is trus ths catechism snd the Sabbath school have accomplished much good, but thsy have, however, been considersd rather as means for mental and moral instrnction prsparatory to the hoped-for conversion in aftsr-years than as means for the leading to Christ in childhood.

It is but a few years since the common sentimsnt of the church was practically against early conversion. Youth was looked upon as a time in life whsu we wers nnable to understand the theological definitions of the depravity of our natnre and the new birth, and conseqnently could not comprehend the claims of God upon the heart. How many can call to mind hours in thsir early life when they longed to tnrn unto God—craved the assurancs of pardon through Christ—but were only enceuraged by cold indifferencs, or the long prayer of some saint who prayed the Lord to show them thsir grsat sinfulness, and bring them unto himself when they came to years of manhood or womanhood!

While this is in great measure passing away, the mass of Christian msn and women still fail to see and feel the importance of the immsdiate conversion of the children. This is, in fact, the field of promiss open before the church. It may bs well that doctrinal diffsrencs bs considsred; the talked-of conflict between science and revelation may be reconcilsd; missions may increase; schools for rsligious training may multiply; but, after all, the great question before the church is, How can our boys and girls be won to Christ?

They are now passing through that hour in life when they can bs most easily reached by rsligious influences—not so much on account of their mental weakuss as on account of their moral purity. The heart uncorrupted by sinful habits yields more readily to the call of the Spirit. But thsss children ars going into the world of toil, of temptation, of unbelief. They will soon pass the thrsshold and enter upon the active duties of life, surrounded by evil. Satan is already lying in wait for thsm. Evil companions will be on thsir track. Ths glory of the world will be spread out bsfore thsm. Prids will get upon the throne of their heart, and they will fall—soms of them never to rise—unless thsy are now led as lambs to the fold. Saved in childhood, or lost to heaven—that thought should lie upon [illegible]ers, so that there is rea[illegible] heart of every Christian.

They can be saved. Every pastor should labor more for the immediate conversion of the children. He should carry them to the Lord. Sermons should be preached to them, not only upon the necessity of early oultnre, which is the great hobby in preaching to them; bnt urging the submission of their heart to Christ. Let thsm know that their pastor believes they can become Christians, that he prays for and expects it, and many will come.

The Sabbath school superintendent and teacher mnst realize the importance of saving the children. Good morals may be taught in the schools, bnt that is not enough. The school is a failnre if it does not lead the children to Christ. Our young msn and women that are drifting into unbelief and infidelity to-day were, many of them, in the Sabbath school five ysars ago. Their good Christian teachers did not realize their responsibility. They taught thsm much, but left untaught more. Thsy failed in their psrsonal religious instruction. Oh! what a failure! Shall our boys and girls in the school to-day go out unsaved? Brother and sister teachers, under God, you are to answer. Raise the standard at once: "My class for Jesus!"—Good Seed.

ROBE AND GIRDLE.

RACE WEBSTER HINSDALE.

nands, with words of grace,
e to see his face;
ep o'er sins no more,
ook at mercy's door.

dress so vile,
niss his welcome smile;
stained and mean and worn,
lthy rags I mourn.

voice again I hear,
ay doubt and fear
e, all white and fair, his throne may wear.

No sin-stained hand its beauty wrought,
Nor by an angel was it brought.
To give me hope and make me fit
With holy saints in heaven to sit.

It is not patched from my poor deeds;
A better robe my spirit needs;
Perfect it is, and ample, quite,
To hide me from the searching light.

'tshields me well, like coat of mail;
No stroke of justice can assail
My rescued soul, for o'er my head
This robe was thrown by hands which bled.

Clothed in this righteousness divine,
Rewards of holiness are mine—
I need not beg at heaven's gate.
For there in filthy garments wait

EVENING SADNESS.

FROM THE GERMAN OF SAILS.

Among the pines the lamp of Hesper twinkles,
Gently the glow of the sunset dies away;
The aspens tremulous by silent rivers
Rustle so softly.

Heavenly faces rise from out the twilight
Into my memory; round me dimly waver
Unforgotten forms of far-off loved ones
And the departed.

Thrice blessed shadows! ah! no earthly even
Can e'er us all unite. Lonely I sorrow;
Jasper has vanished; the aspen by the river
Rustle so sadly.

Old and New.

YACINTHE AND DE PRESSENSEE.

We have permission, says the Independent, to publish the following letter from M. de Pressensee to the Pere Hyacinthe, although it was never intended for the public. A few words like these, expressed in the intimacy of friendship and in the openness of personal affection, between two such men upon such an important subject, reveals more of that superior sentiment that prevails in the company of great souls and truly catholic minds, and of that sublime fraternity that may exist among Christians who think differently upon doctrinal points, but whose lives and hopes are centered in the one great and common cause of Christ and the salvation of men, than volumes written with intention.

M. de Pressensee is the leading mind in the Protestant Church of France, and a member of the National Assembly, whose onerous duties do not prevent his ministration in the church of which he is pastor. The Ultramontane and atheistic ends in that body of French politicians are overwhelming in numbers; but as long as one man and Christian, and a Protestant minister, like Edmond de Pressensee, can be elected to the legislature in Paris, there is hope for that city and for France.

The writings of M. de Pressensee are an authority not only in the Protestant Church, but in the Greek and Catholic churches. When his celebrated "History of the Three First Centuries of the Church" first appeared in Paris, Archbishop Darboy went to his house to express his appreciation and thanks. And during the Vatican Council some of the most ultra bishops carried his works to Rome for ecclesiastical authority.

As to doctrine, he is thoroughly orthodox; in heart generous, in mind liberal, and altogether entirely catholic. As to Rome and its usurpations of these late centuries he is profoundly protestant.

A strong, intimate friendship exists between him and the Pere Hyacinthe; but he has never been of those zealous Protestants who believed that the only way for the great Catholic monk to do any good in his church was to leave it.

Upon the return of Dr. de Pressensee from his last visit to Rome, where he went to gather data from libraries and monuments for his work on the Primitive Church, Pere Hyacinthe asked:

"Well, Monsieur de Pressensee, what have you found in the Catacombs?"

"Neither your church nor mine!" said M. de Pressensee.

The following is the letter reply to:

ORMONTS DESSUS, SWITZERLAND,
October 9, 1871.

Rev. Pere Hyacinthe:

My Dear Sir and Friend: It is useless to tell you with what ardent interest I have followed the proceedings of your Congress of Munich—certainly as much as it was possible from the imperfect accounts given by our newspapers.

Before receiving your letter I was already persuaded that the manifestation of Munich was full of grandeur; that a great inspiration—a divine inspiration—had animated it; and that, without overstepping the limits that had been marked out for it by the convictions of its initiators, it had a character truly reformatory. And this is in perfect accordance with the right to preserve tradition; go back to the primitive age of an institution—to trace it to its source—that is, to its time of origin.

That which has struck and rejoiced me above all else in the movement is the act, saintly courageous, of celebrating religious rites, notwithstanding the anathemas of Rome. My anxiety and that of several others was that the German movement would present a character too scientific. Science alone, even inspired by conscience, is not a sufficient lever to move the masses. In performing these acts of Christian worship primitive Catholicism has given to its claims a religious power. Your letter has come to confirm my anticipations.

The fragments of your discourse, published in our papers, have proven to me that God was never with you more powerfully than on that great day. It has produced everywhere a profound impression, and you have had the honor of pharisaic contumely, which is now the necessary sanction of all that comes from God.

You will contribute to the lifting up before the eyes of our dear, unfortunate country that noble ideal of true Christianity which is the only means of saving it from atheism; for I will never cease to declare that the crime of Ultramontanism (than which cowardly Catholic Liberalism was never a greater prevaricator) gives to our people, whenever it is not restrained, a mortal disgust for the religions and divine idea!

May God bless you is my prayer! Follow the way before you, and you will bring to us—to us, also the children of Reform—a reforming element to warm our church. You can do this without denying the great standard of all legitimate reform; or, I should say, you can do this by claiming the full and sovereign authority of Christ.

EDMOND DE PRESSENSEE.

How Old Men Must be to Achieve Greatness.

At 42 Kant began, and at 52 he completed his great work, "Critique of Pure Reason."

Between 25 and 29 D'Alembert made his discoveries in philosophy, and was elected to the Berlin Academy.

As a lad of 16 Lord Bacon began to think independently on great matters; at 44 published his great work on "The Advancement of Learning;" at 46 published twelve of his essays, and at 60 collected the thoughts of his life in his "Organon." His old age was devoted to scientific investigations.

Bastiat, the great writer on political economy, did his work and died early.

Malthus published his great work on "Population" at 32.

Draper published his Physiology at 41, his "Intellectual Development of Europe" when he was past 50, and all his later writings are simply developments of the work of his youth and early manhood.

Buckle published the first part of his great work on "The History of Civilization," which contained all his philosophy, at 35, and if he had lived long enough to complete his gigantic task, it may well be doubted whether he would have added anything to the general principles which he thought out almost in youth.

At the early age of 29 Descartes began to map out his system of philosophy, at 41 began its publication, and at 54 he died.

Hegel, before 30, had laid out the outlines of his system of philosophy.

Leibnitz at 12 understood Latin authors very well, and had begun to lisp Greek and write verses with singular success; at 12 wrote "De Principia Individui"—a very remarkable production for a boy of 12—and at 64 his great work, "Theodoric."

Before 40 the fame of Giordano Bruno, as a philosopher, had spread over Europe.

Comte was but 32 when he began the publication of his great work, and at 44, after twelve years of labor, completed it.

At the early age of 35 Cousin was greatly famous as a philosopher.

Spinoza was suspected of heresy at 14; at 23 was excommunicated for his original thinking; at 31 published the work that gave him his fame; at 38 published his second great work, and died at 45.

Thomas Reid began writing on philosophy at 38; at 25 published his "Intellectual Powers," and at 28 "The Active Powers."

Schelling, as a boy, studied philosophy, at 24 was a brilliant and independent lecturer, and at 27 had published many important works; at 38 was professor of philosophy and arts; his best works before 50.

Whewell published his work on the "Indicative Sciences" at 46.

Boethius wrote "Consolations of Philosophy" at 55.

Abelard was in his zenith at 35, and at 25 was an independent and original thinker.

Aristotle, after long thought, began his great series at 50.

Jouffroy also did his thinking in feeble health, and died at 46.

Hobbes wrote his "Human Intellect" at 63.

[illegible] "Human Nature"

at 23, and, after seven years of labor, completed it at 30.

Diderot began the "Encyclopedia" at 38; and finished it at 56.

Beccaria published a work at 24; at 25 an "Essay on Crimes and Punishments" that made him a reputation—one of the few books that make men think.

Sir William Hamilton, after a youth of very great precocity, at 41 wrote for the Review an article on Cousin, "the most powerful, subtle and efficacious polemic ever urged against a doctrine since man began to peculate!" At 48, after long delay, he became professor, and at once wrote his lectures. He died at 68.

Hartley, from earliest youth his mental ambition was preoccupied by pursuits of science, at 25 began his great work on observations on men, and after sixteen years, at 41, completed it.

Condillac at 12 years, on account of his feeble health, could not read; at 31 published his "Origin of Human Knowledge;" at 39 his "Sensation." His later works were of less account.

Vico, the founder of the "Philosophy of History," published his great work at 57.

Dugald Stewart at 21 succeeded his father in the mathematical chair of Edinburg, and at 25 died. Between 21 and 25 he was exceedingly popular as a lecturer; at 21 he was chosen professor of moral philosophy.

Shaftsbury at 22 entered the House of Commons and exhibited great energy; at 38 published his work on "Tribute and Merit," and at 38 the "Monsrchist."

Saint Simon at 35 began his mission as a social reformer, and at 42 published his work, which was said to contain the germ of court philosophy. The work was many years on his hands. Between 50 and 55 he published other works.

Ricardo at 38 appeared as a writer on political economy, and at 42 entered Parliament, where he always spoke well on political economy. Died at 51.

Malebranche at 26 began his career of philosophy; at 36, and after ten years, produced his principal work on "Truth."

Lamennais at 26 published his "Reflexico;" at 35 published his remarkable work on "Indifference to Religion," on which he had been long engaged, and at 42 published his most important work. At 50 he sent forth his "Parde de Croyant."

Mendelssohn, at an early age, became interested in works of philosophy, and died at 52.

Jacobi, the "German Plato," wrote his best works between 40 and 50.

Towner at 50, after many years' labor, wrote his work on "Universal Unity."—George M. Beard, M. D., in the College Courant.

DEAN STANLEY'S PARROT, which was a great pet, one day managed to open her cage and get away, to the consternation of the whole family. After a great search, some one found Polly in the garden, on the top of an apple tree. The welcome news was communicated to the Dean, who, with the whole of the inmates, rushed out at once, accompanied by Dr. Vaughn, who, with some friends, was then on a visit to the Dean. Polly was found swinging herself on a topmost branch; but when she discovered the large audience below her, she looked gravely down on them, and said: "Let us pray."

HUMORS OF THE HORSE-CARS.—An intoxicated man saw two cars passing him the other evening, with red and blue lights in the front and rear. His fuddled brain comprehended colored lights, and he was heard to say to himself: "Must be pretty sick—sickly here; they are running drug stores round on wheels."

BISHOP ASBURY.—The St. Louis Christian Advocate, referring to the "Memorials of Methodism in Virginia," written by Rev. Dr. Bonnett, editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, says the author reproduces from Rev. Joseph Carson an incident that occurred at a session of the Virginia Conference, held by Bishop Asbury in Harrisonburg. It was at an early day. The Bishop's cabinet was then unknown. Bishop Asbury made his own appointments. But few of the preachers were married. The incident is thus related:

I remember a remark the old Bishop made at this Conference, which produced quite a panic in the body. He was much perplexed about his appointments. "Bro. A," said he, "must go here, and Bro. B could not go there," etc., until at length the old gentleman straightened himself up, and with an impatient gesture exclaimed: "I would not give one single preacher for half a dozen married ones." Whereupon Rev. S. G. Roszell rose and said: "I ask a location, sir;" then followed John Pitts, then another and another, till nearly every one in the condemned list had made the same request.

The Bishop looked startled, and asked what was the matter. "Why," answered one, "if that is your opinion of married preachers we will receive no more appointments at your hands." "What did I say?" asked he. His remark was repeated. "Did I say that?" said he, now fully aroused from his reverie. "Yes, Bishop," was heard from every side. "Well, my brethren, forgive me, I will say it back," answered the good Bishop. "Then, sir, we withdraw our applications," said they, and all was harmony and love again.

HOW NOT TO TREAT BOYS.—Half-grown boys are too often treated as nuisances, and are thus encouraged to become such. No provision is made for their entertainment; they are not trained to employ their overflowing activity in useful ways; they are treated as if they possessed a peculiar kind of depravity, and as incapable of adding to the happiness of others. It is too much to expect that a boy will prefer reading a dry book to a frolic with his fellows, will enjoy being lectured nightly on his particular sinfulness while his sister, or some sick, overstudious youth, is held up as a model of perfection. If one-half the praise which is bestowed on three and five-year olds, and on "young ladies just coming out," were distributed among young men, we should see a marked decline in loaferism and rowdy conduct. To notice a boy's good intention is to make performance easy. To treat him as a social outcast is to make him, sooner or later, a professional disturber of the peace. If home be made pleasant, and pains taken to guide youthful spirits into legitimate channels, there will be less fondness for that independent, roving, selfish existence which makes every boy as an Ishmaelite.—Christian at Work.

COULD NOT TRUST HIMSELF.—A native of Fribourg presented himself a few days ago at the window of the postoffice at Lausanne, and asked for an order for one hundred francs. The clerk asked:

"Who is the sender?"

"Jacques Mathien."

"What is the name of the payee?"

"Jacques Mathien, poste-restante at Estavayer."

"Is he your brother?"

"No, it is myself."

"Do you mean to say that you are sending a postoffice order to yourself at Estavayer?"

"Yes, I am going there."

"But why can't you take it yourself?"

"Ah! there it is," said the simple fellow. "You see I know myself; and if I were to take the money with me, the probability is that it would never reach Estavayer, while, by sending it through the postoffice, I shall be sure to find it on my arrival, where I shall require it."

SPURGEON delights in the story of the genuine conversion of a servant girl. When she was asked, on joining the church: "Are you converted?" "I hope so, sir." "What makes you think you are really a child of God?" "Well, sir, there is a great change in me from what there used to be." "What is that change?" "I don't know, sir, but there's a change in all things; but there is one thing, I always sweep under the mats now!"

THE following rules for the government of children, which were first presented in one of Jacob Abbott's books, are said to have been of great service to many successful teachers:

When you consent, consent cordially.

When you refuse, refuse finally.

When you punish, punish good-naturedly.

Commend often. Never scold.

WE MOUNT to heaven mostly on the ruins of our cherished schemes, finding our failures were successes. Alcott.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Lutheran Observer states that out of 666,305 members of the churches of Berlin only 99,355 commune with the churches at the Lord's table.

THE Rev. Dr. Schaff, at the request of the Bible revision committee in England, is organizing a corps of American scholars to co-operate in the work.

BEGGING for the Pope to save him from starvation has been forbidden in Switzerland, on the ground that the twentieth section of the police law forbids all begging and vagabondage.

A REVIVAL is in progress among the oystermen, saloon roughs, and others of the most reckless and dissolute class at Fairhaven, Connecticut. Over one hundred have been converted, and the good work goes on.

THE Congregational church (white and colored) at Corpus Christi, Texas, is the second one organized in that State. The new meeting house was to be dedicated on Thanksgiving day. A revival is already in progress.

THE Episcopal and Presbyterian churches in British Honduras have been disestablished. Two years of grace are to be given them in which to set their houses in order; but after January 1, 1873, they are to shift for themselves.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—It is estimated that there are 4,000,000 scholars and 400,000 teachers in the Sunday schools of the United States, and that in the Sunday schools of Great Britain there are 3,600,000 scholars and about 350,000 teachers.

NOW THAT the English universities are open to Dissenters, it is obvious that the former requirement of a baptismal certificate in proof of the age of candidates for fellowships can no longer be insisted on, and it has accordingly been abandoned.

THE first Presbyterian church of Elizabeth, New Jersey, was organized in 1664, and for two hundred and seven years has not missed a service. In the last ten years three hundred and ninety-five persons have been added to its membership.

DEAN HOWSON, of Chester, England, has received contributions from friends in the United States who take pleasure in restoring the tomb of Matthew Henry, the commentator, who was buried in Chester. His commentary will survive marble or brass.

OF ROMAN CATHOLIC bishops there are in the United States 126; of priests, 3,871; of churches, 4,250; of chapels and stations, 1,706. The membership is variously estimated at from 2,500,000 to 5,500,000. Probably the smaller number is the more nearly correct.

FATHER HYACINTHE has commenced, in the great hall of the Museum at Munich, a series of lectures on religious subjects in the French language, which are attracting large audiences. Hyacinthe and Dollinger give no signs of succumbing to the ghostly authority of the Pope.

SCHOOLS IN SYRIA.—The people of Syria are awaking to a necessity for instruction. Schools are springing up on every side—native schools, Catholic schools, Jesuit schools, and even the Moslems are erecting a fine building for this purpose. This change is believed to be largely due to the labors of American missionaries.

NEW ZEALAND METHODISM.—The Australian Wesleyan Chronicle states that the New Zealand Methodists are discussing with some earnestness the question of a separation from the Australian connection, and of forming a New Zealand Conference. This change can be readily made as soon as the ministers harmonize their views in that direction.

"IF EVER there was a religion going to decay and ruin," says a recent writer, "it is Buddhism in Japan. Its temples and shrines are being deserted. The number of its priests has decreased nearly one-third within five years. Geography and chemistry are sapping its foundations. Sintooism, a cultured and intellectual atheism, has taken its place."

THE Rev. Thomas Walker, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, Marinette, Wisconsin, writes us: "I wish, through the Methodist, to acknowledge the receipt of $48.60, given by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Austin, Texas, and forwarded by the Rev. F. C. Wilkes, pastor, for the sufferers by the recent fires, in whose behalf I tender grateful thanks."

SYRIA.—This mission, now under the direction of the Presbyterian Church, is doing a great work in building up the kingdom of Jesus Christ in that country. It makes a special appeal for an appropriation of $500 to meet the expenses of translations, and publishing a work on theology in the Arabic language. It has a theological seminary, but not a single text book in theology, and not one can be found in the Arabic language. We trust the appeal will be successful.

THE Presbyterians of Ireland are moving in earnest in opposition to the demand of the Roman Catholic prelates for separate denominational schools. The present educational system of Ireland, which was in great part the device of Archbishop Whately, provides for the union of literary and moral instruction and the separate inculcation of religious truth. This system the prelates are determined to overthrow; and it is the system which the Presbyterians are leagued to defend.

THE Southern Presbyterian Assembly has just one hundred students in its theological seminaries, viz.: 59 in Union Seminary, Virginia, and 41 in the Columbia. Of these 100 students Virginia furnishes 30; North Carolina, 16; South Carolina, 12. The Southern Presbyterian Church has, according to the latest statistics, 860 ministers, 1,518 churches, and 87,529 members. The A. R. Synod has more theological students in proportion to its members than has the Assembly.

THE women of the Presbyterian church in Salt Lake City, of which Rev. Josiah Welch is pastor, are endeavoring to build a church; and, in aid of their project, they ask five thousand women of their denomination to contribute an amount averaging $5 each as a Christmas gift toward the erection of this church. The Independent gladly seconds their request, and trusts that the many thousands of Presbyterian women who are among its readers will give it immediate attention. Money should be sent to Mr. J. C. Royle, Salt Lake City.

AT THE Conference of the National Reformed Church of France, recently held at Nismes, M. Pernessin read a paper on the separation of Church and State, in which he stated that the Reformed Church received about 1,500,000 francs a year from the State—or, as near as might be, two francs a head for each member; but that they must give up their subsidy, and be free. The Conference passed and recorded a vote adopting this sentiment. It is the only safe doctrine, and we are glad that our Protestant friends in France have come to accept it.

WE HAVE spoken before now of the translation of the New Testament into the Mandarin (Chinese) dialect, in progress for the last eight years. That work is now finished. And not the court only, but the common people of all the provinces north of the Yang-tse will now have the precious volume in that dialect which they speak and understand. Meantime, more than half of the Old Testament has also been translated into the same dialect, under auspices of the American Bible Society, by Mr. Schereschewsky, a most able and competent linguist and general scholar.

THE corner-stone of the Methodist Episcopal church in Salt Lake City was laid November 20. The Bible, hymn book, the Methodist and the official papers, the Guide to Holiness, the city papers, lists of civil officers, of trustees, official board and members of the church, and of the faculty of the Salt Lake Seminary, were deposited. The Rev. G. M. Pierce, superintendent of the missions in Utah, delivered an appropriate address on the character and mission of the church, taking the highest ground in favor of its maintaining an uncompromising position.

HERE are a few scraps of news from the Old Catholic conflict in Europe: The Swiss Council of State have suppressed all out-door religions ceremonies and processions. The people of Cologne, regarded as a pre-eminently Catholic city, have rejected the Ultramontane candidates for the town council, and returned Liberals, who will grant the Alt Catholics a church. The Archbishop of Munich, while banning parish priests in small Bavarian towns who refused to accept the decrees of the Vatican Council, has been withstood to the face by the offending parties and hooted by the people.

THE progress of the London Methodist Chapel Building Fund is satisfactory. The sum of $250,000, it will be remembered, was promised some time ago by [illegible] Francis Lycett, on the condition that an equal sum be contributed by subscribers in the provinces: this enabling the committee to [illegible] $10,000 toward each of fifty chapels to be erected in London. The sum of $190,000 has already been subscribed to meet Sir F. Lycett's liberal offer, and there can now be no doubt that the whole will be forthcoming. The building of a number of chapels is already in progress, while others are in contemplation.

IT IS now said that M. Henri Rochefort will be confined in the Island of Sainte Marguerite, on the coast of Provence, and that he is to occupy the cell in which the Man in the Iron Mask was imprisoned for several years.

DEAN SWIFT said: "It is useless to attempt to argue a man out of a thing he was never reasoned into."

PITCHING THE CROP.

Our readers are, for the most part, just entering upon the new ecclesiastical year. The preachers are settling down to their work after a brief intermission at Conference, the people are adjusting themselves to the new or old pastoral relation, and the stewards and Quarterly Conferences are making arrangements for the temporal welfare of the church. It is a season of preparation, of planning and of getting ready. The result depends much upon the manner and spirit in which the initiatory steps are taken. We ought to look for large returns, and to expect much for the cause of God. Little faith at the beginning is likely to grow less, and to inflict a general paralysis, which will cause everything to go limping and halting to the end.

This strong and buoyant faith must be in the membership—faith in God, and in the power of the gospel, rather than in the man sent to minister to them in holy things. It sometimes happens that the appointment is not such as the people have expected, and not in accordance with their judgment. Yielding to the momentary vexation and disappointment, they give way to a spirit of distrust, and begin the year by doubting whether anything can be done. Instead of making the best of a gloomy prospect, and of girding up their loins for the most arduous effort, all exertion is relaxed. Mutual discouragement and general depression are the precursors of failure. The new pastor sees the temper in which he is received, and finds himself unable to throw off or overcome the untoward influence. A right and cheerful faith would secure a year's success, where the want of it at the start may lead to the very failure that is apprehended. What becomes of our professed confidence in God, that it is not by might nor power, but by the Spirit, if we allow what we may erroneously think to be a mistake in the appointing power to affect our steadfastness? If it is God that gives the increase, why should we [illegible] Holy One by the [illegible] through which he works? Our [illegible] too much in the wisdom [illegible] too little in the power [illegible] faith in the membership [illegible] Collection [illegible] tant—a great deal more [illegible] ferent [illegible] ordinarily, than the character [illegible] preacher who is sent to [illegible] Let them look for an [illegible] this [illegible] harvest, let them believe [illegible] for it, and labor for it, [illegible] are almost certain to have [illegible] If, instead of taking exceptions [illegible] finding fault, all were to fall to [illegible] ying and working for a revival, [illegible] would have it, and what seemed [illegible] unpropitious beginning would [illegible] out most prosperous and satisfactory.

We rank the stewards very high in the work of preparation. A believing and hopeful spirit in the body of the church is important to them in carrying out the measures which they may devise, but unless they strike for high and liberal things the business affairs of the charge will sink to the lowest ebb. They must not shrink from the responsibility which the polity of the church has laid upon them. They must be just in the estimates and allowances made, not placing the cart before the horse, as the manner of some is, by bringing the preacher's salary down to what they suppose will be easily raised; but they must say what he needs, what he ought to have to make him comfortable, and then do their best to work up to it. To pay the amount allowed when that amount is inadequate is not paying the preacher. The credit due to a station or circuit for meeting the stewards' estimate depends upon the sufficiency of that estimate to support the gospel. It is the pride of some appointments that they always pay their preacher—they pay what they allow; but do they come up to the mark of a generous and adequate maintenance? The duty of stewards is plain. They are to look at only one thing in determining what their preachers shall be paid. The preacher's wants, and not the probable willingness and ability of the congregations, are to determine the amount. This is the course pointed out by the Discipline, and the only one which can be commended as just and right. If the people are too poor or too penurious to meet the requirements, let it be so. It is for the stewards to say what ought to be done, and to bring the church up to the recognition of its duty in the premises if they can.

The authority to say "How much?" is vested in the stewards alone, and this "how much" is to be their conscientious estimate of what is needed for the support of the preachers. They are not to say what the people will give, nor always even what they ought, but simply what is requisite to take care of their pastors. Here is a point that bears upon the finances of Methodism with prodigious weight, and affects our entire economy. To meet this question of how much, generously and justly, and with firmness, should be the glory of a board of stewards. How the crop will turn out they cannot tell, but they can at least pitch it right. It is for them to lay out the year's work with courage, and look forward with faith to the result. Their faith and justice will go far toward keying up the whole church; and liberal sowing will be likely to be followed by liberal reaping. The duty of assessing each individual member, and of apportioning to each society in a circuit, is a delicate and sometimes perplexing business. The obligation of every one to contribute to the support of the gospel is to be assumed. The amount given is voluntary. But a person disposed to do his part cannot always know what that part is. The stewards are in a position to know what is wanted, and how much each must pay to make up the amount. Hence they should take the responsibility of furnishing the information, and of giving their judgment as to the measure of obligation resting upon the individual members. To deliver their own souls, stewards must be candid and just in this matter, discharging their duty with firmness and moderation, and never degrading the principle of religious giving. Whatever plans of raising money, whether by the stewards alone or by the Church Conference, all should be matured at once, and their execution be immediately begun. Let the land be laid off, the fences put up, and let the plows be started at the earliest moment.

The preacher has his mind set upon a year of results. In his relations to his official assistants and advisers, and to all his people, he will study the best interests of the charge. He is going to make a crop for God, and his preparations should be for large things. A hundred souls this year, or three hundred. Very much as the planter sets his stakes for two hundred bales, and three thousand bushels of corn, so let the gospel husbandman give himself a standard, and a high one, if he would achieve anything worthy the cause he represents. Faith will bring its reward in this direction; the confident purpose and determination to do something will in themselves work wonders. If, under the pressure of discouragement, he gives way and hopes barely to live and keep the church from falling to pieces; or if, repelled and disheartened by the general indifference and want of efficient organization, he already looks upon the field with despair, the probabilities are that nothing will be accomplished. Much, very much, rests with the preacher himself. Faith, patience and courage will bring success in the midst of the most overwhelming obstacles. The preacher and his God are working together, and Christ has promised to be with his servants. The true reserve, the base of supplies, is God himself, and not the outward and social conditions around us. Not more sure is the march of the seasons, with its pompous retinue of riches and glories, than is the support and presence of Christ in the path of ministerial duty. But we must believe the gospel we preach, and honor him who has honored us with so great a calling. The preacher who has this faith in God carries with him the elements of a successful year. His quiver is full of arrows, and a divine panoply covers him. As Joshua found "the captain of the Lord's host" already on the battle-grounds of Canaan, so will it be with us, if with unquestioning faith we move forward to possess the promised land.

THE NEW VOLUME.

This begins with the year, and with encouraging prospects. Since 1851 the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has existed, and, with the exception of a brief suspension during the war, has been going out weekly to its friends and subscribers. During these twenty-one years almost a new generation has grown up. Thousands who were our readers at the beginning have passed away, and their places are filled by those who, if born, were not old enough to read when Volume 1 was issued. Many, however, are with us now, as agents and subscribers, who encouraged and sustained the enterprise at the start. The publishing agent, acting upon the suggestion and advice of his brethren, has reduced the subscription price to $2. In doing this he counts, of course, upon a large increase of circulation. We ought to have this year at least ten thousand new subscribers. The very poorest can now afford to have the paper, and every Methodist family in our patronizing Conferences should be supplied with it at once. It is of vast importance that a church organ should be sustained at this great center of the Southwest. The interest of Protestantism, as well as the prosperity of our own denomination, demands it. The ADVOCATE is an auxiliary in all the work and institutions of the church, and those who extend its circulation are conferring a permanent benefit upon society. The preachers will receive a hundred-fold for their efforts in its behalf, in having more intelligent hearers and in obtaining a more adequate support. The ADVOCATE will be to them a valuable assistant in the pastorate and the pulpit, and will help them in all their attempts to improve the spiritual and temporal interests of their charges. Our educational institutions will find the columns of the ADVOCATE their best medium of communication with the public, and this most vital interest of the church will be materially advanced by introducing the paper into every family. We have many valuable testimonies from the preachers, showing the benefits of a large subscription list in their fields of labor. Where there is a good circulation we notice that the spiritual condition is prosperous, and that all the reports are most satisfactory. Let us get our people to taking and reading the paper, and they will become more liberal, better informed, and more thoroughly in sympathy with the great religious movements and enterprises of the church. To put our paper upon a satisfactory footing, and to enlarge and improve it as we know the agent desires, we must work for it heartily. Other papers have their recognized fields and patrons, and we have ours. Let us put our own paper well on its legs first, and recommend it to our people not as one among many, but as the paper for them. Comparatively few will take more than one religious journal, and that is likely to be the one which the pastor indicates. By a united and persistent effort on the part of our agents and subscribers the ADVOCATE may be made, this year, all that its friends can desire. The publishing agent ventures upon the reduction, believing that he will be sustained, and that a wider usefulness will be secured. We are in a condition to know the labor and toil which he expends, without other remuneration than the consciousness of serving his church and generation; and we bespeak for him the co-operation of his brethren. Let us have the ten thousand subscribers, and let us have them early in the year.

FELICITY STREET.

This charge has been blessed with much prosperity during the year. We spent last Sabbath there, and were gratified at the statements which were read at the morning service. A large and handsome organ will be in place shortly, and we observe that the basement has received some alterations greatly to the benefit of the Sunday school. The pastor furnishes us with the following statement. We would add that the watch-night services were well attended and profitable, and that seven persons presented themselves as applicants for membership:

MR. EDITOR: At your request I furnish my report of the Felicity street charge, as read in your hearing at our last church conference.

The watch-night services were attended by a crowded house, and were of an interesting and impressive character.

GOOD NEWS FROM MERIDIAN.

Rev. John A. Ellis, writing from Meridian, Mississippi, speaks of a reviving influence in his charge. We found on our visit there that Bro. Ellis was much endeared to his people, and that all wanted him back. We trust that this may be but the beginning of the harvest. Bro. Ellis says: "An accession of twenty to the membership of the church here is part of the good fruit of the Conference session in our city. We hope to gather yet more fruit in the name of the Lord."

FROM ROME.

A Catholic, writing to the Independent from Rome, November 25, says:

In the matter of representatives to Rome there will likely come confusion, and perhaps conflict, as the Pope absolutely refuses to receive any embassador who is accredited to the court of Victor Emanuel; and between two representatives from the same country—one to the Vatican, who must, of course, be papal in his sentiments; and the other to Italy, who must necessarily be liberal—there cannot but be antagonisms. All would be easily arranged if a purely ecclesiastical representative were sent to the Pope; which would be most reasonable, as his court is now purely ecclesiastical. With time, no doubt, an amicable arrangement will be made. Besides the spirit of toleration expressed by the Pope, there are other indications of reconciliation between the Italian government and the church. The Pope has consented to the consecration of a church near the Quirinal Palace, that belongs to the King; so the royal family will no longer be deprived of their own chapel. It will be remembered that the right to celebrate divine worship in the royal chapel of the Quirinal was taken away by the Pope when the prince and princess came to live there last year. But this did not deter them from going to other churches in the neighborhood, just like common folks. The Princess Margaret is as devout as she is fair. The prince is very liberal in his religious opinions. King Victor is a soldier-like Catholic. The fatigues and hardships of the battle are nothing; victory is all. Let life be difficult as it may, he believes one must die Christian, receiving the sacraments of the church. He has firm religious convictions, and, therefore, little respect for his excommunication or for the dogma of infallibility. Another significant occurrence is that one of the new bishops named by the Pope, upon taking possession of his diocese, actually prayed in his pulpit for Italy and for the royal family. Another consistory was held this week, where more bishops were named—making in all nearly a hundred—many of whom, I heard a bishop say to-day, were "ignorant, stupid and idiotic in their fanaticism." I give his exact words.

Now that the relations between Italy and France are pacific, and the hope of war deferred with the papal party, they have seized upon the ministerial crisis in Austria to stir up the hopes of the faithful. With the resignation of the Protestant Chancellor Beust, they saw an immediate papal reaction; and prayers were offered up for his successor, M. Andrassy, the very man who forbade the publication of the dogma of infallibility in Austria and Hungary, and a man who is noted for his liberal and anti-papal principles. As a surer method, however, of stirring up strife and provoking the sympathy of the world, the Jesuits are doing all in their power to induce the Pope to leave Rome. France offers the best inducements. The head of the church—old, poor, persecuted and driven into exile—would create a sympathy that the quiet, wise and well-behaved Bishop of Rome in the Vatican could not possibly do. They may succeed; but we are inclined to think the Pope's good sense will prevail, and he will not go. Why carry the war into Thessaly? It is not necessary that Cæsar and Pompey decide, by a final battle on foreign ground, that Rome is divided against itself; that the republic—Roman Catholicity—is only a name to cover up rottenness, slavery, debauch and despotism; and that Rome must fall! It were just as well to remain in the doomed city, and continue the offerings to idols and to the gods.

Victor Emanuel has come. And he comes like a king and like a man—like a wise king and like a sensible man—without hesitation and without eclat. Victory and triumph are passed; and he comes now to open the Parliament, and to take up his permanent residence in Rome, as the rightful possessor of the rightful capital of Italy.

And another king is come—the king of the council—Strossmayer. His presence is only known to the few.

But what has brought this Croat here? Wait. At this very hour—five o'clock on this afternoon of November 25, 1871—he stands before Pius the Ninth. Never was the satanic spirit of Jesuitry more alert than in the Vatican at this moment! God in heaven, hear our prayers!

LOOK upon every day as the whole of life, not merely as a section; and enjoy the present, without wishing, through haste, to spring on to another section now lying before you. Jean Paul Richter.

OSMAN C. BAKER, D. D., one of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died at his residence, in Concord, New Hampshire, December 20, aged sixty years.

The Revival Among the Quakers.

We have already noticed, says the Methodist, the extraordinary services for some time held in the Friends' Meeting House, on the corner of Lafayette and Washington avenues, Brooklyn. They are conducted by some of the most effective speakers of the society in this country. Of these not a few are women—women having always been recognized among the Quakers as eligible to the office and work of the ministry. Mrs. Lucas, a sister of John Bright, Mrs. Esther Frame and Miss Sarah F. Smiley have addressed the congregations with a power which has melted all present to tears. The discourses are closely scriptural—indeed, are distinguished by their faithful adherence to Scripture teachings. The doctrines of present pardon, of the assurance of acceptance, and joy in believing, are urged with a distinctness which shows that they are all thoroughly understood. An occasional outbreak of song from fervent Methodists present is tolerated; and now and then a few Friends so far forget the straitness of their society's discipline as to join in. The hymns of the churches are quoted, however, by the Quakers with great fervor.

PERIODICALS.

THE PRESBYTERIAN MEMORIAL OFFERING, 1870-71. New York: De Witt C. Leut & Co.

This is a pamphlet of over 100 pages, containing the report of the special committee on the memorial fund, presented to the General Assembly at Chicago last spring. It appears that nearly ten millions were contributed to this fund, embracing home and general objects. Ten millions in one year, by one church, is something to think of!

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL MAGAZINE for January is out in good time, and an excellent number. This is No. 1 of Vol. 2. During the past year it has reached a circulation of more than twelve thousand. This is well, but it must be doubled this year. It deserves a circulation of at least twenty-five thousand, and our church ought to require fifty thousand to fully supply her schools and families. Let teachers, superintendents and preachers all work for it.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY for January has in its table of contents: Lady Wentworth; Septimus Felton, or the Elixir of Life; College Days of Thomas Jefferson; The Heart of New England; Myths of the Barbaric World; The Poet at the Breakfast Table, and other articles. The Atlantic has a most able and brilliant corps of contributors.

THE NATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER, published at Chicago, comes out of the great fire looking, if anything, better than ever. We are glad that this excellent periodical is once more going out on its mission of good. The number for November and December has reached us.

VICK'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE AND FLORAL GUIDE for 1872 is a beautiful pamphlet of 120 pages, splendidly illustrated. It is a publication of great value and convenience, especially to gardeners and all who have the disposition and means to cultivate flowers and shrubbery.

THE MUSICAL BULLETIN for December has its usual good supply of editorial and selected matter, and three popular songs with the music. "Nearer my God to thee," as set to the music, is worth the price of the publication. Published by Charles W. Harris, New York.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for December 16 has: A Century of Great Poets; Dravidian Folk-Songs; Marine Flora; An Open Polar Sea, besides poetry, short articles and other selections from the best sources of current literature.

THE HOUSEHOLD, besides its usual rich store of articles for the domestic circle, and the house in all departments, gives us in the December number that fine Christmas anthem, "Glory to God in the highest," with the music.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL, HEARTH AND HOME and EVERY SATURDAY are unrivaled for their great artistic merits as illustrated periodicals, and are at the same time of great value as literary journals.

THE PRACTICAL PLANTER is one of our best agricultural exchanges. Published by Gift & Anderson, Memphis, Tennessee. The December number is on our table.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST for December is profusely illustrated, as usual, and contains all that is latest and best in the agricultural literature of the day.

EVERY SATURDAY says: One of the witticisms of Baltimore is that the Episcopal General Convention declares that the word "rogouerate" is used in the baptismal service of the church in a Pickwickian sense.

WE SHOULD ACT with as much energy as if we expected everything from ourselves; and we should pray with as much earnestness as if we expected everything from God.—Fuller.

Minutes of the Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Please say to the members of the Mississippi Conference that I have this day forwarded the manuscript minutes of our late session to Rev. R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans, for publication. Let those who have subscribed for them send their addresses to Bro. Harp, and if others wish to get some copies they can still forward their names and money.

The funds were turned over to Bro. Harp at Conference, and he will publish and distribute.

RELIGIOUS PAPERS.—A cotemporary says:

A young minister was once called to a young and plastic church. One of the first questions which he asked was: "Do your people take good religious papers?" The elders scarcely knew. He was unwilling to accept their call unless they would see that the congregation was supplied with that sort of literature. They liked his proposal. The people began to read more upon church and Christian affairs, and he began to arouse them to earnest working and generous giving. The contributions increased wonderfully, for the people were learning the real wants of the church. The preaching was blest. Press and pulpit lent a force to each other. Pastor and editor were mutual helpers in the same good work. And here is the real design of an earnest, thoroughly Christian paper. It is not to draw dividends upon the large investment, not to wage controversy, not to deal out the mere news of the day, not to publish brilliant essays; its leading design is to do what pastors should be doing if they knew everything and could be talking and teaching every week in every house. It is his assistant and vicar in the parish. It supplements his work. It goes when and where he cannot go.

JEWS have long been settled in the solitary Island of St. Helena, off the African coast. An account of the island was written some thirty or forty years ago by a Jewish settler, who was probably resident when Napoleon was a prisoner. For some time a Jewish gentleman has held the position of consul there.

KING VICTOR EMANUEL has had two characteristic changes introduced at the palace of the Quiriual, in Renie, where he resides: he has filled the court-yard with dogs, and had the books of the library removed to the university.

Married.

In Nashville, Tennessee, on the twenty-seventh of December, at the residence of A. H. Redford, by the Rev. A. H. Redford, D. D., Ex-Governor ROBERT C. WICKLIFFE, of Louisiana, to Mrs. ANNIE D. ANDERSON, daughter of the late Elias F. Davis, of Kentucky.

By Rev. John Wilkinson, on the nineteenth of December, 1871, at the residence of the bride's father, near Mansfield, Louisiana, Mr. ALLEN P. PAGE, of Shreveport, Louisiana, to Miss MARY F. PEGUES, of Mansfield, Louisiana.

By Rev. Asbury Williams, on the eighth of December, 1871, at Greenwood, Louisiana, Mr. W. W. CATES, of Caddo parish, Louisiana, to Miss GUSSIE RIGGINS, of Greenwood, Louisiana.

In Mobile, Alabama, on the eighteenth of December, 1871, by Rev. S. H. Cox, Mr. A. W. COCKERELL, Esq., of Livingston, Alabama, to Miss EVA NASH, of Mobile, Alabama.

December 7, 1871, by Rev. J. D. Willis, at the residence of the bride's father, in St. Helena parish, Louisiana, Mr. H. BASCOM NEWSOM to Miss SARAH J. ALLEN.

December 5, 1871, by the Rev. George T. Vickers, Rev. HIRAM R. SINGLETON to Miss ISAB[illegible] MELIA SMITH, third daughter of J. Edis[illegible], Esq., of Covington, Louisiana.

Obituary.

FREDONIA A. MASSEY.

MR. EDITOR: The inclosed obituary notice of Mrs. Massey was written by her husband, and handed to me as the basis of an article I was requested to furnish for publication; but I find it so full, so perfect in its kind, and so much better than I could write myself, if I were to try, that I have concluded to send it for publication just as it is.

Yours truly, A. H. MITCHELL.

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., Dec. 1st, 1871.

"FREDONIA A. MASSEY, daughter of Walter Taylor, of Jackson, Alabama, was born March 30, 1812, and died in Summerfield, Alabama, November 21, 1871. From childhood she was a great lover of truth, and never could bear a want of it in others. During her girlhood she was remarkable for her intelligence and devotion to study. Her education in school was completed in the Tuskaloosa Female College in the year 1862. But she did not cease to cultivate her mind after leaving school. She was an extensive and thoughtful reader.

"She was married in September, 1866, and came to Summerfield, where she lived till the day of her death. Her health had not been good for ten years. For three years past she was greatly afflicted with asthma, under which her constitution gradually gave way. Notwithstanding her feeble health and almost constant sufferiog, she was much interested in her domestic affairs, laboring to beautify her home and make it attractive. She was also intent on cultivating her mind and heart, being much more entertained by books of solid merit, and especially by theological and religious books, than by any others. She was always fond of music. But she had, in her last years, grown remarkably fond of sacred music; and, when alone, she was almost always singing the songs of Zion. When she was too feeble to sing, she would play the tunes on the organ. She felt a deep interest in the services of the sanctuary. During the last few months of her life, in the midst of feebleness and suffering, she insisted on calling the young people of the village together once a week to train them in songs to be used in the church.

"The most prominent trait in her character was truthfulness. In the five years of our married life I never knew her to dissemble nor deviate from the truth in the least. Though somewhat reserved in giving expression to her highest and best feelings, she was an affectionate wife and mother. In both these relations she tried to do her duty faithfully. The same delicacy in expressing her most sacred feelings was manifest in her religious life. She was sincere and honest in her religion; but she seemed always afraid to make any very high pretensions to piety.

"She was naturally impatient and self-willed—the material out of which it is difficult to make an humble Christian. But she was made perfect through suffering. In her last illness she became patient and uncomplaining, praying that she might be submissive to God's will. And in recommending religion to others she almost invariably wound up by saying: 'To be religious is to be like Christ—to be meek and lowly in heart.' This she repeated on several occasions to the servants who attended her.

"Some hours before her death she was free from pain, and her mind clear and vigorous as I had ever seen it. Her conceptions of life and duty seemed to be illuminated by a light shining from the other world. She desired us to talk to her of Jesus and God, to read to her the words of Jesus, and to sing to her of heaven. I took the Testament and read the fourteenth chapter of the Gospel of John. She asked for portions of it to be repeated. She asked those present to sing. 'Jesus, lover of my soul.' She then said: 'Sing, Jesus can make a dying bed.' She then asked them to sing. 'I would not live alway,' and when no one could raise the tune immediately, she raised it herself, in a clear, sweet voice, and sang one stanza. After this she talked with great freedom; so much so that Bro. McVoy, who was present, expressed himself as astonished at the clearness of her reasoning and the chasteness of her language. But the burden of her conversation was Christ, the friend of sinners. She wanted it distinctly understood that she was saved, not on her own account, but through the merits of Christ. In speaking of her children she said: 'I want my children made Christians—not in name, but genuine Christians. I do not care what else they become, so they are made Christians. I want them to become Christians, if they have to be perfected through suffering and storms of persecution.'

"She addressed all present, and thanked them for their kindness to her, and exhorted them to meet her in heaven. After she had given minute directions about everything, she bade each one present an affectionate 'good-by,' as cheerfully as if she had been going off on a journey to return soon. She then folded her hands over her breast and said: 'Lord Jesus, receive my spirit.' Her whole attention now seemed turned toward heaven. When she had stepped far down the chill waters of death, and was not able to speak distinctly, Dr. Mitchell asked her if all was well, and she answered cheerfully that it was. She breathed her last at precisely twelve o'clock on Tuesday, November 21.

"Her funeral was preached the next day by Dr. Mitchell, in Summerfield.

"Her remains were buried in Jackson, her native village, on Sunday, November 26."

WILLIAM OTIS is a man whom to know is to respect. You cannot purchase lumber or sawing work done in his line from a man more honorable in his dealings. See his advertisement.

JOHN K. RANDALL, No. 5 WATER STREET, MOBILE, ALABAMA. Several years of constant business intercourse with Mr. Randall has convinced us that there is no more worthy, liberal, prompt and obliging gentleman in the trade. See advertisement.

A. J. LESLIE.—We refer our friends and the public generally to the fine stock of jewelry and plated ware at 32 Dauphin street, Mobile, Alabama.

PRESTON & STETSON.—Our country friends will find it to their advantage to deal with the above house, located at the northwest corner of St. Francis and North Water streets, Mobile, Alabama.

JOHN DOUGLAS.—This old establishment has just received a fine stock of fancy and staple dry goods, to which he invites the attention of the readers of this paper. Call and see him at Nos. 102 and 104 Dauphin street, Mobile, Alabama.

IRA W. PORTER & Co.—The above gentlemen are well known in Mobile, having been connected with the hardware business for many years. They are honorable, public spirited, and well deserving of the public patronage. Their Stock is of the very best. Give them a call at Odd Fellows' Hall, Royal street, Mobile, Alabama.

THE GREAT SOUTHERN PIANO MANUFACTORY.—We refer with special pleasure to the advertisement of the Great Southern Piano Manufactory of Messrs. William Knabe & Co., of Baltimore.

This factory is now one of the largest in the world; it is a magnificent five-story structure, fronting an entire block on Eutaw street, and covering, together with the lumber yards attached, some two and one-half acres of ground. Three hundred and fifty men are constantly employed, turning out over forty instruments per week.

Among the thousand and one pianos offered to the public, we scarcely know any instrument so fully uniting all the desirable qualities sought for as the Knabe piano. It is a matter of some difficulty and perplexity to inexperienced persons to select a good instrument of any capacity. We too often rely upon the judgment of friends in the selection of a piano, and are thus frequently disappointed. The only sure way, in our opinion, is to go to the best maker. For this reason we recommend to our readers to purchase pianos of William Knabe & Co.'s manufacture. This will relieve them of the vexatious necessity of wasting time in a long search. The reputation of the Knabe pianos is an infallible guarantee of excellence. For durability we would specially recommend them, as being made in a Southern city, with special view to the trying changes of a Southern climate.

THE FLIGHT OF THE BIRDS.

BY EDMUND C. STEDMAN.

Whither away, fly you,
Whither away?
Is it that winter is coming?
The seeds are all gone from the mountain and plain,
Where the wild-flowers late were blooming;
The sun and the showers have ripened the grain,
The harvest is housed and humming;
Whither away?

Whither away, Pied-bird,
Whither away?
The blast is cold, yet in the upper sky
Thou scarce find the color of dye within
The tone of May.
Warbler, why speed thy southern flight?
Ah! why,
Thou tree, whose song first told us of the Spring,
Whither away?

Whither away, Swallow,
Whither away?
Canst thou no longer tarry in the North—
Here, where our roofs so well hath screened thy nest?
No one short day?
Wilt thou—as if thou human wert—go forth
And wander far from them who love thee best?
Whither away?

Scribner's Monthly.

THE LITTLE WHITE LIE.

I was in trouble beyond any doubt—
I was in trouble—and how to get out?
"Tell a white lie," said the devil to me.
"Tell a lie! Oh! how dreadful! But what —would it be
If I should?—though I never shall tell one," said I;
"Don't be frightened," said he, "we won't
call it a lie—
A few words, in their way quite as good as the truth,
And for this occasion far better, forsooth."

But my little white lie, when I'd told it, grew black;
Then, oh! how could I hide it or how get it back?
For it never would do to be caught in a lie,
For 'twas known that a very good youngster was I.
I must manage in some way to keep it from sight;
"Tell one more," said the devil; "'twill make it all right."

But my two grew to three, and my three were soon four,
And my four gave rise to a dozen or more;
Till I felt in my soul such a sense of disgrace,
I had scarcely one friend I could look in the face;
And at night to my room I went creeping up stairs—
God is truth! could I sleep without saying my prayers?

But my fears and my conscience thus followed about,
I was really half glad when the lie was found out;
For it was—it is always the way with a lie—
And all said that a very bad youngster was I.
Good or bad, I have learned in one thing to be wise,
And shun in the future all little white lies.

DIALOGUE ON SABBATH-BREAKING.

For Two Boys.

BY MRS. L. S. SADLER.

William—Good morning, Edgar.

Edgar—How are you, Billy? You are the very one I've been looking for. Where are you bound with all those books?

W.—I am going to Sunday school.

E.—To Sunday school! Nonsense; come and go with us.

W.—Where are you going?

E.—O I and Charles and Fred. are going out sailing across the rigolets, and to the lighthouse. We will have a jolly time, too. Come along and go with us.

W.—No, Edgar, that would be breaking the fourth commandment. I cannot go with you.

E.—The fourth commandment! I did not know you were such a ninny; that will do for six-year-olds to talk about.

W.—And it will do for me to talk about, too.

E.—You don't pretend to say that it is wicked to go sailing on Sunday, do you? You are getting too old for that.

W.—I hope that I will never be too old to keep God's commandments; and the fourth is: Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy.

E.—And you are such a precious saint that I suppose you will keep the fifth too.

W.—I am not a saint, but I will try to keep all the commandments, with God's help.

E.—Well, I don't intend to be tied to my mamma's apron strings; nor will I go to father every time I want to have a little fun.

W.—I am sorry to hear you talk so, for the fifth commandment is the first commandment with a promise. "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

E.—I'd like to know what a fellow would his days to be long for if he never do anything but sing psalms and ugly tunes and hear long sermons.

W.—Appointing that is not all we have to do. Besides what else do these long-faced fast-meeting folks do?

E.—Gives they all attend to their own business and find work to do for Christ

W.—Who's next! You must be the annointed prophet!

E.—Told that I were worthy to be admitted, I would then "spend and be spent" for Jesus."

W.—Colleague! Billy, when did you get religion anyhow?

E.—Religion? I'm not turned parson. I am trying to do right.

W.—But how are you to find out this right—reading the Bible and obeying its precepts.

E.—But how do you know the Bible is true?

W.—Because it was written by divine inspiration, and there is no other book like it. It is God's holy book.

E.—How do you know there is a God?

W.—Our very existence proves that. What but a God could have made man and the world?

E.—O man might have come by chance; and the world too, for all that.

W.—But let me tell you, Edgar, truly, there is no such thing as chance. Everything that is made has a design in it, and is made for some purpose.

E.—But some say Nature is God.

W.—Who made Nature, then? Look at the little flower; see all its beautiful leaves, how delicately they are formed and what bright colors! Do you think it could have come by chance?

E.—Well, I don't know; but grant you are right, what did God make man for?

W.—For his own glory.

E.—Can we glorify God by putting on a sanctimonious face and going to church?

W.—No, indeed; Christians can be cheerful and happy, as well as others.

E.—To me they look like they thought it a sin to laugh.

W.—There may be a few that think so.

E.—The fewer the better, too. I'll tell you what, Billy, I could not live without a little fun now and then.

W.—Innocent amusements are not inconsistent with the character of a Christian.

E.—Tut! you need not tell me that.

W.—But I will tell you so, and it is true.

E.—There, I have got you now. If you can have fun like other folks, why won't you go sailing with us to-day?

W.—Because it would be breaking the Sabbath, as I told you before.

E.—No, it would be only an innocent amusement. Ha! ha!

W.—Edgar, you are determined to ridicule all that I say.

E.—Who wouldn't laugh. Here you say a little fun is no harm, and when I ask you to go sailing with me you shake your solemn pate and say: O no! no!

W.—But you ask me to do something that I think is wrong.

E.—And I don't think it's wrong.

W.—There we differ widely.

E.—That we do; and more, I believe you are a coward. You think you would be drowned if you went.

W.—I am not a coward, but I would be afraid to commit so great a sin.

E.—O fudge; that's such a nonsensical idea. I thought you had better sense.

W.—Do you think, Edgar, that you can make me do what I know would be wrong?

E.—Do you think you can make a saint of me by preaching up your Sunday ideas?

W.—I was not trying to do any such thing.

E.—What then?

W.—I was only trying to prove to you that there is a God, and the difference between right and wrong, for only "the fool hath said in his heart, There is no God."

E.—Do you mean to call me a fool?

W.—O no! I was only quoting the psalmist's words.

E.—You must know the Bible by heart.

W.—Not all; wish I did.

E.—Well, I don't, for I can't understand what I do read.

W.—You must ask God, like Solomon, to give you an "understanding heart."

E.—Look here, Billy, if you just had a pair of saddlebags across your arm you would be a Methodist preacher out and out.

W.—You may laugh at me, but you will not succeed in making me angry.

E.—Tut! tut! Billy, give up all this nonsense and go with me. It is getting late, and the boys will be waiting for me.

W.—Once for all, I will not go with you.

E.—Well, old saint, you may go your way and I'll go mine. (Starts off.)

W.—Stop, Edgar; there are two ways—"the straight and narrow path to life eternal, and the broad way that leads to death." Which way are you going? E. (stopping)—Which way are you going?

W.—I am trying to walk in the narrow path that leads to heaven.

E.—And I am going the broad road that leads to perdition! What shall I do?

W.—Come with me to Sunday school, and you may there learn something to do you good.

E.—But the boys will all make fun of me, and try to entice me away.

W.—Solomon, the wisest that ever lived, said in that good book (holding out the Bible:) "My son, when sinners entice thee consent thou not."

E.—And I have been making fun of you all the time, and you did not get angry. Will you forgive me, Billy?

W.—With all my heart, Edgar.—(Shake hands.)

E.—If I had a Bible I would go with you to Sunday school. I know my mother would be so glad.

W.—And I would be glad too. Here is mine, if you will accept it. I have another.

E.—Thank you! thank you!

W.—There, I hear the bell now; let us go.

ONLY A LITTLE BROOK.—The following incident is told concerning the death of a little girl, aged nine years: A little while before she died, as the sorrowing friends stood around her, watching the last movings of the gentle breath, the last faint fluttering of the little pulse, they became aware, from broken words, that she shrank with natural dread from the unknown way which was opening before her. She had come to the border of the mysterious river which separates us from the dim hereafter, and her timid feet seemed to hesitate, and fear to stem the flood. But after a time her fears subsided, she grew calm, and ceased to talk about the long dark way, till at last she brightened suddenly, a smile of confidence and courage lighted up her sweet face. "Oh, it is only a little brook!" she cried, and so passed over to the heavenly shore.—American Baptist.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER was trying to make his class understand the dependence of the branches on the vine. "Jesus is the vine; we are the branches. We derive all our life and happiness from him." "Yes," said a little fellow, "Jesus is the vine; grown-up people are the branches; and we are the buds."

BRETHREN, we are all sailing home; and by and by, when we are not thinking of it, some shadowy thing, (men call it death,) at midnight, will pass by, and will call us by name, and will say: "I have a message for you from home; God wants you; heaven waits for you." It is but a handbreadth.—Beecher.

The Farm and Garden.

WORK FOR THE SEASON.

Where the work of cotton-picking will allow, when the weather will permit, this is a good month to plow and prepare our lands for spring planting, and give them the benefit of the winter frosts. Now also is the time to ditch bottoms and "wet spots," clean out old ditches, repair and build fences, and make, wherever needed, that one "stitch in time" which the proverb truly says "saves nine." When the spring opens and the work of planting presses, the man who has turned over his land in December, cleaned his ditches, fixed his fences and drained his low lands, will have an immense start over the man who passes the month in inaction or frolicking. We have generally found that the former has much less practical experience of lien-receipts than the latter.

The plows, sweeps, etc., which were left in the "corner of the fence;" the harness and plow gear which were thrown under the crib; the wagons which are "in the lane," the spades, hoes, rakes, shovels, axes, mattocks, etc., which are scattered all over the place, may now be advantageously collected, an inventory made of them, repairs made where needed, and stored away in a convenient place for ready use when they are wanted in the spring.

Adequate provision should be made at once, if not already made, to provide the stock with good, comfortable shelter during the winter. We do not mean by this sheds open on three sides, without feeding troughs, and with leaky roofs, but stables where, in the bleak nights of winter, the animals will be protected, and not expend all their food in the effort to keep warm.

There is nothing in which time and labor can be more profitably employed than in the making and collecting manure. We are satisfied that if, as we suggested a year ago, every planter who works over ten hands would detail one hand a team of good "poort" oxen and a wagon to the exclusive work of gathering the materials, building and mixing a manure pile, he would find it to be the most profitable labor performed upon his plantation. The hand and team would cost less than he now pays for three or four tons of somebody's superammoniated superphosphate, (dried clay or sand made stench-producing by a slight admixture of decomposed fish from Cape Cod,) costing "$65 per ton cash, or $75 per ton payable on the first of November, with factors' acceptance," secured by a lien-receipt giving the said factor the right to sell the "old woman's" bed and the baby's crib, unless the amount, with bank rates, and two and a half per cent. interest for advances, be promptly paid on the first of November, and all to pay for some fraudulent compound, fifty tons of which are not worth one ton of manure made at home, of muck, droppings from the stables and hog-pens, urine, soapsuds, offal, etc., which the aforesaid hand and oxen could pile up during a single winter.—Southern Farm and Home.

SELLING BY WEIGHT.

A reform which we hope to see accomplished, and which, in justice to the producer, retailer and consumer, should be urged until obtained, is the selling by weight of vegetables, fruits, eggs and nearly every edible article now sold by measure. There ought not to be any abandonment of the efforts until this result is accomplished. It is the only just way of buying and selling. The boxes in which fruits are sent are of all sizes and shapes. They are filled in all ways. Cases of the same number of boxes from different producers will differ from three to six pounds in weight of fruit, though the quality may be the same. The family who buys from one consignment gets more for the money paid than those who buy from another; the producer who is most honest gets least. A premium is thus paid for deception, to call it by no worse name; and the worst of it is, the consumer, in nine cases out of ten, does not know that he has been cheated.

Apples and pear barrels are as varied in size as clover leaves. A man who buys a barrel of apples does not know whether he is getting two or three bushels. Few people stop to think about it. There is no law fixing the standard of a barrel of apples or other fruit that we know of. If a producer is honest enough to send his apples in barrels containing two and a half to three bushels, there are plenty of dealers dishonest enough to transfer them to barrels that contain but two bushels; and a barrel of apples is a barrel of apples, no matter what size. Either there should be a barrel standard fixed, or the fruit should be sold by weight.—American Grocer.

DRAINAGE.

We make the following extracts from an able article written, some time since, for the Georgia State Agricultural Society, by an eminent civil engineer, Mr. T. Whelpley, of Michigan, who has much experience in land-draining:

* * * Drainage is subject to natural law. The weight of water is powerless to move itself, unless you provide a vacancy for it to move into.

A water-level is not straight, but sufficiently curved to form a complete circle in going about twenty-four thousand miles; therefore, when we speak of a level in drainage, we mean that every part of it is equi-distant from the center of the earth, or the center of gravity.

Fill a sluice with water, the bottom of which is level—vacate the ends, and the water will all run out equally at both ends, except a fraction of no practical account held by attraction of cohesion.

This idea especially applies in the drainage of extensive level swamps, marshes and salt meadows. Your main trunks and laterals may be perfectly level; but leave sure and adequate vacancy at the mouth of the mains, by descent of surface or pump it, and your drainage is complete.

Scientific.

THERE is a needle factory at New Haven, where the whole process of changing a coil of wire into needles is performed by a single machine, which turns out thirty to forty thousand needles per day, while another machine arranges the heads and points together; and a third piece of mechanism puts them into paper.

EUROPE has 450,000 miles of telegraph wire, and 13,000 stations; America, 180,000 miles of wire, and 6,000 stations; India, 14,000 miles, and 200 stations; Australia, 100,000 miles, and 270 stations; and the extension throughout the world is at the rate of 100,000 miles of wire per annum; besides 30,000 miles of submarine cable now in successful operation.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Stationer announces a new fibrous plant for paper-making purposes, the Cineraria maritima, or sea rag-wort. Several very satisfactory results have been received from various paper-makers as to its great utility for trade purposes, and there is every reason to believe, if proper attention is paid to its cultivation, it will in time become a staple article of commerce among manufacturers. The seed, at present, is imported from France and the south of Europo, but preparations are being made for growing it on a large scale in this country.

A NEW "T" rail has just been patented, which promises to obviate the rattle of railroad travel. The rail is in two sections, the upper section lapping over the lower, and they are fastened together by horizontal bolts. Between the sections is India rubber packing, five-eighths of an inch in thickness. The upper sections may be made either of iron or steel, and when worn out can be relaid without disturbing the under section. It is thought that this India rubber packing will give the car an almost noiseless motion, and that an immense saving of rolling stock will be effected.

DISCOVERY OF COFFEE.—Toward the middle of the fifteenth century a poor Arab was traveling through Abyssinia, and finding himself weak and weary from fatigue, he stopped near a grove. He being in want of fuel to cook his rice, he cut down a tree which happened to be covered with dried berries. His meal being cooked and eaten, the traveler discovered that the half-burned berries were fragrant. He collected a number of these, and, on crushing them with a stone, he found that their aroma increased to a great extent. While wondering at this, he accidentally let fall the substance into a can which contained his scanty supply of water. Lo, what a miracle! The almost putrid liquid was instantly purified. He brought it to his lips; it was fresh, agreeable, and in a moment after the traveler had so far recovered his strength and energy as to be able to resume his journey. The lucky Arab gathered as many berries as he could, and having arrived at Aden, in Arabia, he informed the Mufti of his discovery. That worthy divine was an inveterate opium smoker, who had been suffering for years from the influence of the poisonous drug. He tried an infusion of the roasted berries, and was so delighted at the recovery of his former vigor, that in gratitude to the tree he called it cahuah, which in Arabic signifies force. And that is the manner in which coffee was discovered.

AN INSTRUCTOR in one of the government schools in Japan writes us: "During my summer vacation I made a visit to Hakusan, the second highest mountain in Japan, and determined its height—9,230 feet. It is one of the sacred mountains of Japan; is an extinct volcano, with a small lake of water in its crater, which is frozen over ten months in the year. Large masses of snow lie on the mountain all the year round, and its top is covered with snow ten months in the year. It is visible far out at sea. A small Buddhist temple is built on its very summit, sheltered from the wind by walls of stone. In spite of the difficulty of ascent, it is frequently ascended by scores of pilgrims. It lies in the corners of three provinces—Yetsizen, Kaga and Fida. It is cut through the center by the thirty-sixth parallel of north latitude, and at its base by the one hundred and thirty-seventh meridian of longitude east from Greenwich. It is marked on the map Siro Yama (White mountain.) Only one other peak in Japan is higher than Hakusan, and that is Fuseyama, which is 14,450 feet high. Hakusan was first ascended and a path made on it by a priest named Tai Cho Daish, who made it his 'mission' to ascend and make a path and set up shrines upon high mountains, and to consecrate them to special gods. He lived in the fifth century of the Christian era. The ascension of high mountains by pilgrims as an act of piety is one of the established customs of Japan."

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy
FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONchitis, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as
G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,
and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This chiefly is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.
—G. H. SMITH & CO., Proprietors,
20 Baronne St., New Orleans.
Caution to the Public.—Be sure to get the right article.
Among the references are Hon. S. Belden, Attorney General; Hon. C. O. Ingue, Ex-Judge District Court; General Thomas M. Scott, of J. Pinckney Smith & Co.; Rev. L. P. Hentz, Lutheran Church; Captain J. J. Rivera, foreman of the Bulletin office, and many others. no30 6m

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.
A Purely Vegetable Compound
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF
RHEUMATISM AND GOUT,
THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections, but experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.
The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.
What the Annihilator Will Do.
1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.
2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.
3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.
PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.
No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"
IS THE "KING"
Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines:
ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems indeed great. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."
All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Willcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.
You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books
Now published. The "University Series" embraces
MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,
By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of these sciences, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by artificiality of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."
Holmes' Readers and Spellers,
By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.
Venable's Arithmetical Series,
By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.
Holmes' History of the United States,
By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The movement in the general market has been interrupted by the New Year holiday, and we have hardly more than two days' business to review, during which prices have exhibited but few variations, except in our leading staple. Sugar has been in fair demand and ruled at steady prices, molasses quiet but firm, and Western produce without any material change.

The weather has been warm and cloudy, with occasional slight showers. The accounts from the country present no new features. The views in our cotton circles with regard to the total yield present quite as much disagreement as at any time of the season, many of our factors adhering to 3,100,000 bales, while shippers and others look for from 3,250,000 to 3,500,000.

The river is 13 feet 10 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-ninth ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales.	24,841
Lake	39
Mobile	1,696
Florida	92
Texas	183
Total	26,851

On Saturday the movement showed only a moderate degree of animation during the morning, but subsequently became quite active, and the sales summed up 7,500 bales—at less irregular and on the whole firmer prices than on Friday, but without any quotable improvement. On Monday the festivities of the day confined the business to 1,500 bales at about previous rates. On Tuesday the market opened with an active demand and at buoyant prices, stimulated by a material advance in foreign exchange; and as the movement subsequently became more animated, factors were enabled to realize still higher figures, the closing rates showing an advance of ¼c. on Saturday's quotations. The sales were the heaviest of the year, amounting to 10,800 bales. The demand was strong throughout the day, and it was conjectured that had the offering been more copious the business would have been of still greater magnitude. Early in the day low middling sold at 18¾c. and strict at 19c., but later the former ruled at 18⅞@19c. and the latter at 19⅛@19¼c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 431,924 bales, against 531,620 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 249,737 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 92,136 to France, and a decrease of 214,024 to Great Britain, and of 58,119 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Good ordinary	18 @ 18
Low middling	18¾ @ 19¼
Middling	19¼ @ 19⅜
Strict middling	— @ 19½
Good middling	20 @ —

On Tuesday 27 casks shoulders sold at 6c., 10 do. at 6½c., and 20 boxes clear sides at 7¼c.

LARD.—Choice has again continued in demand for Cuba, with a light stock on hand. Tierces are quoted at 9¼@9¾c., kegs 10¼@10½c. ₱ lb. There have not been any important sales, however, since our last review.

BREAKFAST BACON.—There is no demand. Prices are nominal, and are quoted at 8@9c. ₱ lb. for choice Westerns. The last sales of any importance were at 8@8½c.

LOUISIANA RICE is in good supply, but there is scarcely any demand. Fair is quoted at 8½c., prime 9c., choice 9¾c. ₱ lb.

The movement in warrants has been confined to $1,000 large State on Tuesday at 62, and $600 small at 65.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 11, 1872. NO. 2.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, Jan. 4.—Dr. Arnold Naiden, United States Senator from 1830 to 1836, is dead, aged eighty-two years.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 5.—It has been decided by the administration that the civil service competitive examination is to be applied to all official vacancies where the public service will not be injured by delay; such as postmasters and collectors, where deputies are doing the business until an appointment can be made.

Cheyenne, W. T., Jan. 5.—Four trains with eight hundred passengers, which have been between this place and Laramie since last Monday, arrived to-day. Passengers were in quite a perilous position, being nearly starved, having but a few crackers and dried meat on board. The men worked night and day to clear the track of snow. It is thought the snow will again block the track to-night.

Monroe, La., Jan. 5.—The Ouachita Telegraph sums up the losses by the recent fire at $610,000; insurance $203,850. Several buildings are already in the course of construction in the burnt district, and many laborers are busy moving the debris and clearing the ground.

Washington, Jan. 6.—John Janney, of London county, president of the Virginia Secession Convention, is dead, aged seventy-four years.

New York, Jan. 6.—James Fisk, Jr., was shot at half-past four this afternoon, in the vestibule of the Grand Central Hotel, by a man named Stokes, a witness in the Mansfield case. He had just alighted from his carriage and entered the hotel.

New York, Jan. 7.—At midnight Fisk said he thought he would get over it. He walked up stairs after he was wounded.

At midnight Fisk slept tranquilly; the doctors considered the symptoms favorable. The ball was found but not extracted. Fisk gave a lucid account of the event to the jury.

Fisk died at eleven o'clock this morning.

A Herald special from London says: "Napoleon, on New Year day, is reported to have said: 'I will give Thiers three months of presidency of the French republic, when Gambetta will have his place.' This change will be favorable to the imperial cause."

Philadelphia, Jan. 7.—The smallpox deaths for the week are two hundred and thirty. New cases decreased one hundred.

Louisville, Jan. 7.—The steamer S. J. Hale this morning sunk on the falls, with three thousand barrels of flour, three hundred tons of hay, five hundred barrels of potatoes and onions, and furniture, wagons, etc. The boat and freight are in a precarious condition.

Baltimore, Jan. 7.—Dr. Merriman Cole, a retired physician of seventy-three, was found murdered in his office this morning. There were thirteen wounds about his head and face, and his pockets were turned inside out. A small sum of money was scattered round the office. The scene of the murder was in the center of the city. No arrest has yet been made.

San Francisco, Jan. 7.—The stage between Mokelumna Hill and Milton was robbed by two highwaymen yesterday of $3,000. The San Andreas stage was also robbed near North Fork, American river, by a single highwayman.

The Assembly adopted a resolution asking Congress to pass an act restricting Chinese immigration.

Washington, Jan. 8.—In the House Mr. Cox introduced a resolution giving belligerent rights to the Cuban patriots.

New York, Jan. 8.—Rev. George K. Hopworth yesterday renounced Unitarianism, and adopted orthodox doctrines.

Chicago, Jan. 8.—An anti-rent war is threatened on the part of those allowed to erect temporary habitations on vacant property after the fire. The mayor has issued a proclamation in which he states they must pay rent or move.

Monroe, Jan. 9.—The Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for Louisiana closed its labors yesterday afternoon, with an able sermon from Rev. W. V. Tudor, who, with Rev. John Mathews, have been returned to their respective churches in New Orleans.

Louisville, Jan. 9.—General Halleck died at his residence in this city this evening, of congestion of the brain, superinduced by disease of the liver, which he has been afflicted with for some time.

FOREIGN.

London, Jan. 3.—The Times, discussing Catacazy's recall, says: The Russian minister served his government zealously but not judiciously.

The Germans are petitioning Bismarck to demand an apology and indemnity for supplies furnished by citizens of the United States to the French government during the late war.

Paris, Jan. 3.—A dispatch from Marseilles reports that the presence of M. Gambetta in that city was the cause of much agitation and some disorder. His hotel was surrounded yesterday by a throng of friends who endeavored to call him out. At one time the assemblage became so numerous and turbulent that troops were ordered to the scene, and the chasseurs charged upon and dispersed the mob.

Gambetta was not allowed by the police to leave the hotel for fear that his appearance would lead to further disturbances. He advises his friends not to persist in collecting in large bodies in the streets or attempt resistance to the authorities. He tells them they have the right to hold meetings, but they should withdraw on the presence of an armed force and not provoke collision. There has been no renewal of the agitation to-day. Gambetta remains at his hotel, and it is given out that he is confined to his room by illness.

Matamoras, Jan. 3.—Troops were to-day placed in the fortifications around this city, to repair and strengthen the works, in anticipation of an attack by the revolutionists.

It is reported that a strong force of insurgents from the interior of the State are advancing to take this place.

General Cortina, commanding government forces at Camargo, received a supply of ammunition to repulse a threatened attack of the rebels, who are at Mier, thirty miles distant from that place.

London, Jan. 4.—The Irishmen at London demonstrated in favor of a home government for Ireland.

Two members of Parliament from Liverpool, addressing their constituents, advocated an alliance between Great Britain and the United States, and praised the Washington treaty.

Matamoras, Jan. 4.—The revolutionary chief Valdez, who pronounced against the government on the nineteenth of December, at San Carlos, was captured and hung by the forces of General Canalis, Governor of the State of Tamaulipas, with several other insurgents.

Piedras Negras has been recaptured by Juarez troops with a loss of twenty-five killed and many of both parties wounded.

The revolutionists, so far, have not been able to make any progress in the State of Tamaulipas, except to hold Mier.

London, Jan. 5.—The total number of deaths from smallpox in London during last year was eight thousand. The average of the thirty-one years preceding last is six hundred. The medical journals call attention to the alarming increase of the disease, and they warn the public to take all precaution, and they appeal to the government to interpose in aid of the sanitary regulations, and to establish special hospitals and carefully quarantine all infected districts.

A telegram received here from Washington says: "Messrs. Jay Gould, McCulloch & Co. and the Rothchilds have made a joint proposition to Secretary Boutwell, which he has received and will no doubt accept, and which will result in placing $600,000,000 of the new loan."

The ship Spirit Down, from Liverpool for San Francisco, has been wrecked; only five lives saved.

The Spanish ironclad Saragosa returns to Havana. It is asserted that the Spanish war steamer Pizaro, which is now watching the Virginia at Aspinwall, will also return to Havana at an early day.

Liverpool, Jan. 8.—At a meeting of the American Chamber of Commerce to-day a resolution was adopted declaring that in the opinion of the chamber the mail service between Great Britain and the United States government would be improved if the carrying of the American mails was restored to the Cunard line of steamers, and requesting the consul of the United States at Liverpool to communicate the resolution to the Postmaster General at Washington.

Paris, Jan. 8.—President Thiers banqueted the Emperor and Empress of Brazil.

Victor Hugo was defeated for the Assembly.

London, Jan. 9.—A dispatch from Sandringham reports that the Prince of Wales went out yesterday, the first time since his illness.

Matamoras, Mexico, Jan. 9.—A courier reached here to-night from Tampico with a telegram, dated City of Mexico, December 31, from the Minister of War, announcing two general engagements between General Rocha's forces and the revolutionists under General Diaz, in which the latter were routed, with the loss of artillery and cavalry. The church bells are ringing, and the troops are marching through the streets with music, amidst great excitement over the news.

Patagonian Infants.—Their superstition makes them regard as divinities all phenomenal children, principally such as are born with a larger number of fingers or toes than is natural. According to their belief, such a child is a presage of great happiness for their family. As to those that are altogether deformed—such cases are very rare—or whose constitution does not appear to fit them for the kind of life they would have to lead, they make away with them, either by breaking their limbs or smothering them; they then abandon them, without burial, to the wild dogs and birds of prey. If the innocent little creature is considered worthy to live, it becomes from that instant the object of the entire love of its parents, who, if necessary, will submit to the greatest privations to satisfy its least wants or exactions. They place their new-born on a small ladder, which serves it instead of a cradle. The upper portion of its little body rests on the cross-pieces or rounds ranged close together, and covered with sheep-skin, while the lower part is inclosed in a sort of hollow formed by other cross-pieces below the uprights. The child is held in this position by soft cords wound above the skins, which serve it instead of linen.—Three Years Among the Patagonians.

The new expedition for the exploration of Palestine, which has been in preparation for some time, has left London for the Holy Land, under charge of Captain R. W. Stewart. The main work of the expedition will be the completion of the survey of Palestine. How much this is wanted is only known, perhaps, to map-makers and professional geographers, but every one who has really studied the Old Testament history can tell of undiscovered sites and places whose positions seem to be lost altogether. To rediscover these will be one of the aims of the exploring party. They will also examine the mounds which are found dotted all over the country; sketch and photograph ruins which lie on the hill tops; collect the traditions, and copy the inscriptions. The committee's programme embraces a period of three or four years to complete the work, which costs little, and is of an importance not only national but universal. The expedition preparing in our own country will go east of the Jordan. The results of the two expeditions will be published at regular intervals and simultaneously, and will undoubtedly be of the highest importance and value.

The return of the number of persons killed by wild beasts during the past year in the Madras Presidency, India, has lately been made up; one hundred and eighty-three persons were killed by tigers, twenty-one by cheetahs and panthers, seven by bears, ten by bisons, five by wild hogs, four by elephants, and three by alligators. Tigers are most destructive in Ganjam, Vizagapatam, Jeypore, Kurnoof and Coimbatore. Seven persons were killed by tigers in Canara in 1869, eleven in 1868, and eleven were killed by cheetahs.

The Canada census for 1871 shows the total population of the Dominion at 3,484,924, an average increase of about twelve and a half per cent. since 1861.

MISSIONARY.

In common with all the Christian world, says the Independent, little Holland bears a part in missionary work. The great struggle for Protestant and modern liberty, which once covered it with glory, was born out of a real love for Christian faith; and what then resisted unto blood, fighting against sin and the Man of Sin, now takes the aggressive, and goes forth to propagate that which it heroically censured. We have before us a resume of the societies established there for evangelizing work abroad, and at present in operation, with a statement of their receipts for the year just closed. The mere recital is encouraging, though in so small a country we cannot understand why so many (and similar) societies should exist. Consolidation would seem the dictate of efficient economy. Among the ten named there is: First, the Missionary Society of the Netherlands, seated at Rotterdam, and working in the East Indian Hollandish possessions, especially Java, with sixty-three stations, one hundred and twenty-five schools, and twenty-three missionaries, receipts $34,500; second, the Committee for Java, a branch of the Home and Foreign Batavian Missionary Society, with four stations, eight missionaries, two native helpers, three schools and one normal training school in Holland, receipts, $5,000; third, the Hollandish Society for Missions, with six stations, (in Java,) eight missionaries, one helper, and five schools, receipts about $10,000; fourth, the Utrecht Missionary Society, with six stations, ten missionaries and four European assistants, receipts $21,000; fifth, the Mennonite Society, (Baptist,) with two stations in Java and Sumatra, three missionaries, two native helpers and one school, receipts nearly $6,000; sixth, the Society of Moravian Brethren, at Zeist, Holland, with thirteen stations, "many" missionaries, twenty-three native helpers, and twenty-two schools through the colony of Surinam in "tropical America," without specifying further. The aggregate of expenditure reported by these ten societies is in the neighborhood of $100,000; of stations, eighty-six; of schools, one hundred and sixty-one; and of working men and women, over one hundred and twenty. We note, too, that in selecting fields of labor Holland has chosen especially her own colonies in the East Indian Archipelago, "providing for her own." But the thought remains, after looking over this report: What a pity that ten different societies are requisite, that the piety and faith and evangelistic zeal of that small country must be so broken up and express themselves through so many and, by necessity, therefore, so minute streams. It is a grave question whether we could not bear more consolidation of societies even in our immensely expanded land.

It is a great mistake to measure the enjoyment of others by our own; to expect uniformity of opinion in this world; to look for judgment and experience in youth; to endeavor to mold all dispositions alike; not to yield in immaterial trifles; to look for perfection in our own actions; to worry ourselves and others with what cannot be remedied; not to alleviate all that needs alleviation, as far as lies in our power; not to make allowance for the infirmities of others; to consider everything impossible which we cannot perform; to believe only what our finite mind can grasp; to expect to be able to understand everything. The greatest of all mistakes is to live only for time, when any moment may launch us into eternity.

Some realize much of the wilderness character of this world, and a keen sense of its privations, who but little apprehend it as the place in which they may collect abundance of precious things to enhance their joys hereafter. Our privations only elicit murmurings and unbelief; yet, as renewed in Christ, they become the very means of developing our Christian graces. Who will complain, then, of the trials and discipline which have been the means of enabling him to obtain these "powders of the merchant," and then to yield to the Lord a perfume unpossessed by any angel above?

There is dew in one flower and not in another, because one opens its cup and takes it in, while the other closes itself, and the drop runs off. So God rains goodness and mercy as wide as the dew; and if we lack them, it is because we will not open our hearts to receive them.

PUTTING A COOPER'S PIPE OUT.

The late Rev. Thomas Collins was a model tract distributor, being instant in season and out of season. He often traveled in smoking-cars, in order to have a wider field for doing good. In his interesting memoir, recently published, we find that he describes some incidents of one of his journeys:

"In the train I presented a New Testament to a soldier; he received it gladly, and I was pleased to see that he caught my meaning at once when I called it 'a word.'

"A cooper got in at an early station, and without an apology lighted his pipe. After a little introductory talk I submitted for his consideration whether the cost of that cloudy gratification would not send a child to school; and whether that would not be a better outlay, as it would confer a benefit that would last forever.

"He said: 'I never thought of that, but it is true. So, out goes the pipe, and here's for the child.'

"'Do you mean that? Will you give up the practice?'

"'To be sure I will, and send the young un to school.'

"'I am so glad to have put your pipe out. Will you oblige me by the gift of the cast-off thing?'

"'Certainly, sir; here it is.' So with joy I brought the trophy home."

Reader, would not the money you spend on cigars and tobacco go a great way toward increasing the comfort of your family? Will you not "put your pipe out" for their sake?—Good News.

A Home.—The Rev. J. E. Rankin says in the Illustrated Christian Weekly:

"What is home? It is a fabric of congenial society, of the domestic affections. A man buys or rents a house; does this make a home? He puts into it furniture and pictures; does this make it a home? He brings to preside in it, to beautify it with her presence and womanly skill and taste, a true and gentle wife; does even this make it home? It furnishes the outward conditions of home. Home is made up of the affectionate society of husband and wife—perhaps of grandparents; in due time, and as its very bloom and fragrance, of children also. I believe in children.

"It is a community of interest, to which all parties contribute their appropriate share. A husband, a father, must live at home in order to contribute his share. A wife must live at home in order to contribute her share. By living at home I mean more than lodging there, more than taking two or three meals a day there. I mean the making of the place where other members of the family reside the center of one's social life, rotating around it, returning to it the first opportunity, lingering lovingly there, as long as other duties will permit. 'For this reason I am against indulging in anything there that cannot be enjoyed socially."

The Catholic World has an article on Dollinger and the "Old Catholic" movement, designed to cast discredit upon the movement, but giving to it even more importance than is generally attributed to it. The writer, in speaking of an interview with Bohmer at Frankfort-on-the-Main, in 1861, states that the latter said to him that, "when Dollinger visited Frankfort last, he had a walk with him through the city, and Dollinger had spoken to him about his literary plans. He (Bohmer) remonstrated with him, and inquired why he did not fulfill his older promises, why he did not continue his unfinished church history? Whereupon Dollinger, stopping and swinging his cane, said with a smile: 'You see, I can't do that, for now my researches have brought me to such a pass that I cannot make the end of my history tally with the beginning; the continuation of my church history would be entirely Protestant.'"—New York Observer.

Recently two persons traveling on the road to Gotham in a light wagon were smoking cigars, from the fire of which some straw at the bottom ignited. The flames soon drove them from their seats, and while busy extinguishing the fire, a countryman who had been for some time following them on horseback, alighted to assist them.

"I have been watching the smoke for some time," said he.

"Why, then, did you not give us notice?" asked the travelers.

"Well," responded the rustic, "there are so many new-fangled notions now-a-days, I thought you were going by steam."

INFANT-CLASS TEACHING.

I shall never forget a visit paid some years ago to Muller's Orphan Schools at Bristol, and the emotions excited by hearing some seventy or eighty little ones in the infant class, singing: "What shall we render, O Heavenly Friend, to thee," etc. Surely we ought to feel more interest in the infant classes of our Sunday schools, and put a higher honor upon those teachers who start the first great thoughts of God and Christ in their young hearts.

It may be useful to remind some that an infant class ought always to be held in a separate room. I have known the attempt vainly made to teach infants in a part of the chapel. It is necessary that the teacher should feel alone, and he left quite undisturbed. The room should be well warmed and well ventilated; the little ones so very readily feel the cold and become restless, or are affected by over-heat and become drowsy. Such a class cannot be well taught without a raised gallery, and there is a great difference in the ease and comfort of such constructions; and much help will be found in a box of movable letters, well managed.

But who is most suitable for the teacher of such a class? Usually a lady, because of the gentle patience and sympathy of her nature; but, if possible, it should be a cultured, educated lady, who could interest by illustration, and powers of invention and imagination. Perhaps a mother would be the very best. Not a few gentlemen have, however, proved very efficient.

Then, what ideas should the teacher hold before her? 1. Such changes of position as should prevent fatigue, and ever keep alive the attention. 2. Full occupation for the eyesight. What are known as object lessons would be very efficient and attractive in the Sunday class. And 3. A system of questioning that shall begin teaching the children to think. Of course the utmost simplicity of language is required. I heard lately of a sermon which had given great delight to thousands of children, written entirely in words of one syllable. The books called "Peep of Day," and "Line upon Line," afford capital models of the kind of language suitable for little ones. The tales and illustrations need to be chosen almost entirely from the sphere of the children's observation, and our modern literature abounds with such. But a tale almost wholly depends for its attraction upon the telling.

Only the first and simplest of religious truths should ever be presented. An infant teacher should not be doctrinal; she should keep to the great facts, whose interest can never flag. Milk must be given to babes. And if the work of the infant class be rightly regarded, it becomes a sphere for the consecration of the noblest Christian energies. Cannot more childless wives, and women whose motherhood is strong in them, find work for Christ, in gathering just those about them to whom Christ said: "Suffer the little ones to come unto me?"—The Hive.

Rev. Dr. Stewart, of Leghorn, in Italy, speaks of the agency of the Waldenses in Christian work in Italy, and so calls attention to the really wonderful way in which this people, preserved through centuries of trials at the hands of the papacy, are now repaying Roman intolerance for their own persecution. "The Waldensian Church, true to its mission of evangelizing Italy, was the first to preach the gospel in Rome after its occupation by the Italian troops last September. This honor fell to the lot of Signor Prochet, of Genoa, on whom has worthily fallen Dr. Revel's mantle as president of their Evangelization Commission. Since that time the Waldensian mission has prospered; its Italian congregation is the largest in Rome, and it has two schools in operation." The mission has purchased and paid for a house in Rome, large enough to accommodate within its walls a church, schools, pastors' and teachers' apartments, and a shop for a Bible colporteur. James Lenox, and Messrs. R. L. and A. Stuart, of New York, gave $10,000 for this purchase.

The following incident was told me the other day by a resident, who vouches for the truth of it: A rat, nearly white with age, and blind, was frequently seen led to the water by a young rat, by means of a straw, of which the old rat held one end, and the young rat the other. The incident corroborates a similar statement, given by Jesse in his "Gleanings of Natural History."—Nature.

THE CHEAP MEETINGS REVIVALS.

MR. EDITOR: In looking over the statistical reports of the several Conferences I am led to wonder and inquire the cause why so few, comparatively, are added to the church. Our machinery is much improved—some of it new—improved in government, in sermon-making and delivery, in education, scientific in song, advanced to the front in the Sabbath school enterprise. The most of the preachers are receiving larger salaries than before the war, and yet intemperance fraud, bankruptcy, pride and worldly-mindedness are more widely extended and more vigorous in growth than in former years. What is the cause? What more can be done to arrest sin and sinners? Have we as preachers become satisfied to preach for a mere support? We think not. And yet we preach from year to year, cast our bread on the water, but reap comparatively few sheaves. I know the faith of the whole church has been greatly damaged by the result of the war, but God is the same. The gospel is still the wisdom of God and the power of God, and mighty, through him, to the pulling down of strongholds.

I travel extensively all over Alabama. I hear much preaching, which I will not attempt to criticise, although in some instances a little more freshness might not be a cause of complaint. In my judgment, the ground of unsuccessfulness is not so much in the preaching as in the want of proper and instant application. In former times, when the minister was about to close his sermon, he usually supplemented it with an appropriate exhortation, and often by demonstration. The lukewarm and backslidden always were, and in the nature of the case always will be, opposed to any demonstrative application of the sermon in the public congregation; but has a preacher done his whole duty when he has simply preached? There are many preachers who seldom ever call mourners, and only open the door of the church when asked. In thirty-five years' observation I have never known a preacher of that class to have much success. They sometimes have reputation, but generally the church dies, for all that, under their ministry. Such preachers are not really opposed to propositions, but they dread defeat.

It is true that much contempt is often shown when a simple-hearted, sincere preacher makes a proposition; but, after all, the power of the gospel is in the application of it. Moses and Joshua and the Savior were plain men, and Moses called heaven and earth to witness the decision of the people. Joshua pressed a decision then and there at the close of his address. The Savior said to his disciples: Will you also go away? I know of no better way to apply the gospel than by a direct appeal to men's convictions. There are thousands to-day all over the land who may be lost, and yet if brought properly to the test under the influence of the gospel might decide to be saved. The subjective effect of such direct effort is much more important than most preachers conceive or imagine. Suppose the preachers generally were to determine to call for penitents every Sabbath, and open the door of the church after every sermon, when persons out of the church were present, what a change for the better would soon be manifested among us all. The whole church would be in a revival in six months. God is waiting—always ready. When the preacher preaches for immediate effect, he is the first one affected himself. If he intends to call for penitents and open the door of the church, he will preach the gospel a present salvation, and feeling that in his own heart the work is more than half done before the preacher begins. The lepers were cleansed before they reached the place. There is not a preacher in Alabama who really called of God, if he will determine, by the help of the Holy Spirit, to make his preaching a reality by a practical application, Sabbath after Sabbath, who will not become a revivalist before the close of 1872. The principal difference between the successful and the unsuccessful preacher is to be found, not so much in what is called the higher gifts, as in the persistent effort, under the influence and guidance of the Spirit. The preacher who determines to apply the gospel which he preaches will meet with opposition, and my experience is that that opposition comes oftener from the influential, worldly-minded church members than from the world.

S. P. RICHARDSON.

CHILDREN'S BREAD.—"Children's bread;" yes, not loaf. What they have given them should be ready cut and broken up. It were simple cruelty to put a loaf before a child, and tell him to cut for himself—most likely he would cut himself instead. So it is equally foolish and wrong to give little ones God's truth in the loaf, and leave it to them to divide it. They are not to be expected to "divide arightly," and no wonder if, in their efforts to do so, they suffer some harm, the scar of which may be carried for years. "Children's bread," not crust. That the softest part of bread was intended by the Lord is certain. It was bread that would break up in crumbs. In Mark's accounts of this same narrative the woman is represented as pleading her right to the children's crumbs. It was bread so soft that their little fingers could crumble it up. See to it, ye workers among children, that what you give them is soft and easy for the mouth. Do not let them break their little teeth now over what in years to come will be a delight. Forcing it too soon upon them may create a prejudice that would never otherwise have existed.—The Christian.

UNBELIEF.—Consciousness of unbelief is a sign of actual faith. Infidels are never troubled with unbelief. Dead men never feel cold. Frozen feet never ache. And a soul given up to godlessness, and bound hand and foot in sin, has no trouble with unbelief. It is only when faith shoots its first illuminating ray into the darkened heart that the baleful presence of unbelief is made manifest. It is only when the troubled soul can say, "I do believe," that it starts back at the abyss of doubt which that first gleam of faith discloses, and exclaims: "Help thou my unbelief!"

Take courage, then, poor doubting heart. Vexed and tormented by Satan, you have this comfort—you are not on his side, any way! And all your conflicts and tribulations of soul prove that the dead calm of sin is broken, and that the Spirit of God is moving upon the face of the waters, and that "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in your heart, to give you the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

The simple deem that they complete their education in six or eight years; but the wise question whether theirs is terminated even by death.

HOW WONDERFUL that our souls should be the chambers in which Jesus dwells!

Rev. Jephta E. Collins, of Rankin, Miss.

This estimable man and minister died October 17, 1871, in Madison county, Mississippi, at the house of Mr. Foster, eight miles from Canton.

Bro. Collins was in the active work of the ministry. Though not a member of the Annual Conference, he nevertheless had his circuit, and was doing efficient work. On Saturday, October 15, he preached at Sulphur Springs church—preached, I learn, with unction and power. His text was: "What shall a man be profited if he gain the whole world?" etc. He made an appointment to preach again at night. In the afternoon he had a chill. On Tuesday following he died. Thus, away from his home and suddenly, died our excellent brother, "ceasing at once to work and live!"

His wife, hastening to him, was denied the sad satisfaction of seeing him breathe his last. Kind friends ministered to him, however, and angels bore his spirit to the bosom of God.

Bro. Collins was a man of good intellect, considerable culture, varied information, fine moral and social feeling, and an honest, earnest Christian spirit. Knowing him well—as I knew him—one could but love him much. He was an affectionate husband, a loving, judicious father, a faithful friend and a kind neighbor. By his intelligent kindness he was especially useful to the sick.

As a Christian he was thoughtful and conscientious; as a preacher he was instructive and sometimes powerful. He loved the work of the ministry. It was a grief to him that he could not be given wholly to it. Frail in health, he sometimes yielded to depression of mind under the reverses of temporal fortune; but when, engaged in the sacred vocation he was happy.

Bro. Collins practiced law in early life. He was for many years a local preacher, always sustained a good reputation among his neighbors, and bequeathed to his children the valued heritage of a good name. He leaves his wife and ten children to mourn. Their loss is his gain.

"His sword was in his hand,
Still warm with recent fight,
Ready that moment, at command,
Through rock and steel to smite.

"The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease;
And life's long warfare closed at last,
His soul is found in peace.

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

ONLY A SPIKE NAIL.

In the autumn of 1835 the packet Emma, bound from Gottenburg to Harwich, was sailing along at early dawn before a stiff breeze, when the lookout man descried something broad on the lee-bow, which looked to him like a vessel bottom-up. Presently he discerned a white object moving thereon, and at first judged it to be a seagull; but as the light became clearer it appeared to be a stick with a white rag attached; and to his astonishment the stick was moved about in a manner so peculiar that some living person must have been holding it, and yet no object was visible save the overturned ship and this mysterious signal. By this time he had called the mate's attention to the wreck, and he feeling assured that, impossible though it seemed, human beings were there, summoned the master, and very soon, by his orders, the vessel's course was altered, and when sufficiently near, a boat was manned—the narrator being one of its crew—and sent to the wreck. When they got alongside, how great was their surprise to find three living beings, whom with much difficulty they assisted to crawl out of a hole they had cut through the ship's bottom!

The vessel was a Russian Finlander, timber-laden; she had capsized in a sudden squall four days before. At the moment of her overturning the captain and his two mates happened to be aft, and, on the impulse of the moment, running into the cabin, were imprisoned therein, as in another moment the entrance was under water, and the cabin floor above their heads. Their only chance now was to retain life so long as the supply of air would allow, in the faint hope that the ship might partially right herself. With this view they contrived to crawl through a small hatch in the cabin floor up to the vessel's bottom; for that being high out of water, was comparatively dry. In this dark prison, without water or food, saving a few grains of malt, the refuse of a former cargo, they remained listening to the groaning and creaking timbers, and heavy beating of the waves as they rolled over the fated ship.

The captain, who was a God-fearing man, prayed aloud for deliverance, and endeavored to cheer his companions as best he could; but as hours went by, and no signs of the ship's righting appeared, their hearts grew heavy, and for awhile even the captain feared that God's mercy had forsaken them; but how—how strangely he often answers prayer!—not to the captain, but to the more worldly-minded chief mate, a sudden thought occurs, and they caught at this straw of hope: "We might cut through the vessel's bottom," said the mate, "if we had tools!" "Ay, but what have we?" was the reply. The carpenter's chest was inaccessible they knew; but they groped about the cabin beneath them, as well as the water would permit them to do, in the hope that an axe or edge tool of any kind might be found, but all in vain. Not even a table-knife could be found; and, alas! even their own clasp knives, by some strange fatality, had been left in their berths. But suddenly the captain remembers a small penknife he usually carries, and with joy produces it from his waistcoat; and now, with care selecting a part where they might hope to escape the larger timbers, the captain begins to use the frail implement; but, alas! he had hardly made a second cut before the blade snapped short off; and, with a groan of anguish, he sank back into the supporting arms of the mates.

For a while all hope seemed to have forsaken them, and they sat in moody silence, and the wash of the water beneath seemed to say, "'Tis all in vain, 'tis all in vain;" but presently other words rang in their ears, to the same tune, but a more joyful measure: "Try again, try again," was the song of the waves this time. Again they determined to search below for some means of escape; and after a while they found—what? Nothing more than a piece of loose wood floating about, and in it a spike nail! With much ado the nail was worked out of the wood; and now, about midnight of the day on which they were capsized, they began in earnest to cut, or rather scrape, their way to light and life. Terribly did the rude tool tear and blister their hands, as, one after another, they worked on and on, greedily continuing the task until the nail would fall from their benumbed fingers, dreading lest the continually growing faintness which stole over them should render them unable to work.

From midnight of Monday they worked on and on, and on Wednesday evening they had succeeded in cutting through so that light could be discerned and fresh air received. Heartened by this they persevered, and by Thursday night had made an opening through which the mate, who was the slightest figure, was able to scramble on the vessel's bottom; the air was, however, too cold and strong for his weakened lungs, and he was glad to return. They now tied part of a shirt on a piece of wood, and, protruding it from the hole, awaited, with trembling bodies and hopeful hearts, the coming day; for they felt assured that the God who had so wonderfully enabled them to open a door of escape would not leave them to perish, as it were, upon the threshold. That their assurance was not in vain we have already seen; and when drawn forth from what once seemed their coffin, their hearts swelled with gratitude to him who had indeed preserved them "through much tribulation."

The rescued men were treated with judicious kindness, and by the time they reached Harwich were sufficiently recovered to walk on shore.

An account of this marvelous deliverance was recorded at Lloyd's, and the spike nail, given by the Russian captain to the master of the smack, is now in the possession of his family. In this narrative we perceive how, even in the most desperate straits, and under circumstances where hope seems forbidden and deliverance impossible, God's all-present hand can supply the means of escape from danger and death; and selecting the humblest and apparently most inadequate instruments, can endue men's hearts with an energy and vitality without which those means would be unavailable.

IN SIBERIA, during the winter, milk is bought and sold in a frozen state, and can be carried for a long period in a simple bag. When required for use the requisite quantity is chopped off with a hatchet or sheath-knife, and thawed as needed.

The Philosopher and the School Girl.

Not long ago a young man from the provinces was sent to Paris to finish his education; but, like many others, he had the misfortune of getting into bad company. His own passions, inflamed by the godless conversation of his companions, caused him to forget the instructions of his pious mother—to despise his religion. He went so far as to wish, and finally to say, there is no God: God was only a word. After staying several years in the capital, the young man returned to his family. One day he was invited to a respectable house where there was a numerous company.

While all were entertaining themselves with news, pleasure and business, two girls, aged respectively twelve and thirteen, were seated in a bay window reading together. The young man approached them and, asked: "What beautiful romance are you reading so attentively, young ladies?".

"We are reading no romance, sir."

"Not a romance? What book are you reading, then?"

"We are reading the history of God's chosen people."

"You believe, then, that there is a God?"

Astonished at such a question, the girls looked at each other, the blood mounting to their cheeks.

"And you, sir, you do not believe it?" quickly replied the older one.

"Once I believed it, but after living in Paris and studying philosophy, mathematics, politics, I am convinced that God is an empty word."

"I, sir, was never in Paris, I have never studied philosophy or mathematics, or all those beautiful things which you know; I only know my catechism; but since you are so learned and say there is no God, you can also easily tell me whence the egg comes?"

The young girl spoke these words sufficiently loud for a part of the company to hear them. At first a few persons approached to hear what they were speaking about; others followed. Finally the whole company collected around the bay window to listen to the conversation.

"Yes, sir," said the young girl, "since you say that there is no God, will you be kind enough to explain to me whence the egg comes?"

"A funny question, truly; the egg comes from the hen."

"And now, sir, whence comes the hen?"

"You know that as well as I do, miss; the hen comes from the egg."

"Which of them existed first, the egg or the hen?"

"I really do not know what you intend with this question and with your hen; but yet that which existed first was the hen."

"There was, then, a hen which did not come from an egg?"

"Beg your pardon, miss; did I not take notice that the egg existed first?"

"There was, then, an egg which did not come from a hen?"

"Oh, if you—beg pardon—that is, you see—"

"I see that you do not know whether the egg existed before the hen, or the hen before the egg."

"Well, then, I say the hen."

"Very well; there was then a hen which did not come from an egg. Tell me now who made this first hen, from which all other hens and eggs come?"

"With your hens and your eggs, it seems to me you take me for a poultry dealer."

"By no means, sir; I only ask you to tell me whence the mother of all hens and eggs comes?"

"But for what object?"

"Well, since you do not know, you will permit me to tell you. He who created the first hen, or as you would rather have it, the first egg, is the same who created the world, and this Being we call God. You cannot explain the existence of a hen or an egg without God! You cannot explain the existence of this world without God!"

The young philosopher was silent; he quietly took his hat, and full of shame departed.—From the French.

A DREAM.—A friend of ours had a dream the other night. He lost by the Chicago fire terribly, but still had enough to go on with, and his indomitable energy will soon make up the loss. The pinch had come just as the collection was to be taken for home missions. He had generally given liberally, but now he could afford nothing, or next to nothing. That night he dreamt he went to heaven. He was struck with the barrenness of the place, the poverty of the mansion. Nothing came anywhere near the Bible description, and so in his surprise he asked an angel if it was really heaven. "Oh, yes," was the reply, "one part of heaven. These apartments are for those who, while cutting off no luxuries in the world, always began to economize in the church of Christ when meeting with any loss." Our friend woke just then, and the next day sent his check for the same amount as last year.—Era.

THE FAMINE IN PERSIA.

A correspondent of the New York Observer, writing from Oroomiah, Persia, August 16, 1871, says: Unhappy Persia seems to be sorely visited, this year, by the judgments of God. Kasha Gnerjis, of Oroomiah, has just returned from Ispahan, where he has been laboring several months past, under the direction of Rev. Robert Bruce, of the Church Missionary Society. He reports successful labors there, and much to encourage the heart of the Christian. But his accounts of the famine in all the south of Persia are heart-rending. He says the official returns made to inquiries ordered by the Shah, who sent large stores for the relief of the sufferers, summed up between fourteen thousand and sixteen thousand dead by famine. This Kasha was the agent of Mr. Bruce in distributing, monthly, between $60 and $80 among the starving people from his private funds, and he describes some most harrowing scenes. He says the past winter and spring seem now to him like a wild dream. Children were stolen, killed and eaten. Horses, donkeys, dogs and cats were greedily devoured. The eyes and brains of such as had died were dug out and eaten. The leg bones of animals that had died were soaked, and the skin scraped off and eaten. In fine, everything that the teeth of hungry men could penetrate was eaten. The dead lay in the streets; and the dying, shriveled human forms crept along by the aid of walls to prevent their falling from exhaustion, with open mouth, yet speechless tongues, begging for bread. Flocks, cattle and horses were either killed and devoured, or died for want of grass or provender; and horses were not found even for post-riders. The cause of the famine was the great scarcity of water the past two years, and the terrible sufferings could not be relieved by rapid communication, as there are no railroads nor steamboats in Persia. The cholera has since appeared in these regions, and at last accounts was prevailing.

The cholera broke out also in Teheran, and for a time was very severe; but a terrible tempest of wind, which filled the air with dust, and which prostrated many walls and upper rooms, swept over the city, after which the cholera entirely disappeared. But it is raging violently now in Tabreez, four days distant by caravan—not rail. Our post, this week, brings word that the daily death rate in that city is from three hundred to nine hundred. The people have fled in every direction, and now it prevails in the villages. It has also been severe in Khoi, and has reached Salmas, sixty miles north of us. As yet our city has escaped, but it will be strange if we should be passed by. May God be merciful.

Our messenger from Tabreez also reports that a terrible hail and thunder storm had just swept over Tabreez and vicinity, and the mountain torrents, swollen beyond all precedent, came pouring down, sweeping off whole villages, and the crops to an alarming extent. A thousand houses in Tabreez, and seventeen hundred lives, are reported as destroyed by the flood.

From the regions of the Tigris, above Mosul, our helpers write us that the powerful tribe of Arabs, the Shamar, have risen, and were laying waste the region between Masdin and Mosul. Whole villages were plundered, then burned, and little children tossed into the flames. The men were killed, and the fairest of the women and children carried away captive. At our last accounts the devastation was going on. All these things seem to be against us, but our God reigns.

The following is later intelligence, and of the same distressing character:

LONDON, Nov. 2.—Further advices regarding the terrible Persian famine have been received in this city today. The statements formerly received are now proved to have been in nowise exaggerated. The famine has already swept almost the entire length and breadth of Persia, and still continues unabated. The people in every city throughout the country are dying by hundreds from the effects of starvation. In Ispahan (one of the principal cities of Persia, with a population of about two hundred thousand) the ravages of the famine, and its concomitant diseases, have been fearful. The inhabitants, weakened to the last degree by excessive want, have succumbed in hundreds. The cemeteries are filled. In this city alone it is estimated that there are over twenty thousand native Persians, one thousand five hundred Jews, and one thousand five hundred Christians starving. The provisions are almost exhausted, and are quite insufficient to support one-tenth of the population for any protracted period. A similar state of affairs exists at Teheran, (three hundred and ten miles further south,) and hardly a single city is exempt from the dreadful visitation.

NOW!—A short word; a shorter thing. Soon uttered; sooner gone.

ASKING A BLESSING.

FORTY YEARS AGO TO-DAY.

"Aye; but wait, good wife, a minute;
I have first a word to say:
Do you know what day-to-day is?
Mother, 'tis our wedding day!

"Just as now, we sat at supper
When the guests had gone away;
You sat that side, I sat this side,
Forty years ago to-day!

"Then what plans we laid together;
What brave things I meant to do!
Could we dream to-day would find us
At this table—me and you?

"Better so, no doubt—and yet I
Sometimes think—I cannot tell—
Had our boys—ah, yes! I know, dear;
Yes, He doeth all things well.

"Well, we've had our joys and sorrows;
Shared our smiles as well as tears;
And—the best of all—I've had your Faithful love for forty years!

"Poor we've been, but not forsaken;
Grief we've known, but never shame.
Father, for thy endless mercies,
Still we bless thy holy name!"

BOYHOOD.

Ah, then, how sweetly closed those crowded days!
The minutes parting one by one like rays
That fade upon a summer's eve.
But oh! what charm or magic numbers
Can give me back the gentle slumbers
Those weary, happy days did leave,
When by my bed I saw my mother kneel
And with her blessing took her nightly kiss;
Whatever Time destroys, he cannot this—
E'en now that nameless kiss I feel.

Ancient Primacy and Modern Papacy.

BY FATHER HYACINTHE.

First of all, then, the unity of the church is wholly inward, and the Holy Spirit is its author. But the church, like the humanity out of which it is constituted, is a body, as well as a soul. Therefore it had need of an outward organism, which should be at once the expression and the preservative of its unity of love. This organism is the episcopate. The episcopate was instituted by Jesus Christ himself, and established by his apostles, whose mission it continues; but it answered to so deep a want of the Christian community that, if it had not been granted to them, they would have had to create it. Mark the process which went on in those primitive communities which received the Holy Ghost in his fullness, often with sensible manifestations, and which were, so to speak, intoxicated with this new life. Their dominating sentiment is that of unity in love. "That they all may be perfected in one." Each soul feels itself drawn irresistibly toward every other; and, as if under the influence of some unknown force, they seek externally a visible manifestation, and at the same time a jealous defense of that life of paradise which they bear in their hearts. The bishop is that embodiment of the love, that guardian of the unity of the church. The election of the Christian people designates the worthiest in their own ranks; the apostle of Jesus Christ, or, in his absence, a bishop acting in his name, gives to the bishop elect consecration and divine commission, and the church exists in its normal form; plebs adunata sacerdoti—the people made one with the priest.

But a particular community is not the universal community. There are churches, and the church. That which at once took place among the various members of a local church now takes place among the various churches which constitute the church universal. They look upon each other across the separating space. What power has distance to separate souls? They feel that the same spiritual blood is circulating in their bosoms and palpitating in their hearts, and that they all make but one church—the great church of God and of humanity! Here too, then, there must needs be an outward and visible institution, answering to this inmost want. The embodiment of the love of the church universal is the primate, the Pope.

"Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? lovest thou me more than these?" "Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee." "Then feed thou my lambs, feed my sheep; be thou the supreme pastor of the vast flock!"

Such is the origin of the primacy. It is impossible to say anything too great of this salutary and necessary institution, so long as we refrain from changing its nature, and turning it into a royalty, instead of a ministry. The unity of the church finds in the person of Peter its sensible embodiment and its effective instrument. From the abstract idea that, in some sense, it was originally, it grows into a living reality; the one church will speak by this mouth; by this hand the one church will act, but on this condition: that Peter shall always continue the humble and faithful organ of the church. "It was not a solitary man," says St. Augustine, "it is the unity of the church, that received the keys of the kingdom of heaven." (Sermon 196.) "Peter was the personification of the church universal."

Nothing is more explicitly condemned by the gospel than the superiority of one above the rest. When the apostles, full of those Judaistic notions which have survived them, were disputing about the primacy, their Divine Master said to them: "Ye know that the princes of the nations exercise dominion; but it shall not be so among you. But whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister, and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be servant of all."—Matt. xx, 25.

Doubtless the church is a monarchy; but it has no King but one, that is Jesus Christ. Regnum Dei. Peter is but the president of the college of apostles; as, after him, the primate, the Pope, should be only the president of the college of bishops assembled in council or dispersed over the globe. Peter has the privilege of speaking and acting in the name of the apostolic college; but he does not possess another apostolate, he does not exercise over his brethren any other authority than his presidency. He appears in the second rank when circumstances require it, as at the Council of Jerusalem, which was presided over by James, the apostle resident in the Holy City. In common with John, he is sent by the body of apostles on a mission. "When the apostles heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John."—Acts viii, 14. What would people say now-a-days of an assembly of bishops who should venture to send the Pope on a mission with one of their number? And what would they say of a bishop who should publicly reprove the Pope, as Paul, the latest of all the apostles—the "abortive birth," as he calls himself—rebuked Peter at Antioch. "I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed."—Gal. ii, 11.

As we have spoken of the difference—essential, radical, irreconcilable—between the Catholic and the infallibilist rule of faith, let us mark, now, the difference—not less essential, not less radical, not less irreconcilable—between the Catholic and the Ultramontane constitutions of the church; between the primacy of Peter, as it appears to us in the light of the gospel, and the papacy of Gregory the Seventh, as it emerges from the darkness and turbulence of the middle ages. The primacy is unity in love. The papacy is servitude under domination. Here are two opposite conceptions: the worldly idea—pagan or Jewish—on the one hand; on the other, the Christian idea.

The primate, as the very word indicates, is only the first of the bishops—primus inter pares. The Pope, as he has been made by the Forged Decretals and the Vatican Council, is, really, the sole bishop—the bishop of the Church Catholic—as he signs himself: Episcopus Ecclesiæ Catholicæ. "Universal bishop!" wrote Pope Gregory the Great. "God forbid that this name of blasphemy—nomen istud blasphemiæ—should enter into the heart of Christians! He who should arrogate it to himself would rob all other bishops of their honor."

This wrong has been accomplished. The successor of St. Gregory the Great has usurped the "name of blasphemy," and the other bishops have applauded or kept silence. But, for this wrong, what is the remedy?

It is not, where Protestants have sought it, in the destruction of the primacy itself. Luther fell into the same error with Ignatius Loyola. Both of them, for lack of knowledge and of temper—the one in the ardor of his hate, the other in the transport of his love—confounded the exaggerations of the papacy with the institution of the primacy. The one assailed the whole, the other defended the whole. We must follow quite another course. We must distinguish in doctrine, that so we may by and by separate in actual fact these two mingled but antagonistic elements—the ancient primacy and the modern papacy.

How shall this be effected? It is among the hidden things of God. It may be that he will raise up a great Pope, great in courage as well as in genius, who shall openly confess, before God and the world, the errors and the sins of the papacy, and shall restore in its mild and strong integrity the primacy of the early ages. Then Peter himself shall "be converted, and so strengthen his brethren." Or, indeed, plucking up energy in the excess of its calamities, casting off "the bridle that is in its jaws, causing it to err," (Isaiah xxx, 28,) the church will protest against the oppression imposed upon it in God's name. It will undertake that "reformation in head and members" often demanded by it, but always refused.

At the Council of Constance the church deposed three popes. Surely it might manage to depose a single one!

I believe I have clearly and firmly proved, both as regards the constitution of the church and as regards the rule of faith, that the Old Catholics are the representatives of the real Catholic principle. I do not say that we are the only Catholics, for we do not render anathema for anathema; and to those who are trying to drive us out of the church we make answer by remaining with them within it. I simply say that we are the only Catholics faithful to the methods and traditions of the church—the only logical and consistent Catholics.

"But you are but a handful of men," they tell us, "against the multitude, with its acclamations, or, at least, its silence!"

In that upper chamber which was the cradle of the Christian church at Jerusalem there were only a hundred and twenty men, and withal they were rejected by the priests and the mighty of this world, and excommunicated by the synagogue. Nevertheless, the future was with them, for he was with them who said: "Lo! I am with you alway, even to the consummation of the world."

Let us be the hundred and twenty men! Let us be the little flock to which the Father has promised the victory and the kingdom!

What do I say? Were there but one alone (for God's ways are not our ways, and there are moments when the salvation of the world hangs on the faithfulness of a single conscience)—were there but one alone, he should say, for all that: "I do not fear; the truth will conquer!"—Independent.

THE DRESS QUESTION.

There are hundreds of Christian women earnestly desirous of following the Divine Master closely, to whom the "dress question" is a very perplexing one.

If the rule had been laid down in the word, the difficulties would vanish; but there is no more definite rule for dress than for the mode of baptism. The vital power in baptism is that of the Holy Ghost, while water is but the symbol. So also it is written: "Ye are the temples of the Holy Ghost." The more chaste and correct adornments are vain if the Heavenly Guest is absent. If consciousness take the place of the charity which thinketh no "evil," we had better be more solicitous for the purifying of the "guest chamber" than for the outward appearance; for "man looketh at the outward appearance, but God looketh at the heart."

Said a dear young lady to me, whose feet were just about going down into the swellings of Jordan: "I have given too much thought to the subject of dress. I became so critical that what a person wore was the first thing I noticed; and the least superfluous thing annoyed me so much that whatever they might say did me no good." The censorious spirit was all gone now, and perfect love and peace crowned the sufferer as she met the last enemy—Death.

Yet the question, "What shall we wear?" has its proper place as much as what shall we eat and drink. These three things are essential to the body—these "temples of the Holy Ghost"—for every Christian has the charge of one of these temples, and only one. We cannot take another for an infallible pattern. Even the sainted Mrs. Fletcher, the noble Christian woman, whose memory we all love and revere, may have been mistaken.

We could not with the light of today, unveiling the fearful sin of intemperance, engage in any way in the manufacture of beer—one of the swiftest sliding places to a drunkard's hell.

We have the most profound reverence for the ministry; but when the eloquent Rev. ——, D. D., removed a tobacco quid from his mouth, to tell his wife she must remove the rosebud from her bonnet, because it wasn't consistent, the divine word seemed to be a far better guide than even the doctor of divinity! That says, "Let your holy women adorn themselves;" but the adorning was the hidden jewel, sparkling through the eye and falling from the lips of those who cherish the Holy One as an abiding guest.

If all the life and actions be guided by this Heavenly Teacher a proper and becoming style of dress will be a natural consequence. We should not violate conscience; and by careful study and prayer we should avoid those morbid conditions of conscience, where, because anything is modern, it must of necessity be sinful, and dress must be old-fashioned to be consistent. What reason is there in this? The oldest fashions were new once, and will be new again. Why court observation by a singular style of dress? Is not the "modest apparel," which avoids extremes and does not attract notice, better?

In regard to ornaments, plain jewelry is an offense to most ladies; and a heart, burning with the love of Christ, loves to consecrate all to him that has any value. The loving Christian woman would rather win a jewel from the mire of sin, and wear it as a star in the crown of her rejoicing in heaven, than to wear a coronet of diamonds. Will she waste the wealth God has intrusted her with the responsibility of using, in the purchase of mere ornaments, when the cry of thousands perishing for the bread of life comes on every breeze?

If all our gifts are sanctified, taste will also be sanctified, and we shall, without diverting our thoughts from more important subjects, array ourselves in modest apparel, fitting for Christian women who seek to follow those things that are "pure, lovely and of good report."—Methodist Home Journal.

FAULT-FINDING WITH CHILDREN.

Children are more hurt by indiscriminate, thoughtless fault-finding than by any other thing. Often a child has all the sensitiveness and all the susceptibility of a grown person added to the faults of childhood. Nothing about him is right as yet; he is immature and faulty at all points, and everybody feels at perfect liberty to criticise him right and left, above and below, till he takes refuge in callous hardiness or irritable moroseness.

A bright, noisy boy rushes in from school, eager to tell his mother something he has on his heart, and number one cries out:

"Oh, you have left the door open! I do wish you wouldn't always leave the door open! And do look at the mud on your feet! How many times must I tell you to wipe your feet?"

"Now, then, you have thrown your cap on the sofa again. When will you learn to hang it up?"

"Don't put your slate there; that's not the place for it."

"How dirty your hands are! What have you been doing?"

"Don't sit in that chair; you break the spring bouncing."

"Mercy! how your hair looks! Do go up stairs and comb it."

"There, if you haven't torn the braid all off your coat! Dear me, what a boy!"

"Don't speak so loud; your voice goes through my head."

"I want to know, Jim, if it was you that broke up that barrel that I have been saving for brown flour?"

"I believe it was you, Jim, that hacked the side of my razor."

"Jim's been writing at my desk, and blotted three sheets of the best paper."

Now the question is, if any of the grown people of the family had to run the gauntlet of a string of criticisms on themselves equally true to those that salute unlucky Jim, would they be any better natured about it than he is? No; but they are grown-up people; they have rights that others are bound to respect. Everybody cannot tell them exactly what he thinks about everything they do. If every one did, would there not be terrible reactions?—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

DOES THE GROWTH OF GRAPES AND WINE HELP TO DECREASE THE USE OF ARDENT SPIRITS?—A very important acknowledgment comes from the editor of the Santa Clara Valley Agriculturist, who confesses grape-growing does not help the cause of temperance:

"We were once inclined to favor the wine interests of this State, as tending to decrease the use of ardent spirits. But fifteen years of close study and observation have thoroughly convinced us that wine is an insidious enemy. Its victims are too often the thoughtless youth of both sexes, and it staffs on the road to ruin many with a fair prospect, who might, but for its blight of moral obligations, become useful and happy men and women. It is the first round not in the ladder to fame, but to the lower defile of degradation and disgrace. Regarding it thus now, can we but denounce it?

"The term wine-growing has become so common that one can seldom take up an agricultural paper without seeing it; as though wine-making was a legitimate agricultural avocation! Should the farmer who raises barley be called a lager-beer grower, or the one who sows rye a whisky-grower, there might be some consistency in this use of the term 'wine-growing.' But wine is not an agricultural production. It does not exist in Nature. It may be made from grapes and some other sorts of useful fruits. So may other extracts and poisons.

"The wine business may be as 'profitable' as the beer or whisky business; but we have statistics showing that here, as well as elsewhere, 'wine is a mocker'—that for every ten that flourish in the business of wine-making five hundred are out of pocket, and at least fifty are forever ruined."

A GENTLEMAN was describing to Douglas Jerrold the story of his courtship and marriage—how his wife had been brought up in a convent, and was on the point of taking the vail when his presence burst upon her enraptured sight, and she accepted him as her husband. Jerrold listened to the end of the story, and he quietly remarked: "She simply thought you better than nun."

IT IS A great guilt in any man to allow what mental faculties he may possess to become rusty from disuse, or to submit them implicitly to another.

IT IS now a serious question whether the women's rights women will not, when they get the power, put a stop to the mails.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A VERY important measure was adopted at a recent meeting of the Dublin Diocesan Synod. It was determined to "open a fund, and invite subscriptions for the maintenance of parochial schools in which the Holy Scriptures shall be taught daily to every child attending." No parochial school, therefore, can be placed in connection with the national board. The parochial schools must be denominational. A motion to leave it optional with teachers, "to give religious instruction only to those children whose parents desired it," was negatived.

THE California Advocate claims that the management of the San Francisco Book Depository has been very economical and wise. The business property cost the Concern in New York less than $8,000. Its present value is between $35,000 and $40,000. The General Conference have from the first appropriated $25,000 for the support of the Advocate, making the total cost of paper and building $33,000, which is fully equaled by the value. The establishment has realized since 1863, in rents and in the saving of rent, $13,470, which have been applied to the expenses of the business.

THE Moravian Almanac for 1872 gives an interesting historical sketch of the Church of the United Brethren, its faith and practice, mode of government, etc. This denomination has a college and theological seminary at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, under its care, besides several academies and seminaries. These institutions have twenty-two thousand volumes in their libraries. Their church buildings are valued at $1,000,000. The income of the United Missions Department for the year 1870 was $88,048. The whole amount received has been expended. This statement represents only about one-third of the total cost of missionary operations, which is estimated at nearly $300,000.

THE order of deaconesses is growing in the English Church. The Bishop of Ely, at a recent diocesan conference, spoke in the highest terms of this kind of service by women, while he withheld his approval from the sisterhoods. What he desired to see was a flourishing institution for the training of deaconesses. The Dean of Chester has issued a paper setting forth the relations of the bishop, the incumbent of the parish, and the deaconess' institution, and suggesting certain rules for the guidance of these women in their work. Among these it is suggested: 1, that no one be admitted as a deaconess without careful previous preparation, both technical and religious; 2, that a deaconess should wear a dress which is at once simple and distinctive; 3, that she should aim at constant progress in religious knowledge; 4, that she should not drop her surname.

THE receipts of the A. B. C. F. M., for October, were $29,050.12; for the two months of September and October, $44,648.61; of the A. H. M. S. for October, $19,722.35; of the A. M. A., $9,370.42; of the General Missionary Committee (Home and Foreign) of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, $66,354.95, and the debt of this last society, October 31, 1871, was $11,676.90. Its annual meeting has just been held in New York, and $245,303.12 was appropriated for the year 1872 for foreign missionary work, with $442,400 for home work.... The American Seamen's Friend Society received in October $3,249.71; and sent out, besides its other work, fifty-seven ships' libraries—thirty-seven new and twenty refitted.... The American and Foreign Christian Union received $2,596.30 in October, and the American Baptist Missionary Union (Foreign) $10,385.83.... The American Board has appropriated $410,000 for its general work during 1872.

THE GERMAN BAPTISTS.—The Western Conference of German Baptists held their anniversary meetings in Cleveland, Ohio, a few weeks ago. Some of the reports from the churches were very bright, showing that the Lord had been blessing them abundantly. But some churches have passed through great tribulations. About two hundred have been added during the year by baptism, nearly as many by letter, making the present number five thousand five hundred and thirty-seven, a net increase of one hundred and eleven. Home missions are the great object for which the Conference was organized, and consequently much time was devoted to this subject. Ten missionaries have been in part supported during the year, having received from $100 to $200 each. The question as to how to induce the brethren of the Home Mission to do more in aiding us in this great work was discussed at length, and committees appointed to lay the subject before those good brethren.

FEW of our readers, says the Protestant Churchman, are probably aware of the existence in this city of a society called the Catholic Union of New York, formed on the recommendation of the archbishop, the funds of which are to be devoted to the defense of the church and her institutions; no money to be expended without his approval. The Pope has urged union, and this is the way his wish is to be carried out in this city, and doubtless every other. Members are to pay a dollar for the year, which will entitle them to attend two lectures, and to three solemn masses for members of the Union and one requiem mass for deceased defenders of the church. The faithful will be canvassed by gentlemen appointed by the pastors of congregations.

EVIDENCES of increased Protestant influence in France continue. Some are negative, as, for example, the fact that the festival of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary was celebrated this year with very little splendor, and with a great falling off in the number of processions. Scripture readers are more numerous, and a Bible woman in Marseilles declares that "the soldiers are insatiable for tracts and New Testaments, which are sometimes eagerly awaited, money in hand, by the men when they expect her coming. The gospel is liked by the great majority; some are serious, having received good impressions in Switzerland or in Germany. Ignorance is deplorable, however, on religious subjects. The priests are rejected, and, generally, the gospel with them; but they like to hear that Jesus is their friend." The most remarkable illustration of the reaction is afforded by the complexion of the French National Assembly. A Paris letter in the Presbyterian says: "Nearly seventy Protestant deputies have attained seats—a larger number than was returned to any former Assembly, and exceeding, three or four times over, the proportion of Protestants to Roman Catholics in the population generally. There are only seven lay members of the Presbyterial Council of the Reformed Church in Paris, and of these four have been elected to the Assembly. There is a larger ecclesiastical body, called the Consistory of the Reformed Church of Paris, in which the Presbyterial Council is included. Among the Parliamentary members five have been elected, as are also M. de Pressensee and other well-known Protestants."

THE English Churchmen have been holding a congress at Nottingham, which appears, from the reports, to have been a very successful meeting. The inaugural address was delivered by the Bishop of Lincoln, and was a review of the progress of the Christian faith during the last three hundred years. Papers were read by several gentlemen on education, comparing the national system of England with the systems of America and the Continental nations. The view most strongly insisted on was that religious teaching must be kept up at all hazards in church schools. The question of freedom of worship and the offertory system came up for discussion. The abolition of pew-rents was strongly urged by many speakers, though there were voices on the other side. "The Present Relation of the Church to the State" was the subject of a paper by Canon Gregory, which led to some discussion. The main thesis was that the State had no right to adjudicate in church matters or to interfere in her disputes. The section of the High Church party which advocates disestablishment was, however, in a very small minority. When the subject of the "promotion of a deeper unity within the church and among Christians generally" came to be discussed there was some excitement. When Mr. Bayley alluded to the recent episcopal ministrations in Scotch churches, and expressed the hope that their "tentative" efforts in direction of union with the Presbyterians ought to be followed up, there was a perfect storm of disapproval from the High Church portion of the audience, and as loud a demonstration of approval on the other side, which was again and again renewed when the speaker sat down. At one session the subject was papal concordats, papal infallibility, etc. Mr. Ffoulkes, the well-known "revort," read one paper on this subject, and Mr. Beresford Hope gave interesting information from his own personal acquaintance with Dr. Dollinger. Among other subjects discussed were church endowments, the education of the clergy, the duty of the church with regard to the moral state of society, and with regard to the deepening of the spiritual life among clergy and people. The Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Manchester made good speeches to a meeting of workingmen; and there was one delightful evening devoted to hymnology and church music, with illustrations. Altogether it seems to have been a good, hearty, practical Christian meeting.—Independent.

SPIRITUAL IDOLATRY.

The grosser aspects of pagan superstition are perhaps approached in any worship of the forms and symbols of the Christian faith. Houses, altars, crosses, statues and pictures are the objects of reverence, and are as much adored as were the images among the heathen. We may, however, be clear of the pagan and of the ritualistic, and yet be essentially given to idolatry. There is an intense idolatry of the heart, where all material objects of veneration are discarded as absurd and wicked. When John closes an epistle with the solemn admonition, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols," he was not aiming so much at paganism as at that more subtle and inward tendency to place the affections on something besides God. Mariolatry, saint worship, and reverence for gowns, altars and holy water were too much like paganism to be immediately grafted upon the simple and spiritual worship of Christianity. Some danger there was from this direction, and from intimate contact and long association with gentile superstitions, but the greater peril was from an idolatry which dispenses with all material forms, and which recognizes the spirituality of all true worship.

Mammon is, by the Savior, put in opposition to God, just as Baal and Ashteroth are by the prophets; but Mammon has neither ritual nor temple, and his service is attended by no superstitious sanctities. The love of the world is put in strong contrast with the love of God, so that "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." The prophet was surprised when, by the guidance of the Spirit, he dug through the wall of the court, and saw displayed within "every form of creeping things, and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the house of Israel portrayed upon the walls round about." Every man "in the chambers of his imagery" was, with censer in hand, enveloped in a cloud of incense. Near by, at the gate of the Lord's house, "sat women weeping for Tammuz," and between the porch and the altar were men with their backs toward the temple, "and they worshiped the sun toward the East." How many are the secret idolatries of the soul, and how near may they not come to the hours and services of the sanctuary? Every man may have "the chambers of his imagery," he may have the walls hung with abominable things, and he himself wrapped in the incense of earthly and carnal desires. What we have set up in the place of Christ may not be altogether apparent to ourselves.—Wealth, honor, ambition, the idolatry of science, or the gratification of the lower propensities, have full possession. It is perhaps inordinate rather than base affections which have usurped the place of God. The tender and most beautiful attributes, and the refined and noble qualities of humanity are so perverted that the creature is exalted above the Creator. Parental and conjugal love are holy in themselves if a higher and more spiritual affection pervades and sanctifies them. But they may be so absorbing and godless as to be an offense and an obstruction to a life of faith and communion with heaven. Covetousness is the degradation and abuse of a principle which is good in itself; but as covetousness it is base and mean, defiling the soul, and arraying it in opposition to all spiritual influences. Paul brands covetousness with the name of idolatry. The essence of idolatry is in it, and its baneful power is more fearfully felt than the superstitions of heathendom. The Parsee is nobler in his idolatry, worshiping the element of life and purity as it burns and flames in the heavenly bodies. Job is careful to clear himself of all: "If I have made gold my hope, or have said to the fine gold, Thou art my confidence; if I rejoiced because my wealth was great, and because mine hand had gotten much; if I beheld the sun when it shined, or the moon walking in brightness." The idolatry of fashion is perhaps the union of all the elements of worldliness, in which wealth, position, influence, pride, vanity and the supreme love of pleasure are ever present. The golden image which Nebuchadnezzar set up in the plain of Dura was nothing to this, except as a literal illustration, or as the type of what modern society has erected. Multitudes have no other religion than this devotion to fashion. They swing its censers, move amidst the smoke and odors of its incense, and bow absolutely and unreservedly at its shrines. We know of no idolatry more captivating, more cruelly enslaving, more destructive than this. It enervates the body, starves the mind, and utterly extinguishes the last spark of spirituality. Self is doubtless the axis of this, and perhaps of every phase of spiritual idolatry. The lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life have their center in self, as of the world, and not of the Father.

How far these various idols of the heart intrude upon the spirit of the believer is often most difficult to determine. They preoccupy the unbelieving soul, and drive away the Savior from the threshold, where he stands knocking for admission. In proportion as they gain a foothold is the Savior dethroned and the Holy Spirit grieved. Jehovah has declared himself to be "a jealous God," and that he will not give his glory to another. There is nothing that touches him so sensitively as this double sin of forsaking him and of prostrating ourselves at the feet of earthly images. Besides being a calamity to ourselves, it is an open defiance and insult to him, that we have forsaken "the fountain of living waters" for "the broken cisterns" of the world. It is an aspect of sin more obnoxious to infinite purity and love than any other, and against which the anger of God burns most fiercely. He must have the whole heart, and he insists on being the supreme pursuit and happiness of his creatures. There is perhaps little danger of falling into the grosser superstitions of paganism, and all our rational and spiritual intuitions revolt at the idea of adoring the mere symbols of the true faith. But the idolatry of the heart may be in us, and a more degrading and guilty thing than bowing down to stocks and stones.

The strength of this idolatry equals the difficulty of its exposure. Nothing but the Spirit can let us into the chambers of imagery, and reveal the pictures which hang upon the walls, and the forms which fill the niches of the soul. To part with these objects, to consent to their destruction, to give them up, is the severest trial. "Ephraim is joined to idols; let him alone." Thus it is with these inward idols. So strongly are we united to them, so deeply are we imbued with the love of them, that we are in danger of being left to their worship, and to the ruin which they are sure to bring. Lust, selfishness, pleasure and avarice become too strong, at length, to be overcome. The chains which they are forging are more and more difficult to break. Wedded to the objects of desire, and to the brilliant but illusive charms of pleasure, the bonds become firmer with indulgence, until infinite mercy and forbearance are constrained to give up the soul as lost. To rid ourselves of idols is the first thing to be done, and it must be done quickly if we would do it at all. If it can not be otherwise, let them be broken and crumbled by the severe but loving hand of God. Let the thunderbolt prune and scathe and shatter, if nothing else will suffice. To keep ourselves from idols is the important sequel. Guard the heart from every intruder, and shut out everything which would rival Christ. Only the utmost vigilance and the sternest watchfulness, and all the helpfulness of divine grace, suffice to keep the soul from the dismal stain and the foul defilement.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The twenty-sixth session of this Conference opened at Monroe, January 3, 1872. Bishop Kavanaugh was early at his post, and conducted the religious exercises, singing, as usual, the time-honored hymn:

And are we yet alive,
And see each other's face?

The attendance of preachers is unusually good. Not many laymen are present, but of those in attendance we are glad to note such working men as J. Harvey Brigham, William H. Foster, T. C. Standerfer, Hansel P. Wells, Thomas M. Mann, Wesley Guthrie and others. Rev. C. F. Evans was elected secretary. The preachers appear in excellent health and spirits, and however the financial reports may be, look as if they had been well taken care of. On the first night of the session the Conference sermon was preached by Rev. N. A. Cravens, after which the Lord's Supper was administered. The sermon was a strong and clear presentation of the gospel as the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; and the communion was an occasion of great interest. Our new church, and we believe the first Methodist church ever built in Monroe, will be an honor to our people when completed. It is of brick, of very neat and tasteful architecture, and of spacious dimensions. Bro. C. F. Evans has done a great work here in the building of this handsome edifice, and has erected a monument which, we trust, will tell of his energy and devotion for generations to come. The recent fire in Monroe was a very serious calamity. The greater part of the business district, embracing many fine brick stores, well stocked with goods, was utterly swept away. Notwithstanding the disaster, the Conference was well entertained, conjointly by the generous people of Monroe and Trenton. The people of Vicksburg, headed by Rev. J. T. Heard and Dr. Marshall, hearing of the fire, sent a proposal to entertain the Conference, if it should be found impracticable to meet at Monroe. This act of generous and considerate kindness was responded to on the part of the Conference by a communication of thanks, which was adopted by a rising and unanimous vote.

W. F. Easterling, transfer from the Louisville Conference, and S. H. Cooper, from the Alabama Conference, were present. We have this year but three transfers. Herman Eber, Christian Keener, Thomas Mullett and Samuel H. Schroeder were admitted on trial—choice men, and promising much for the church. J. A. G. Rabe, Joseph Gorton Miller, Richard H. Adair, James M. Franklin and J. Lane Borden were received into full connection. Two preachers have died during the year—William G. McGanghey, a faithful and effective preacher, lamented by his brethren; and Thos. Samford, the venerable and the beloved, who fell asleep this year, at a good old age, full of comfort and ripe in grace. The Rev. C. G. Andrews, president of Centenary College, was in attendance, making a fine impression, and ably representing this important institution. Rev. J. E. Cobb, a member of the Conference and president of Homer College, represented that institution, delivering an impressive address on the subject of education. We are glad to learn that the college is growing in all the elements of substantial prosperity. The efficient agent, Rev. Thomas J. Upton, has raised during the year about $15,000. This is a good year's work, considering the financial embarrassments of the country. Mansfield Female College was represented as in a living condition, and most efficiently conducted by President Stuart. The report of the Committee on Education was a well-matured paper, and we were glad to see the profound interest felt, and the earnest discussion excited by it.

The report on the subject of church literature was able and comprehensive, and evidently prepared with care by the chairman of the committee, Rev. John Wilkinson. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE received favorable mention, and the Conference resolved to put a copy in every Methodist family in its bounds. We have great hopes that the resolution will be heartily carried out by the brethren during the year. The interests of the Publishing House at Nashville and New Orleans were well represented and advocated by R. J. Harp. The Depository at New Orleans was cordially indorsed by the Conference, and we believe that a new impetus has been given to the sale and circulation of our church literature. The Southern Review received the attention of the Conference, and is deservedly popular. Bishop Kavanaugh and others made strong appeals in its behalf, and the members generally subscribed for it.

The report of the Joint Board of Finance was particularly gratifying. The superannuates and widows and orphans are paid in full, and a surplus of $600 in the hands of the board. The Bishops' claim was also fully met, and a considerable balance on hand. We were sorry to hear of deficiencies on the salaries of the effective preachers. A balance due on the old missionary debt of $210 was promptly raised in the Conference room. On account of the fire and other circumstances, it was deemed expedient to omit the collection at the missionary anniversary. A good talk from Bishop Kavanaugh and a sermon from Bro. Tudor made it an occasion of great profit and interest to a large congregation. Three services were held at the Methodist church on Sunday. Bishop Kavanaugh discoursed in the morning, to a house packed, in his usual rich and unctuous manner, after which a collection of $1,200 was raised toward liquidating the debt on the church. At three o'clock Rev. James E. Cobb preached an able sermon, and every way worthy of the president of Homer College; and at night our Bro. Mathews concluded the day's means of grace with one of his powerful and profitable gospel appeals.

We must make mention of Trenton, a pleasant and growing town on the opposite side of the river from Monroe, and two miles above. Many of the preachers were most hospitably entertained there. We were greatly pleased with the congregation in Trenton on Sunday morning, and saw many indications of the successful labors of the popular pastor, Rev. J. Lane Borden. The large number of youth at the communion table moved and gratified us much. His Sunday school is a power in the community, and more completely absorbs it than any school we know. We heard Bishop Miles, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church of America, in our church at Trenton in the afternoon. The Bishop is stout in person, dresses neatly, and wears the clerical white cravat. He speaks deliberately and with propriety, and handles his text well. He has organized a promising Conference for Louisiana, with thirty-five members to begin with, and at this first session has ordained six deacons and three elders. The day at Trenton was concluded by a sermon from Bro. Tudor, whose illustrations there and in Monroe were spoken of in the highest terms of commendation. Up to this writing (Monday morning) the session has been a delightful one, harmonious, and characterized by an excellent spirit. The increase of membership must be considerable, as large accessions have been reported from many of the works. Judging from the number of readmissions, transfers, admissions on trial and available supplies, we think the work will be more effectively manned this year than at any time since the war.

GLORIFY GOD.

To glorify God is certainly the purpose of our being, and in this manner our highest happiness is secured. God requires not our glorification to add to his essential glory. If the end of our existence is simply to show forth his glory, then it might seem that there was a selfish end in creation. God is essentially "glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders." The Infinite is in no sense affected by the finite. To glorify him is to raise one's self above the low and selfish that is engendered in us by sin. It is an act in keeping with the higher aspirations of our being—it is putting the heart in accord with nature's varied phase, which yields its legitimate homage of glory.

When Christ, sitting upon the wild colt, made his triumphal entry into Jerusalem, the people, in exultant strains, glorified him, saying: "Peace in heaven, and glory in the highest." The serious and dignified Pharisees were much disturbed, and said: "Master, rebuke thy disciples. And he answered and said unto them, I tell you that if these should hold their peace the stones would immediately cry out." Paul writes of the Galatians that they "glorified God in me" when they saw me who had been the bold and defiant persecutor, now the humble and ardent apostle of Christianity. Nature has voices which speak forth his honor. "The heavens declare the glory of God, the firmament showeth forth his handiwork." The rolling spheres of the firmament, in their ceaseless, noiseless revolutions, glorify God. The earth, with its herbage, animals and landscapes, is engaged in the same sublime employment—glorifying God. I passed to-day a house of birds—each in a small cage—each chanting the same chorus—each in his sphere glorifying God. How the heart was made to swell in the same unison! I saw a small aquarium in which several little fishes sported—each seemed employed in the happy work of glorifying God. I have visited the crowded thoroughfare, seen the gay throng in the place of pleasure, seen works of fine art and mechanical skill, and contrivances in the useful inventious, yet in every instance how full of self-glorification is man, denying to God that "glory which is alone his due." Man, the most recreant of all, refuse his Maker glory! How fallen! When we behold "God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself," proud man is humbled—he recognizes himself so vile as to lead him to renounce himself, his glory, and glorify God. The illustrious Paul, viewing this subject with a full heart, uses that remarkable declaration: "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." He gloried not in his learning or logic or zeal, or his deep experience in the things of God, but he gloried "in the cross of Christ." More: he gloried not in his deliverances or escapes, or "vision unseen" by others and "words unutterable," but he gloried in "his infirmities"—i. e., that he was nothing, but God was all and in all.

On the morn of creation, when nature, in virgin beauty, stood in robes of spotless purity before its Maker, the fresh and spontaneous incense offered was: Glory to God! When Moses, the man of God, tarried in the dreadful mount, awaiting the pleasure of God to announce the law, he prayed, "I beseech thee, show me thy glory," and the Lord "made his glory to pass before him." When King Solomon dedicated the temple to the Most High, the "glory of the Lord filled the house." When angels announced the advent of Messias, it was in strains befitting the occasion: "Glory to God in the highest." When the one hundred and twenty waited for the outpouring of the Spirit, the glory of God, "as the sound of a rushing, mighty wind, filled the house." When sublunary realities are wound to a close, then glorified saints, shall, with harps and tongues attuned to heavenly melodies, sing: "Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins, in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father, to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen." "The four and twenty elders shall fall down before him that sitteth on the throne, and worship him that liveth forever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying: Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created."

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE COUNTRY OF THE DWARFS. By Paul Du Chaillu. New York: Harper & Bros., publishers, 1872.

Du Chaillu rather wins upon us as we become better acquainted with him. He is a true traveler, and has a fascinating way of telling about his sights and adventures. He exhibits great simplicity and kindliness of heart, and commends himself especially to the young. The present volume is capital for children. Du Chaillu found a race in Africa of small folk, not averaging more than about four feet in height. But get the book and read for yourselves. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for January has unusual attractions in the way of illustrations. In its table of contents are: Scrambles Among the Alps; Christmas Carol; Shadows of a Christmas Fire; Our New Port Storm Signals; Aytown; Types of Castilian Vagrancy; A Russian Family Wolf Hunt, and other articles.

HANNAH is another of Miss Mulock's works, published by Harper & Bros. This uniform edition of Miss Mulock's works is handsomely bound and cheap. Her writings are among the few in fiction that we can generally recommend. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

HEARTH AND HOME of December 30, besides its usual features of interest, is laden with a wonderful wealth of Christmas pictures and stories. The children's department is very fine indeed.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL of December 30 is a splendid number. It is abundantly illustrated, and excellent in the variety and quality of its articles.

SEARCH FOR THE KEY.

The soul-winner is not a quack; he has not got some nostrum. He makes a careful diagnosis. If a man is going to peg shoes, he puts his three years at driving pegs. But anybody can win souls. Can they? Men who attempt to win souls try to find out where the difficulty is. Then he is a long way oftentimes from winning the soul to God. I know there is some key to every heart, and I must search until I find it out. I found the key to a man's heart once in a mother's prayer, back years ago. When I came to examine him, he took an old letter, blistered over with tears, and said he: "Dear friends, look at that letter; I have blistered it with tears for years; it has been the only avenue to my heart, and accidentally I let it out one day, and the Holy Ghost trapped me." Find out how the Holy Spirit is dealing, and seek to be a co-worker with the Spirit of God.

There is an idol in almost every heart that has got to come down before Jesus Christ. Go down with me to the river, on a bitterly cold evening. A young woman with whom I had been laboring for years, and could not find out what it was keeping her from Christ, was sitting by a coal fire, at eight o'clock on a dark winter's night. "Strange you should come to-night, while I have been thinking so much of you to-night." I saw the heart was tender. Oh! if I could only find out what keeps her away. "Mr. Wells, can a person be a Christian and dance?" I said: "Yes, but you can't. I don't care what it is, a bargain with Christ won't do." "Well," says she, "I would like to be a Christian if I could dance." "You cannot; you cannot make a bargain with Jesus Christ. I see the difficulty now; you want to go on in a course inconsistent with this Christian life." "I believe that is it. If he would only help me!" "He will." "How do you know?" "Try." We knelt together beside a chair and prayed. "Now you ask." "I cannot ask. I don't know how to pray." "Try, try; just ask, if it is only for help." She prayed in three or four burning words, when she rose and said: "I would not dance for anything."—Ralph Wells.

SATAN will assume that form and employ that instrument which is most likely to captivate and accomplish his purpose: "Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light."

Obituaries.

DIED, at the residence of his son, in Mobile county, Alabama, December 24, 1871, EDMOND HESTER, in the eighty-ninth year of his age.

The deceased was a man of modest piety, and had cultivated a most submissive disposition, not murmuring at the pain which he must have endured during his last illness. Our sympathies are indeed drawn out for the bereaved children and grandchildren; but at the same time we share their consolation of hope that our friend is with Jesus.

W. L. F.-B.

DIED, on the fifteenth of December, 1871, near Arizona, Claiborne parish, Louisiana, little DATUS, son of Eli and Mary A. Harris, aged four years, seven months and eighteen days.

The occasion of his death was indeed a sad one. He was a bright child, full of life and curiosity, and on the evening before his death, being at his father's cotton gin while it was running, got his hands accidentally entangled among the saws, and in an instant both arms were almost entirely mutilated. He lived until three o'clock next morning, when the young and tender nature, unable to resist the fatal shock, calmly sank in death.

Little Datus was a lovely child, and won the affections of all who knew him. His parents entertained fond hopes for his future in the world—intended to train him for the service of his Heavenly Father, with the hope that he might be called to the work of the ministry.

JOSEPH W. MEDLOCK.

DIED, at East Pascagoula, October 8, 1871, ANNA LAURA, youngest daughter of the Rev. J. W. and Mrs. Martha Williams, aged five years, five months and twenty-seven days.

Our little Auntie was truly a magnet in the household. She possessed a mind of more than ordinary mold. She was astonishingly susceptible of religious impressions.

A short time previous to her illness she expressed a desire to go to God, where, she said, she could see an infant sister who died a few years ago. A few days before her death she remarked to her mother that she would be glad the tidal wave would come, that she could go up to heaven. Her mother said: "Then you would be separated from me." She answered: "You would soon come to me."

Her spirit passed away so quietly that those who surrounded her couch could not discern the time of its escape. Thus sweetly fell asleep, one of earth's loveliest ones—a bud nipped from the garden below and transplanted in the garden above, where in immortal freshness it will forever bloom. Oh! blessed hope our holy religion affords, that the good will meet again where separation is never known, and sorrow and trouble are no more.

J. W. WILLIAMS.

DIED, near Lockhart Station, Lauderdale county, Mississippi, October 29, 1871, Sister ALVA A. PERKINS, wife of Bro. E. J. Perkins, in the twentieth year of her age.

Sister Perkins was born November 3, 1851; professed religion in early life; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1870, and lived a consistent member of the same from that time until her death.

Sister Perkins, though young in years, was mature in her attachments to the church. She possessed a strong mind, a warm sympathy and a loving heart. She loved the church and ministry. They found a hearty welcome at her home, and shared in her hospitality. She was raised by pious parents, and was united in marriage to one of our best men—a Christian gentleman whose heart, hands and pocket-book are in unison in meeting the wants of the ministers and the various claims of the church. Were it not that we know the "Judge of all the earth does right," and that "all things work together for good to them that love God," we would be constrained to say, It is a pity that this brother and sister—so loving, and promising so much usefulness to the church and community—should be so soon separated in this life. But, thank God, it is not final. They will meet again, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death can never come.

I had the privilege of visiting Sister Perkins several times during her illness, and found her calm. It is true I did not see her in her last hours, but I am informed that she died as she lived, in peace with God and all the world.

She left two small babes, a devoted husband and a large circle of relatives to mourn her departure. But, blessed be God, their loss is her gain.

Sister Perkins is not dead—she has only retired for a season from this house of clay, to be reunited again on the resurrection morning. May her bereaved husband and tender babes, together with her dear friends, so live as to meet her again on the glorious plains of everlasting deliverance.

SILVER-TIPPED SHOES.—Shoes are an important item in the expense of clothing children, as every parent will understand. They invariably wear out their shoes at the toe first, and not infrequently before the other parts are a quarter worn. Children's shoes with silver or copper tips never wear out at the toe, and last twice as long. Remember this.—N. Y. Post.

The Child's Corner.

A LITTLE THING.

It was such a little thing—
Only a light twist of crimson string;
But 'twas stealing, all the same;
And the child who took it knew
That she told what was untrue,
Just to screen herself from blame.
First a theft, and then a lie—
Both recorded up on high.

It was but one little word,
Softly spoken, scarcely heard—
Uttered by a careless breath;
But it dared to take in vain
God's most high and holy name,
Provoking wrath and death.
Soon the lips, once fresh and fair,
Opened but to curse and swear.

It was but one little blow—
Passion's sudden overflow—
Scarcely heeded in its fall;
But, once loosed, the fiery soul
Would no longer brook control;
Laws it spurned, defied them all.
Till the hands—love-clasped in vain—
Were the murderer's crimson stain.

Ah! it is the foxes small,
Slyly climbing o'er the wall,
That destroy the tender vines;
And it is the spark of fire,
Brightening, growing, curling higher,
That across the forest shines.
Just so, step by step, does sin,
If unchecked, a triumph win.

ON THE TREE-TOP.

BY PATIENCE WAITE.

All summer long the leaves of the great Maple Tree had laughed and chatted and danced to the music of the wind. But when September came they laughed no more; and in the place of the merry talk there was a sound of murmuring.

"I am very hungry," wailed one leaf to another.

"So am I, and thirsty, too," was rustled in quick reply.

"Oh dear, so we all are," sighed a dozen others.

"Oh yes, oh yes, and so thirsty," whispered the rest in chorus.

The whole tree was in commotion by this time; from every branch and twig came sounds of discontent.

"We have been half starved lately; no wonder we are losing our strength and fine color; we shall be as brown as russet apples before long."

"Old Mother Trunk is to blame for it! She ought to keep us in food; she is a stingy old thing."

"May be she has nothing to give us; may be the poor old mother is hungry herself," said a dear little leaf, patting the old Trunk tenderly.

"Nonsense! She has plenty of ways of getting what she wants, and everything that we want too," cried a pert leaf, standing straight up and talking loud. "It is her business to attend to the housekeeping and keep us in food and send it up to us. She has a thousand little brown rootlets working away underground who have nothing to do but to be slaves to old Mother Trunk."

"Oh, she is growing old and lazy," said one.

"Or she is tired," said another.

"Perhaps she is out of rain water," said a third.

"If that is the trouble it won't last long," called out a weather-wise cluster from the topmost bough. "The sky is full of clouds, the rain will be here soon; let us be patient and wait."

Then all the leaves looked up; they could see the black clouds covering the sky as if marshaling their hosts for battle.

"Come quickly; oh, come quickly," cried the leaves, holding up a thousand eager hands to the sky; and the rain came at last, but not as it came in the merry months of May and June, when the warm drops pattered their gay measures on the sweet new leaves. Now it came cold and heavy from the gloomy clouds, and dashed in sullen mood against the great tree. A shiver ran through all the branches, and the leaves shuddered at the dismal drenching. The rain brought no comfort to the unhappy leaves.

"Oh, dear," they moaned. "How strange we feel, how heavy and helpless;" and they cried out with bitter reproaches to old Mother Trunk:

"You are starving us to death, you cruel old mother. The earth is rich and bountiful; the clouds have emptied their treasure into her lap; the sun shines golden and warm upon us. You only are cruel, idle mother, and your work-people, the sappers and miners, work no more as they did in the days when we were young."

Thus the Trunk made answer, speaking slowly and placidly: "I am weary, my children. I know not why; but I am weary always now-a-days, and my work-people are weary too. I cannot tell why, my children, but it happens every year, after the summer days are gone, that we cease to work, and have a long and blessed sleep."

"And must we perish?" cried the leaves. "Oh, dear old mother, remember that we are your children. All summer long we have loved you and clung to you and clothed you with beauty, and we have been so happy. Oh, do not let us die!"

But no answer came to their pleading, except a sleepy yawn from Mother Trunk. Then the leaves were filled with anger; they called her idle and selfish, deceitful and cruel, and they stamped with thousands of little feet upon her and spurned the idle mother. But she did not care; she was fast asleep.

The Frost King came out of the North that night and rode upon the air.

"You are looking sad and heavy," he said to the great Maple Tree.

The drooping leaves looked up and they saw the strange and beautiful form of the Frost King all sparkling with crystal gems.

"I have come," he said, "to give you joy for your sadness and brightest colors instead of your faded green." So saying, he stooped low, his cold breath passed over the leaves and then he was gone.

The leaves shivered at first. But slowly there began to be a strange and feverish life burning in their veins, and as day after day passed by the great Maple Tree flamed out like a beacon against the autumn sky.

The leaves flaunted their bright colors for many days; but the red fever was burning their life away, and the yellow pallor of decay came slowly on; one by one they fluttered slowly to the earth, a dry, rustling, discolored mass, which the autumn wind tossed scornfully to and fro.

The Maple Tree stretches its gaunt and naked old arms up to the sky, and prays, silently, hopefully for another spring time.—The Advance.

HOW NOT TO DO AN ERRAND.

George was sent to the fish market to buy a mackerel for breakfast.

"It is for this morning's breakfast, George," said his mother, "therefore be as spry as you can."

Twenty minutes would have done the errand. Twenty minutes passed—thirty—forty—fifty—fifty-five. Where is George?

George went to the market spry. The first thing which caught his eye was a big iron pot, into which a man was shoveling lobsters to be boiled—green lobsters, which came out red. That, George thought, was funny enough, and he must look; but, you see, it took time, and time that was not his. Then he thought of the mackerel and bought it. On his way home he met a small dog with a red blanket on his back. That took his eye, and he had to stop and look; and another boy stopped and looked, and they both stopped and had a bit of a talk about something else; but, you see, it took time, and time that was not his. Presently he went along and met another boy, and the other boy had something to say, and there was a bout "Whoa! whoa!" down a side street, which they both ran down just to see what the matter was with a cart and a horse at odds with each other. All this ate up the minutes.

The cook, out of all patience, ran out to the gate with her gridiron in her hand, to see what had become of the mackerel; for the coffee was waiting, and the cakes were waiting, and what was worse, the children were hungry, and the father was going off in the cars, which, like time and tide, wait for no man. At last the father had to go without his breakfast, or with only half a breakfast; and there was General Delay, with his two aids, Fretting and Grumbling, putting this well-ordered family quite out of sorts.

At last the cook at the gate spied George shuffling along, his toes one way and his eyes another; and she called him a pretty hard name, which I should not like to tell you.

The mackerel came at last, but it did not taste half as good as it would have tasted in season.

Is this the way to do an errand? Will a boy who does his work so ever be wanted? I think not.—Child's Paper.

The Farm and Garden.

NEW DISCOVERY IN PEAR BLIGHT.

In your late issue I notice an article on Pear and Apple Blight, in which reference is made to the manner in which the poison works its way downward through the bark, especially those of a gross, fleshy, texture. I experimented on a diseased Bartlett this season, as follows: About the first of August blight attacked the end of the central upright shoot of a bearing tree, which I cut off some feet below the lowest appearance of disease, and arrested its progress, so far as I can judge, in that part of the tree, new and vigorous shoots appearing at once below the point of excision.

About the middle of August it appeared on a side limb just where the present season's growth commenced, and extended rapidly downward along the old wood, leaving the new wood fresh and vigorous. I immediately ringed the limb some feet below the disease, taking out a ring of bark three-quarters of an inch wide, and awaited developments. I examined the tree today, and find that the disease has spread to the point where the bark was cut out, and has affected more or less the old wood of all the branches above the point of ringing, but below that point the bark is still smooth and of a natural color, and has no appearance of disease.

I think from this experiment that the disease is wholly in the bark, or, at least, is communicated through it, and that ringing stops the disease as effectually as cutting off the limb.

I should like to hear the result of other experiments in that line.—A. S. Cummings, Galena, Illinois.

TO DESTROY THE TOBACCO WORM.—The Louisville Courier-Journal says:

The tobacco raised in Montgomery, Butler, Warren, Preble, Darke, Miami, Green and Clark counties, Ohio, and Wayne county, Indiana, will this year, it is believed, reach forty-five thousand boxes, while last year the crop was only about twenty-five thousand boxes. Beside being a larger crop, the leaf itself is larger and finer than usual. A noticeable feature this year has been the few worms on the plants. In some places the number, which is usually legion, has been so small that it has hardly been necessary to look after them.

One reason assigned for this freedom from what is usually a dangerous pest is the cultivation of the Jamestown weed, and the use of arsenic in the blossoms of the same. The usual method is to plant the weed at intervals among the tobacco, and when the weed is in blossom to place two or three drops of a syrup made from arsenic in each flower. The miller that produces this worm takes this preparation and dies. This plan has been pursued for a year or two in the vicinity of Miamisburg, the center of the tobacco producing region, with much success, and the experiences of the present year have so clearly demonstrated its efficiency that it appears quite sure this method will come into general use.

STORING TURNIPS.—Thousands of bushels of turnips are destroyed every winter by careless storing. They are often placed in a warm cellar, and hundreds of bushels in one heap, where they become heated and rotten. They may be stored in cool cellars, particularly in the more Northern States; but no more than a half dozen bushels be put in one bin or box. Barrels are far more convenient than boxes, and hold enough for safety to the turnips. When the crop is large, they should be stored in heaps in the field, covering with straw or hay until the ground begins to freeze, then throw on some soil, leaving an airhole at the top. Make the heaps in a dry place, and gather only in dry weather, cutting off leaves and long tap-roots. There are, as a general rule, more turnips injured in winter by heat than frost, in consequence of being placed in large heaps. Twenty-five or thirty bushels are as many as it is safe to place together, and then very little protection is required. If every farmer would take due notice of how his turnips keep during winter, he would soon learn just how to manage them and prevent loss.—Tennessee Agriculturist.

CELERY IN WINTER.

In regard to the management of celery in winter the Germantown Telegraph remarks: "We pursue two modes, and find both to answer well. The first is to remove the celery to high and dry ground, dig a straight trench spade-deep, stand up a row of plants singly, then a few inches of soil, then another row, and so on until about half a dozen rows are finished, when commence another bed, and so on. The soil should be packed in firmly and banked up, so that the tops of the celery are just covered, then spank off roof-fashion to turn the rain. Over this two wide boards, nailed together, should be placed, as a security against moisture, or straw can be laid over and secured at the bottom with bean poles. Celery put away thus carefully ought to keep till May. For remember it is water, not frost, as some say, that rots celery. Frost adds to its tenderness.

"Another plan is to sink barrels into the earth, so that the tops are two or three inches below the surface, then stand them compactly full of celery, without any soil, put light covers upon them, so as to exclude all moisture, and then a couple inches of soil. By this mode, somewhat more troublesome than the other, and which we adopt for only a portion of the crop, it kept well for the last four or five years, until all was consumed, which was late in the spring.

"If preserved in the rows, it should be well banked up, the water protected against, and a covering of straw or cornfodder laid crosswise."

PARASITES.—Mr. J. H. Lintner, of the New York State Museum of Natural History, writes to the American Naturalist that the only deadly foe of the Pieris rapæ, which threatens utter destruction to the cabbage crops in this country, has probably made its appearance. He says that during September some flies were sent to him for classification, which he finds to be of the genus Pteromali, and which, in his opinion, are the Pteromali puparii, which has been very valuable in protecting the cabbage crops of Europe. His inference is that this friend of the market gardener has been imported in some unknown way, and will soon make itself manifest in attacking its prey. Nature is marvelously beneficent in providing cures for its own diseases, and it is no stretch of faith to hope that not only the cabbage pest but the potato bug will eventually be followed by some well-favored enemy, whose attacks will greatly lessen the injury which is threatened to those important crops.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

APPLE SHORT CAKE.—Pare and slice tart apples enough to fill two round pie plates, then make a crust of one teacupful of cream, salt and soda, roll an upper crust, put on and bake; when done turn bottom upward; put on sugar enough to taste; then turn again, and so on. To be eaten warm.

THE EARACHE.—Generally heat is the best remedy. Apply a warm poultice or warm oil to the ear. Rub the back of the ear with warm laudanum. In case of a fetid discharge, carefully syringe the ear with warm milk and water. In all cases keep the ear thoroughly cleansed. Relief is often given by rubbing the back of the ear with a little hartshorn and water.

PUMPKIN PIE.—Stew the pumpkin as long as possible, until the juice is all dried up; strain through the colander, and add milk and cream to a proper consistency; sweeten with half sugar and half molasses; add a little ginger; eggs are useless; flour makes them pasty, and stewing them and straining the juice and throwing it away takes off all the sweetest part of the pumpkin.

IMPORTANT HINT ABOUT THE FEET.—As the feet are kept more closely covered than any other part of the body during the day, they should be thoroughly washed and rubbed till dry every night. Impurities gather as the result of the confined perspiration, and these should be removed before sleeping. However inconvenient to do so, we repeat it, wash the feet every night.

SAUSAGE.—Housekeepers will do well to preserve the following first-rate receipe for sausage: To every twelve pounds of meat take three tablespoonfuls of salt not much heaped, three tablespoonfuls of black pepper, eight tablespoonfuls of sage and half a teaspoonful of red pepper. Good sausage is splendid with buckwheat cakes in winter, and I got this recipe from a friend whose sausage is always good as long as it lasts.

WHENEVER Burke felt himself indisposed he ordered a kettle of water to be kept boiling, of which he drank large quantities, sometimes as much as four or even five quarts in a morning, without any mixture or infusion, and as hot as he could bear. His manner was to pour about a pint at a time into a basin, and to take it with a spoon as if it had been soap. Warm water, he said, would relax and nauseate, but hot water was the finest stimulant and most powerful restorative in the world. He thought it a sovereign cure for every complaint, and not only took it himself, but prescribed it with the confidence of a Sangrado to every patient that came in his way.

Scientific.

A MR. SKELTON, of London, has recently invented a street lamp with strips of looking-glass arranged in its roof, somewhat after the manner of a Venetian blind. He thus reflects into the street rays of the light which would otherwise have gone over the houses. The results of experiments on this lamp, it is said, show that the street receives three times as much light as would fall upon it from lamps of the ordinary kind.

OPEN AN OYSTER, retain the liquor in the lower or deep sheel, and, if viewed through a microscope, it will be found to contain multitudes of small oysters, covered with shells and swimming nimbly about—one hundred and twenty of which extend but one inch. Besides these young oysters, the liquor contains a variety of animalcuhe and myriads of three distinct species of worms. Sometimes their light resembles a bluish star about the center of the shell, which will be beautifully luminous in a dark room.

THE bodies of tadpoles and many of the lower invertebrate animals are moved by myriads of minute threadlike bodies, called cilia, covering the surface of the body, while the respiratory surfaces of both land and aquatic animals are covered with them. The motions of vibrating cilia and their action on the water around them are among the most beautiful sights shown by the microscope. Prof. Wyman has devised an ingenious machine for measuring the motive force of these cilia, and contributes an interesting article on this novel subject to the American Naturalist. He has even utilized the ciliary power, and invented a machine by which the direct motion produced by the cilia is made to give rise to a rotary one.

INSECT LIFE.—The application of "natural selection" to insects is a matter of great difficulty, as stated by Sir John Lubbock. Any one who will read his attempts to resolve it will be the more certainly convinced that his remark is well founded. Insects are divided into two classes, according to the character of their organs for taking food. There is the mandibulate class, with an apparatus for cutting up the food, or masticating it; there is also the suctorial class, which sucks up the food through a tube. Now it happens that often in larvæ the mandibulate arrangement prevails, which in the mature creatures gives place to suctorial organs. Whatever, then, natural selection may do to help the animal in one stage of its existence, is little likely to be otherwise than hurtful to it in the second. As one way of explaining away the difficulty, Lubbock asserts that "the larvæ of insects are not mere stages in the development of the perfect animal. On the contrary, they are subject to the influence of natural selection, and undergo changes which have reference entirely to their own requirements and conditions." Having made this gratuitous assertion, which has no reason in it except the desire to make facts fit his theory, he urges "that a certain kind of food might abound at one period and fail at another—might be suitable for the animal at one age and not at another. Now in such cases we should have two forces acting successively on each individual, and tending to modify the organization of the mouth in different directions." It is difficult to understand how the "might bes" of such wild speculation are so easily tolerated by the spirit of modern science, so that a writer venturing upon them can be still recognized as a leader. The question is begged in asserting that the two stages are two animals, and that the food may be suitable for the animal at one stage and not at another, since the very difficulty is to discover how the creature came into such a condition as to require differing kinds of food at successive times in its history. The caterpillar masticates its food, but when it turns to a butterfly it must suck it from the flowers; and now we are told that this most elastic and eccentric of all forces, "natural selection," draws the two in opposite directions, and yet evolves the beautiful history of the crysalis and butterfly, and that because the nature of the animal requires different foods; and the point we want chiefly to know is, why the nature has these contrasted necessities, and how, under natural selection, they came to be. One thing is certain, the modicum of truth that there really is in this famous theory is greatly obscured by such freaks of fantasy.

EMERSON SAYS: "Life is hardly respectable if it has no generous task, no duties or affections that constitute a necessity of existing. Every man's task is his life-preserver."

DO YOUR DUTIES, and let wealth come to you, if God will. Then there is hope that your culture and capacity to use it will keep pace with its growth.—Rev. John Hall, D. D.

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rowson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to dirt of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but, when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems indefinable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a facility of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequaled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only "History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

We have no material change to notice in the general market since our last issue, but our leading staple continued in very active demand. Sugar has been firm and in fair demand, especially for the higher grades; molasses in good request at firm prices, flour without any material change, corn dull at a decline of 3@4c., pork heavy and lower for new mess, and bacon without any marked variation.

The cotton crop accounts from the country confirm the most unfavorable of the previous reports with regard to the yield: Whatever may be the case in other districts, it is manifest that in those tributary to this market there has been quite as large a decrease from last year as has at any time been estimated, and that we may reasonably look for an early and heavy diminution in the receipts.

The river is 14 feet below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the fifth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	13,570
Lake.....	53
Arkansas.....	1,481
Mobile.....	1,502
Florida.....	30
Texas.....	200
Total.....	16,816

On Saturday the movement was checked by rainy weather, the high pretensions of factors, and the supply being only moderate, but buyers, nevertheless, operated with a fair degree of spirit, and took 6,900 bales at fuller prices, the closing rates showing an advance of ¼c. On Monday, under the stimulating influence of rather exciting news from Liverpool and New York, and a falling off in the general receipts, the demand was still more active, and the sales summed up 12,800 bales, which is 1,600 bales in excess of the heaviest previous business this year. Prices showed considerable irregularity, opening at previous rates, or an improvement of ¼c. and rapidly rising, until at the close low ordinary was quoted at 16½c., ordinary at 18½@19⅛c., good ordinary at 19⅛@19¾c., low middling at 20¼@20⅝c., middling at 20¾@20⅞c., strict middling at 21⅛@21½c., and good middling at 21⅜c., showing a net advance of ⅜c. in good ordinary, ⅝c. in low middling, ⅞c. in middling, ½c. in strict middling and ⅝c. in good middling. On Tuesday, under discouraging dispatches from New York, only partially neutralized by an improvement of 1-16d. at Liverpool, and the reduced supply offering much less scope to buyers, the demand subsided and the sales were confined to 3,100 bales.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 471,392 bales, against 571,090 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 272,682 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 96,348 to France, and a decrease of 266,961 to Great Britain, and of 52,216 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary.....	18½ @ 19
Good ordinary.....	19⅛ @ 19¾
Low middling.....	20¼ @ 20⅝
Middling.....	20¾ @ 20⅞
Strict middling.....	21⅛ @ 21½
Good middling.....	21⅜ @ —

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 18, 1872. NO. 3.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Memphis, Jan. 10.—The stockholders of the Mississippi River and Paducah and Gulf railroad have ratified, by a unanimous vote, the consolidation of those roads under the name of the Memphis and Paducah railroad. Contracts for the construction of the road will be let by the first of February. It is expected they will have cars running through this year.

Lancaster, N. H., Jan. 10.—A slight earthquake shock was felt last evening.

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 10.—The Legislature met to-day. The Governor elect has resigned his position and the speaker of the House, Hon. J. B. Cumming, was elected to fill the vacancy. The acting Governor announced he would send in his message to-morrow.

Galveston, Jan. 11.—Dispatches from Austin, dated the tenth, state there was no session of the Legislature. Some members have met privately and discussed the prospects, but have done nothing.

Little Rock, Jan. 12.—The State Board of Education has passed a resolution memorializing Congress to endow the free schools of the State.

St. Louis, January 12.—Captain Kramer, who, in the absence of Admiral Poisset, is in charge of the Russian fleet now in New York harbor, left here yesterday with orders to move the fleet to Pensacola and be in readiness to receive the Grand Duke at the termination of his Southern trip.

Boston, Jan. 13.—Isaac Rich died of apoplexy.

San Francisco, Jan. 13.—Russian Minister DeLong has accepted a mission to the great powers from Japan, similar to Burlingame's from China.

St. Louis, Jan. 13.—The steamer Great Republic, which is to convey the Grand Duke Alexis and suite to New Orleans, will undergo some changes for the occasion. Two of her large staterooms will be thrown into one, newly carpeted and furnished with a set of chamber furniture, a billiard table will be placed in the rear cabin, and other arrangements made to break the monotony of the trip. Besides the suite, none but the officers of the boat will be allowed aboard during the passage; especially will newspaper men be excluded, special agreement having been made to this effect.

Louisville, Jan. 14.—General Halleck's funeral attracted an immense crowd. Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, officiated.

Rev. Dr. Stewart Robinson, of the Second Presbyterian church in this city, the leading minister of the Southern wing of the Presbyterian church, is so seriously ill of smallpox that his physicians have little hope of his recovery. His condition creates a deep feeling throughout the entire community.

New York, Jan. 15.—Late Panama papers just received confirm the destruction of the city of Oran, in the Argentine Republic, by an earthquake; not a house was left standing; fortunately only one life was lost. A volcano has appeared in the vicinity.

Honduras advices state that the Indian revolt is so strong that the government is compelled to acknowledge them as belligerents.

Several places in South America are afflicted with the smallpox.

Washington, Jan. 15.—The House has been fillibustering all day over amnesty, and finally passed the old bill excluding members of Congress who left, and army and navy officers who abandoned the service for the South.

The dispatch sent this morning that General Emory had been ordered to withdraw from New Orleans is fully confirmed, and up to three o'clock no other orders had been sent him.

The dominant idea here seems to be: Hands off.

Mr. Morey introduced a bill appropriating $150,000 for public buildings at Shreveport, Louisiana, and presented petitions from the citizens of north Louisiana for the establishment of a United States court for that section.

Ogden, Utah, Jan. 16.—A delegation of prominent Mormons passed East to-day for Washington, where they will urge the admission of Utah into the Union, and endeavor to have the prosecution stopped against Brigham Young and others. The Gentiles are aroused, and will protest against it.

FOREIGN.

Madrid, Jan. 10.—Gen. Sherman was presented yesterday to King Amadeus, who said he entertained friendship and admiration for the American people, and desired cordial relations with them.

At a banquet in the evening, at the American legation, the Spanish ministry were present.

Speeches were pacific. Deblas, foreign minister, knew no difference between the two countries which could not be settled by their representatives at Washington.

Paris, Jan. 10.—In the Assembly to-day the Committee of Parliamentary Initiative, to which was referred the proposal of Duchatel that the Assembly return to Paris, reported adversely. The reading of the report was received with great cheering by the Right, but the Left remained silent.

Quebec, Jan. 10.—A heavy earthquake shock, lasting ten seconds, was felt last night. It was felt in other places in this vicinity. People rushed excitedly from houses, but no serious damage done.

Matamoras, Mexico, Jan. 10.—General Cortina recrossed the San Juan river yesterday, and holds a position in front of Mier, in which place the revolutionists are in force.

Another prominent pronunciado was hanged by General Cortina.

To-day the revolutionists held a council of war, and decided to enforce a loan of $150,000 from the cities under their control, to purchase arms and ammunition, the want of which prevents their advance.

London, Jan. 11.—There was an immense demonstration in Limerick yesterday in favor of home rule.

It is announced that the Pope will shortly send his ultimatum to all bishops who have not accepted infallibility.

An explosion, by which there was great loss of life and property, occurred yesterday in Oakwood colliery, Wales. Eleven bodies have already been taken out. A conflagration followed the explosion, by which the extensive works and machinery were destroyed.

London, Jan. 12.—The smallpox continues to spread in all parts of the British Isles. Cardinal Cullen, in a pastoral letter, permits the use of meat on Fridays for sanitary reasons, on account of the prevalence of disease.

Halifax, Jan. 12.—The schooner Rival was wrecked in the Bay of Fundy. All lost.

Berlin, Jan. 12.—A dispatch from Versailles informs the government that Baron von Arnim and Count de Rumusat to-day exchanged ratifications of the customs convention recently negotiated at Frankfort by the representatives of Germany and France.

Munich, Jan. 12.—In the Bavarian Chambers to-day the government, in reply to interpolations from the opposition, justified its enforcement of the Old Catholic Church burial service.

Lisbon, Jan. 12.—The South American mail steamer brings advices from Rio Janeiro to December 23.

A revolt recently broke out in Paraguay, but was suppressed before it had attained serious proportions.

Matamoras, Mexico, Jan. 13.—The latest dispatches announce the complete investment of Mier by General Cortina.

Four or five hundred revolutionists, under General Quiroga, have been driven into the Plaza, where they are vigorously defending themselves.

Cortina's troops are better armed, and are inflicting severe loss on the insurgents.

Quiroga's only chance of escape is through expected succor from Monterey, which is reported to be on the way to raise the siege.

Yokohama, Jan. 15.—A Japanese embassy, composed of personages of the highest rank yet sent abroad, leave to-day to confer with the governments of the treaty powers in relation to a revision of the treaties demanded to be made before July of the present year. These representatives are progressive, and profess great friendship for foreigners.

If sincerely desirous of our friendship, the embassy has now an opportunity of conveying to you the boon of free intercourse with the natives.

The edict of the Mikado says: My country is now undergoing a complete change from old to new ideas, which I sincerely desire; therefore I call upon all wise and strong minds to appear and become good guides to the government. During youth-time it is positively necessary to view foreign countries so as to become enlightened as to new ideas of the world; and boys as well as girls, who will themselves become men and women, should be allowed to go abroad, and my country will be benefited by their knowledge so acquired. Females heretofore have had no position in society, because it was considered they were without understanding; but if educated and intelligent, they should have due respect.

Six young Japanese females of rank go to America, in care of Mr. DeLong, to be sent to some seminary of learning at the expense of the government.

STATE HOUSE, NEW ORLEANS.

There is an unusual quiet prevailing around the State House. The police are on duty, but no disturbance from any quarter is looked for. The large force is kept on hand, as we learn, merely as a matter of precaution.

A rumor is circulated that the "Carter wing" in a body mean to apply for admission to the hall of representatives to-day.

Several of the "Bay St. Louis" Senators have arrived in town. It is reported that Senators Antoine, Wilcox and Todd are likely to take their seats. The rest of them display no inclination in that respect.

It is probable that a bill revising the police law will be introduced to-day. The alterations made in the law are material. It abolishes the Police Board, and in consequence abrogates the powers heretofore exercised by it. The large clerical force now employed will be dispensed with. This feature will lessen the expenses over $100,000. Other material changes are also made, confiding the direction of the police more immediately to the city.

Senator Todd has just appeared in his seat in the Senate.

Just as the Senate was going into session, Senator McMillen received a note from Senator Thomas to the effect that in the course of an hour he thought all of the Senators would be present. He was that moment in consultation with them.

The House is strengthened by the advent of three additional members from the Carter wing.

The indications now are that complete harmony will be effected between the two wings of the Republican party, the opposition wing acquiescing in the exclusion of Speaker Carter, and all the rest of the members returning to the State House and to the discharge of their duties as representatives, acquiescing in the Governor's plans of reform, and co-operating with him in effecting them.

Messengers from those in consultation are reaching the State House every moment, and this is the intelligence they bring.—Picayune, January 17.

The Emperor of China is soon to be married, and has imported a pair of elephants to assist at the ceremony. His future consort is undergoing a careful training in the etiquette of court life. For three years the looms of Nankin, Hongchau and Canton have been engaged on the silks and satins for her bridal trousseau, and just now they are announced as completed, at a cost of nearly half a million in our money. While the bridegroom, who has the sun for his emblem, goes forth in a car drawn by elephants, his bride, who represents the moon, is to be borne to her palace in a palanquin composed entirely of strings of pearls.

Do men gather figs from thistles? No; but the Canadians are making theirs into whisky. The beverage is distilled from the stalks and leaves of the Canada thistle, and is represented to be about thirty-five per cent. alcohol, and to have a pleasant aromatic flavor. The effect upon the system is very penetrating and exhilarating, "the sensation being the same as if a Jew's-harp in full tune was attached to every nerve." Persons who have been played on with Jew's-harps after this manner will be able to tell whether they would like thistle whisky or not.

A learned divine one day accosted a simple-hearted Christian, busy in his daily toil: "Well, John, it is a long and hard way to heaven, is it not?" "O, no, sir," was the ready answer; "it is only three steps." "Three steps! How is that, John?" "Why, sir, nothing is plainer. First, step out of yourself; second, step into Christ; third, step into heaven." The astonished minister, years afterward, acknowledged his indebtedness to that poor rustic for one of his profoundest and most comprehensive lessons in experimental theology.

God does not give us light for two steps at a time.

DEATH OF SIDNEY E. MORSE.

With profound emotions of sorrow, in this the closing number of the year, we have to record the death of the last of the founders of the New York Observer, and the father of the religious newspaper press.

Sidney Edwards Morse died at his residence in this city on Saturday, December 23, 1871, in the seventy-eighth year of his age.

His father was the Rev. Jedidiah Morse, D. D., author of the first American school geography, and a distinguished divine, whose name is illustrious among the founders of Andover Theological Seminary, of the American Board of Foreign Missions, the Bible and Tract societies, and other religious institutions. Dr. Morse was the father of three sons; the eldest is still living—Samuel Finley Breese Morse, the inventor of the electric telegraph; the second was Sidney Edwards Morse; and the third, Richard C. Morse, who was associated with the second in the establishment of the New York Observer, and who died three years ago.

Sidney E. Morse was born in Charlestown, Massachusetts, near Boston, February 7, 1794, entered the freshman class at Yale in 1805, when but eleven years old; and was graduated at fourteen in a class remarkable for the longevity and the distinction of its members. Fifty years after their graduation, one of a class of forty-nine, no less than twenty-four were living, and sixteen of them assembled at the house of one of the number, Governor Roger Sherman Baldwin, of New Haven. Hon. S. S. Phelps, of the United States Senate; Hon. Francis Granger; F. A. Tallmadge, recorder; Dr. Worcester, author of the dictionary; Prof. Ralph Emerson, Rev. Dr. Samuel Spring, and Rev. Dr. Joseph Vail, were among the eminent men of that remarkable class. When Mr. Morse was only sixteen years old he wrote a series of articles in the Boston Sentinel on the dangers from the undue multiplication of new States, thus early in life connecting himself with the newspaper press. He then studied theology at Andover, and law at Litchfield, Connecticut, in the famous law school there. His father and Mr. Evarts, father of Hon. William M. Evarts, of this city, and other clergymen and laymen in and near Boston, wishing to establish a religious newspaper, Mr. Sidney E. Morse, at their invitation, undertook it, wrote the prospectus, employed a printer, and, as solo editor and proprietor, issued the Boston Recorder, the prototype of that numerous class of journals now known as "religious newspapers." In 1823, in connection with his younger brother, Richard C. Morse, he established in this city the New York Observer, now the oldest weekly newspaper in the city, and the oldest religious newspaper in the State, of which he continued to be the senior editor and proprietor until the year 1858, when he sold his interest to its present senior editor, and retired to private life.—New York Observer.

The Center of Population in the United States.—Prof. Hilgard, of the Coast Survey, has made some interesting calculations from the last and previous censuses which show the steady westward movement of the center of the population of the United States. In 1840 this point was near the eastern foot of the Cumberland mountains, in Virginia, upon the thirty-ninth parallel of latitude. In 1850 the census showed that the point had moved westward fifty-seven miles, to a point south of Parkersburg, Virginia. In 1860 it was eighty-two miles further west, at a place south of Chilicothe, Ohio, not far from the line between Virginia and Kentucky. In 1870 the point was found to have moved forty-five miles farther west, and it is now at Wilmington, Clinton county, Ohio. The great progress in the period between 1850 and 1860 was caused, in part, by the rapid settlement of Texas and of the Pacific coast. The professor thinks that the relative growth of the West will not be so great in the future as in the past, and that, therefore, the center of population will advance westward at a much slower rate than heretofore. He estimates that in the year 1900 the center will be found to be near Bloomington, Indiana, about forty miles southwest of Indianapolis.

In London they are about starting a new journal, devoted to recording births, marriages and deaths.

SCHOOL AT ATHENS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. Editor: Permit me briefly to call the attention of your numerous readers to the advertisement of Mrs. Sullins' boarding school, which appears in your paper this week. This school for young ladies, situated in Athens, Tennessee, is conducted by the wife of one of our old and highly-esteemed ministers. The school has been in operation for several years, and during a part of this time enjoyed quite a liberal patronage. Mrs. Sullins has devoted much of her life to the training of young ladies, and has the character of being thorough in her instruction and firm in her discipline. I have been struck with the lady-like deportment of those committed to her charge. Connected with the school is a musical department, conducted by Miss Vaughan, (daughter of General Vaughan,) whose excellence as a performer and an accomplished instructress is rarely surpassed by any. The health and morals of the pupils are as strictly cared for, I dare say, as they would be at home. The board is good, and the charges comparatively moderate. No better society, I am certain, can be found in the State than is found here. The locality is remarkable for its healthfulness, and the pupils have access every Sabbath to preaching and Sabbath school. Many of your readers who have daughters to be educated, and wish to give them the benefit of a climate as delightful and invigorating as can be found in the world, would doubtless do well to send here. As pastor I shall be pleased to offer any help or exercise over them any influence for good I may be able.

R. H. Parker,
Pastor M. E. Church South.

Athens, Tennessee, Jan. 8, 1872.

The Rev. R. S. Maclay, D. D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in a letter to the Mission Rooms, gives a detailed account of the commencement of active opposition to the missionaries in the neighborhood of Foochow, China. As far as the city itself is concerned, the anti-missionary excitement seems to have passed its climax, and to be subsiding. But it is "raging in the country districts with greater violence than it ever did in the city. Two chapels and one book store in the outlying districts have been pulled to pieces, and the foundation of another chapel, which the Christians had laid, has been torn up by the mob. Four Christians have already been cruelly beaten, and the enemy now threatens the utter extermination of all who worship God and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. At present the excitement is greatest in the Kucheng and Changloh districts, and it is there that the chapels and book store referred to above have been destroyed; but the inflammatory rumors are spreading rapidly into other districts, where Christian societies have been gathered. We have received letters from our preachers in the Sienyu, Pootien, Hokehiang, Minchiang and Nanping districts, advising us of the threatening aspect of affairs in those places, and soliciting our prayers. It is very affecting to read their expressions of cheerful confidence in God while the infuriated mobs are howling around their dwellings."

The letters from Hu Po Mi, at Hinghwa; Ling Ching Ting, at Sienyu; Hu Yong Mi, of the Minkiang district, and Piang Ting Hie, of Chion Hup Wang, are marked by expressions of strong faith in the midst of great danger.

Yek Ing Kwang, whose church and parsonage at Kucheng were destroyed by the mob on August 30, displayed great heroism. Having provided for the safety of his family, he walked alone through the crowded streets to the magistrate's office, to seek intervention. He reached the magistrate with great difficulty, and induced him to disperse the mob. A few days afterward these Christians were seized by the people and beaten severely. Yek Ing Kwang again went to the magistrate, and explained the case so satisfactorily that that officer released one of the prisoners, although he went through the form of shutting the other two up for a few days, for the sake of "conciliating" the crowd. They have since been released. Dr. Maclay relates the story of this young convert, not, he says, "for the purpose of giving undue prominence to Bro. Yet Ing Kwang, but simply to show the grace of God vouchsafed to him, and to afford a laudable satisfaction to all who are interested in the cause of the Redeemer in China."

The origin of this excitement is found in the slanderous circulars about the Christians which are distributed in China, and to which we have already referred. "One thing," adds Dr. Maclay, "I think is certain; Protestant missions in China are not a failure. Another thing I record with humble gratitude, and that is, there are hundreds of heroic souls connected with our own mission who, for Christ's sake, take joyfully the spoiling of their goods, who submit cheerfully to stripes and imprisonment, and who at their Master's call are ready to love not their lives unto the death."

BISHOP PAINE.

Bishop Paine is holding Conferences along the Atlantic seaboard. The episcopal visitations of the senior Bishop are much prized. The Neighbor, of Columbia, South Carolina, says:

Last Sabbath was a most lovely day. The congregation of Washington street charge, in this city, were favored by our senior Bishop with an impressive and opportune discourse on the Scripture: "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." The Spirit, we trust, led the preacher to the selection of his subject, and aided him in expounding and applying the truth, for the Spirit evidently honored the word preached. The honest-hearted, large and attentive congregation must have carried away much good seed. In the afternoon the Bishop met with the Marion street Sunday school at their regular meeting for singing, prayer and lectures. He was happy in making himself understood by the children. They will not forget him or his interesting and pointed talk. The Bishop looks well, preaches well, talks well and says he feels well. On this wise may the Lord long bless, preserve and keep his servant. On Monday he left for Spartanburg to hold the session of the South Carolina Conference, which begins on Wednesday, the thirteenth instant. We trust the visit and labors of this servant of Christ will be blessed to the preachers and churches in our bounds.

The Wesleyans in Ceylon.—The English Missionary Herald states that the Lord has wrought wonders in saving the people of Ceylon. The English Wesleyans, the Church of England, and the Baptists are doing a great work in that country. Rev. Charles Carter, of the latter, sends an interesting communication to the Herald, in which he speaks of several persons admitted to the church, one of whom was a "Singhalese blind man, about twenty-five years old. He lost the sight of his eyes through disease when a boy. He came to me about four months ago as an inquirer. I thought at first he was a Buddhist beginning to investigate Christianity, but soon discovered that he had not only made up his mind that Christianity was right and Buddhism wrong, but gave very satisfactory evidence of being truly converted to God."

The Western Christian Advocate says: "We have statements from several points, saying that with the adoption of the envelope plan for raising money for the pastor's support, there is always money in the treasury, whereas, under the old plan it was exceedingly difficult to have anything on hand, either for the pastor or incidental expenses. The plan, however, to be of any value, must be worked with patience and regularity. We should be glad to hear of its more general adoption. Its influence in developing liberal and systematic giving can scarcely be overestimated."

A correspondent writes us: "New students are coming in to the Southern University every few days—some have just arrived from Mississippi and Arkansas, and more are expected. The faculty are in high spirits."—Nashville Advocate.

We are indebted to Rev. J. C. Hartzell for a copy of the minutes of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) held in Wesley chapel, New Orleans, December 14-19, 1871. It is a neatly printed pamphlet, and its contents are well arranged for convenient reference.

HEAVEN.

How sweetly strange will be the day
When we shall no more kneel and pray
For daily bread; but, wondering, say:
"We hunger now no more!"

When we shall hear the cooling rill,
And feel the fountain's freshness fill
The vital, balmy air, and still
Thirst not forevermore!

When we shall fly on errands vast,
And pore o'er secret wonders past,
While Heaven's revolving ages last,
Yet we no older grow!

When we shall plan for endless years,
And joy in God, and know our fears
Lie in the sole tomb that appears
The tomb of all our woe!

There, beckoning to some shining throne,
Our suffering darlings, crowned our own,
Shall fold us in a bliss unknown;
The patient, tried and true!

And if, obeying Love's command,
Among those ransomed ones shall stand
Some soul uplifted by our hand,
What praises will be due!

And oh! to see our Savior smile,
We being certain all the while
The sin that did our souls defile,
And made us cry "Unclean,"

Is blotted out, as from the sky,
When the great sun goes shining by,
Are the dark clouds that threatening lie,
As if they had not been!

So that He whom our souls adore
Can look us through, and o'er and o'er,
Nor find one stain forevermore;
And we can look on Him,

Nor shrink, nor strive to hide, nor sigh;
But find it heaven's joy to lie
Full in the light of His pure eye,
Made pure like Him, by Him!

Evangelist.

THE SEASONS.

"While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease."—Genesis viii, 22.

Promises made by men are not always reliable; but when God promises it is with an absolute certainty. For thousands of years the seasons have made their annual rounds, bringing to man both "seed-time and harvest." The promise in the passage of Scripture quoted might be construed as conveying the idea that prior to, or at least during the time of the flood, there was no change of season; and this would have been the case if the earth during that time had presented its poles to the sun in place of the equator. He who set bounds and gave laws to the earth in its annual and diurnal revolutions could suspend these laws, so as to present the poles of the earth to the vertical rays of the sun. In such a case two great results would follow: First: By the rapid fusion and breaking of the polar ices it would cause not only a swell in the ocean, but powerful currents, carrying with them immense icebergs and bowlders, even over mountains, toward the equator; and thus, with the expansion of the water, by an increase of its temperature, would be sufficient, without any further miracle, to inundate the whole earth; and on this principle, too, the great drift formation might be accounted for. In the second place, the fusion of such a large amount of ice would cause immense clouds of vapor to rise from the earth, to be returned to it in the forty days' rain. Now, I will not, Galilee-like, "stamp upon the earth," and affirm that such was the case, but that such might have been the case. It has been ascertained by an almost mathematical certainty that if all the water of our globe was raised but a few degrees in temperature it would so expand it as to rise above the mountains stated in the Mosaic account.

Excuse me, Mr. Editor; I did not take up my pen to write a thesis on the flood, but about the seasons of the year—the great moral lessons they should teach us, so that we may not live as the antediluvians did, and thereby bring upon ourselves the destruction of eternal fire.

There is no language which can speak (for day unto day uttereth speech) more intelligibly to the contemplative mind than the language of nature; and it is repeated to us in "seed-time and harvest," "in cold and heat," and in "summer and winter." Each season of the year teaches the man, to whom "knowledge is pleasant," new and enlarged ideas of him who placed the bow of promise in the clouds. In the rotation of the seasons the savage, as well as the sage, is led to see that he who said there should be "seed-time and harvest" is the same yesterday, to-day and forever; and also that each season of the year is calculated to awaken the loftiest sentiments of piety which the heart can feel.

When spring appears—vegetation rejuvenated, the earth clothed in verdure, and the songs of happiness from the sweet singing birds of the forest are heard in every shady grove—it is a call to man to tune his lips and raise his voice in praise to him who has awakened nature from its long winter sleep, and given to it a new vigor to produce feed for man and beast.

When the summer comes, and the sun like a mighty giant pursues his course through the firmament above, sending down his warming rays, causing the herbs and fruits to grow and ripen, it is then, in the summer solstice, when the man of thought seeks a cool shade beneath the boughs of a majestic oak, or a wide-spread elm, for meditation, can look around him and regale his eyes with the varied tints of the opening blooms, and inhale the air laden with their sweet perfume; and while he meditates upon the growing and maturing vegetation around him, and what the sun is doing for the earth and the maturity of vegetable life, his thoughts should rise from the things that are created to their Creator—to him who once dwelt in the flesh—and what the Son of righteousness in his now full-orbed glory can do for him—that he can shine into his heart, warm up his affections, and cause all the graces of the Spirit to grow and expand, and bear fruit an hundred-fold to the glory of God.

When autumn comes, and with a liberal hand offers to man the ripened fruits of earth, he is then reminded that he who promised both "seed-time and harvest" neither slumbers nor sleeps. Autumn, then, is the season when the heart of a man should go out in thanksgiving and praise to God for his wonderful goodness, and of resolving, through his grace, to bring forth the fruits of righteousness.

In its regular turn winter comes. And lo! it is winter now; and while I am seated by a cheerful fire and engaged in penning these lines, the earth is frost-bound and incrusted with ice and snow; the gay variety of nature has departed, the notes of the sweet singing birds have ceased, and the flowers which opened to the rays of a summer sun are all returned to the dust. The sun himself seems to withdraw his light and warmth, as if becoming old and enfeebled in power. Thus it is that the seasons pass by, and are numbered with the things that were; giving to the man whose head is now white with the frost of the winter of life, lessons of instruction and hope.

As man, then, looks out upon the desolations of winter, and reflects that the storms and frosts are preparing the earth for the blossoms of another spring, he should also consider that, amid the physical weakness, weariness and decay of the winter of life, he who promised that "while the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease," has also given the assurance that there is an approaching spring, when the dead shall rise from their graves—that there is an "hour coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life."

Let, then, the storms of winter blow and the rains of heaven descend; and while all animated nature, not capable of beholding the wisdom of God in the changes of the seasons, shrinks from their approach, let man, the noblest workmanship of God, meet them all with Christian fortitude, looking forward with a well-grounded hope to that time when his winter of life shall come to its final close; and then, with a prophetic eye, look forward to that perennial spring-time, when the mortal shall rise up from its sleeping dust to immortality and eternal life. Whatever, then, may be the natural or moral changes we may encounter in this changeable world, we should never forget that the same Almighty mind reigns amid them all, and that the great duty of man is the improvement of his moral nature, and a diligent cultivation of all the Christian graces, which are to continue to exist when the revolutions of nature are past, days are numbered, and time itself shall be no more.

IF THERE is anything which I would wish especially to urge upon those who have not had the advantage of much education, it is that, if they but knew the way to do it, they are far nearer the best truth and knowledge than they may perhaps suppose. In saying this I do not mean to undervalue education, even the highest; it is an inestimable blessing; but the real strength of the mind of man is independent of it; at least, of much of it. I merely mean that there is no very great reason in the nature of things why a person who has had little education should not think about things much as I do. The way to wisdom and truth may be to one man through many books, to another through few; to one as a result of much leisure, to another of little. For of the many books which are in the world, a very large number, as even small experience in book-reading will show, say the same things; and many say nothing more than the mind, if wisely directed, might have made out for itself. And for leisure, doubtless many have little enough leisure for writing, and little enough leisure for books; but all, I think we may say, have leisure enough for thought, and for a great deal of it.—Prof. Grote.

THE true idea of prayer is, perhaps, best expressed in the Homeric fragment:

"Asked, and unasked, thy blessings give, O Lord.
The evil that we pray for from us ward."

AN OLD LADY not remarkable for the clearness of her ideas, describing a fine summer evening, said: "It was a beautiful bright night; the moon made everything as light as a feather!"

AMEN.

"And all the people shall say, Amen." "How shall we say Amen at the giving of thanks?"

How comes it that in so many churches the minister has come to usurp the whole service? The people sit or stand and look on and listen, and if the choir happen to be a good one, or a poor one the congregation do not even take part in the singing. There seems to be something absurd in the minister's making a prayer, and at its conclusion adding the "Amen," when it is the voice of the people which should respond, "So let it be."

I do not suppose that any definite or fixed form of worship has come down to us, though the model of the earlier churches seems to have been the service in the synagogues, which was simpler, more instructive and less imposing than the temple worship. Any one who happened to be present was called upon to speak, or to expound the Scripture. As in the case where the Savior, being called up, read and expounded the Scripture, and made application of it. It seems to have been the custom for the people to respond.

We listen with more interest if we have a voice in the matter. Try it. It may spoil the narrative part of the Scripture to have it read in different keys, by different voices. But in the Psalms and devotional parts it keeps up the attention wonderfully, when all, even to the children, read the alternate verses. And when it comes to the prayers we should at least be allowed to say "Amen," and put our seal to that which has been spoken.

Reformation is well, but we reformed too far when we gave up even the Amen.—A Presbyterian, in the New York Observer.

A WRITER in one of our church papers says: "Of forty Protestant girls who were sent at one time to be educated in a convent in Montreal, thirty-eight became papists. Father Hecker claims that seventenths of all such Protestant youth become Roman Catholics." On this the Western Christian Advocate says: "Persons who understand that a pair of shoes costing a dollar are dearer than a pair which costs two, have sense enough to forego the so-called cheap and buy the useful, which are cheaper in the end. And yet some of these sensible people cannot be made to comprehend that education may be too cheap at any price. An education which makes children deceive their parents for the good of the church, which sows seeds of discord between them, which causes them to bow down to idols instead of the one living and true God, which tends to make them trust in a woman more than in Christ, the image of the invisible God; an education which does this is too cheap at any price; nay, rather it is dear if given for nothing. God commands us to train up our children in the way they should go. If that way be Romanism, then let them be so trained; but if Romanism be a huge lie, that will destroy men's souls, then let no man send his child where he will be taught this lie."

SIN GROWS.

Sin is a matter of growth, increase and reproduction. Sins are found in family groups: some older, some younger; some greater, some smaller; some parents, some offspring. There is a parentage and pedigree of sin, with the dark family escutcheon of its heraldry. Sin is an aged patriarch of the past, stretching his protracted age even to the present, still prolific of a deadly progeny—"When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."—(James i, 15) Sins produce sins; grow out of sins; grow into sins; are a living, moving, reproductive power in the earth. The world and life are ever peopled by this undying family. The desires and thoughts conceived develop into deeds; and sins committed work out death. Thus the sequence is: desires—deeds—death; this is the heraldry of evil, the pedigree of sin.

Sin is born in us; the fountain is corrupt. From our first father Adam we have inherited sin. How this is, and why it is so, is one of the great mysteries of life. The origin of evil it is impossible to account for; and it would be but a useless piece of speculative philosophy even if we could. Even though the origin of a fire should be ascertained, yet that could not possibly restore the damage done. It is but a little matter to know how we got into this woe; it is a much greater matter to ascertain how we are to get out of it. A nobler topic than that of "the origin of evil" is that of the grand story of salvation!

There is a great difference between being in the element of sin, and being out of it. To look from without into a dark cavern is to see darkness visible; but one dwelling within would become habituated to the darkness, and therefore would not so sensibly feel its intensity. To one who plunges into deep waters there must be thousands of tons' weight upon his shoulders; but he feels no weight or pressure, because he is in that element, and forms a part of it; yet, when out of it, he would find a bucket of that water to be difficult to carry. When lifting water from a well, it is easy while yet the vessel is in the water; but from the moment it rises above the surface it needs a stronger pull and greater energy to lift it. So long as a boat is buoyant upon the waters a child's hand may suffice to draw it; but when out of the water it would require the strength of many men to move it. And even such is it to be in the element of sin, and to be fetched out of it. From within conscience feels neither weight nor guilt nor darkness; and from without we look "unto the rock whence we were hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence we were digged."—(Isaiah li, 1.)

Sin begins with small beginnings, and by degrees progresses. Seeds, when planted in a likely soil, will ere long bring forth their fruits. And so the deeds of sin all grow from the seeds of sin. Good old Archbishop Leighton thus speaks of the first temptation to sin: "Ten to one it is a little thief let in to open the door to an hundred greater ones." The first of all sin was, in appearance, but a little sin—the taking of fruit forbidden; but it was reckoned not by its measure, but by its motive—disobedience. And even so are all sins measured in the sight of God.

And smaller sins, by little and little, increase to greater ones. How true is it that "the wish is father to the thought;" and so, if the thought conceived develope into life, the thought indulged doth itself, in its turn, beget its consequences. The ivy grows by a tender and gentle growth; and yet ere long it rends the tombstone, eats away the fortress walls, or crushes the life out from the tree by which it has climbed. The thread will carry a cord; the cord will carry a rope; the rope will carry a cable; and the cable will suffice to hold whole navies at anchor. Such is the influence of small beginnings; and such is the influence of sin. As some one has said: "Sins seldom end where they begin, but run on till they be infinite and innumerable."

And so long as even one sin remains the soul is compromised, and is in danger. If there be seven thieves in a house, and six of these be killed and one remain, the master will not retire from watch and fall asleep.—The Quiver.

THERE are seeds so light that they travel on the breeze and seem to have wings; where they drop, up they spring. So it is with evil. But take your hands full of good seed—scatter it wide, up and down. A great harvest of grain will grow, that is not afraid of winged seed. In this culture we have an almighty helper—the Holy Spirit. Prepare your heart for this Helper as you prepare your house for a guest. Set everything to rights—down with the cobwebs, out with the dust, brush away the flies; for he that cometh to dwell is holy, and if he comes he will never leave you again.

THE ART OF DOING GOOD.

It is an art. The fact that so many people who attempt it make such woeful blunders in it is evidence, if there were no other. It looks so easy to do good that it would seem that everybody ought to be able to accomplish all the desires of his heart in reference to it.

But whether in the matter of teaching a class of little ones, or engineering the affairs of a great benevolent society, there is something more required than mere willingness to work. Blundering incapacity will wreck any enterprise, however good may be the intentions with which it sets out.

The surgeon who would go to his work without a skilled acquaintance with it in all its details would incur the penalty of the loss of confidence of the community in which his efforts were put forth. The stable man who fails to groom and feed the horse to the best advantage is discharged, and finds little sympathy when he pleads ignorance of his business as an excuse for his shortcomings. The locomotive driver who runs his train off the track by reason of not knowing how to manage it is not the man who is rewarded with honor and promotion for doing the best he could. People who occupy such positions of responsibility are expected to be skilled in their work to such an extent as to attain a reasonable degree of success in it.

But in the art of doing good many well-meaning people expect those who would do it to blunder along the best way they can, and hope for success, rather because it is the Lord's work than because they know how to do it. To show the ignorant and inefficient how to do their work is one of the noblest departments of Christian effort. Florence Nightingale did an incalculable amount of good when she taught people how to nurse the sick. It looks easy enough to take care of a sick person, but there is many an invalid who knows, at the expense of much needless suffering, caused by an incompetent nurse, that the care of the sick is an art. There are impenitent sinners who have cursed the people who handed them tracts simply because the tract distributers never learned the art of giving out tracts in such a way as to commend them to the sinners to whom they are handed. There is many a poor person who has felt like hurling back the alms professionally bestowed by a committee, because the committee had such an infelicitous way of presenting them, never having learned to do good gracefully and acceptably. We knew some well-meaning women who began their Dorcas society work in the middle of January, just because it never occurred to them that the poor people would need winter garments till about that time. If the original Dorcas had bungled her work in that style, there would not have been such a lamentation over her in Joppa as there was when it was thought that she was dead. Dorcas of Joppa understood the art of doing good, in which that tardy little company of her followers were deficient.

Here is a Sunday-school teacher who reads over the lesson with his class, and then pauses for lack of knowing what next to do. Then he reads a chapter, selecting it at random, and, if the time holds out, another. He offers no explanation, asks no questions, awakens no interest. The boys make fun of him as they go home, and, when they reach home, tell their parents that the man knows nothing at all. What is the matter with him? Just this and nothing more: he has never learned the art of studying or of teaching a lesson. He is more ignorant than the children whom he would teach. He has a spark of piety in him; and means well. He is respectable, and his fellow-laborers in school and church feel backward about going to him and faithfully telling him how little he knows, and that he ought to learn how to do his work.

How shall the incompetent be taught? Institutes, conventions, study meetings, college, conference, all have their part in the work. Each and all, quickened by the life-giving power of the Holy Spirit, may work on in the good work of making better laborers in every branch of Christian usefulness.—Sunday School Workman.

A MAN walking through the deep snow, heard his oldest son saying: "I'll step in father's tracks." He was trying to do it, and two younger brothers were at the same thing. The father went to the house of prayer that evening thinking, "If I lead my sons thus, I'll make tracks for heaven."

AS I APPROVE of a youth that has something of the old man in him, so I am no less pleased with an old man that has something of the youth.—Cicero.

IF ANY one speak ill of thee, consider whether he hath truth on his side; and if so, reform thyself, that his censures may not affect thee.—Epictetus.

LITTLE BY LITTLE.

When the new years come, and the old years go,
How little by little all things grow!
All things grow, and all decay,
Little by little passing away.
Little by little on fertile plain,
Ripen the harvests of golden grain,
Waving and flashing in the sun,
When the summer at last is done;
Little by little they ripen on,
As the new years come, and the old years go.

Low on the ground an acorn lies;
Little by little it mounts to the skies,
Shadow and shelter for wandering herds,
Home for a hundred singing birds.
Little by little the great rocks grew,
Long, long ago, when the world was new.
Slowly and silently, stately and free,
Cities of coral under the sea,
Little by little are builded—while so,
The new years come, and the old years go.

Little by little all tasks are done;
So are the crowns of the faithful won,
So is heaven in our hearts begun.
With work and with weeping, with laughter and play,
Little by little, the longest day
And the longest life are passing away,
Passing without return—while so,
The new years come, and the old years go.

Many thousand stars are burning
Brightly in the vault of night;
Many an earth-worn heart is yearning
Upward, with a fond delight.

Stars of beauty, stars of glory,
Radiant wanderers of the sky!
Weary of the world's sad story,
Ever would we gaze on high.

DOLLINGER AND HYACINTHE.

BY A PRIMITIVE CATHOLIC.

Dollinger is the head of this Catholic reform; Hyacinthe is the heart. And how admirable are these two great and important members in their unlikeness! The German theologian is reticent, calm, (sometimes almost to coldness,) usually serene, and always confident. The French monk is affable and generous in conversation, exquisitely sensitive, and carries about him always an atmosphere of sorrowing hopefulness. Dollinger is undisturbed by events, happy or unfortunate. Hyacinthe carries his heart in his hand, rejoicing and suffering with every one. The strong, plain features of Dollinger tell of his matter-of-fact nature; while the ascetic face of Hyacinthe betrays the mystic.—Dollinger is religious; Hyacinthe is pious. In conversation Dollinger uses few and simple words; is always forcible, but never eloquent. Hyacinthe is always forcible because always eloquent. Dollinger is sometimes abstract and even brusque. Hyacinthe is always gentle and always polite.

The greatness of Dollinger consists in his learning, logic and honesty. The greatness of Hyacinthe in his charity, love and conscience.

These two important men are near neighbors and dear friends. They are frequently seen walking together, regardless of weather, in the Englishgarten—a vast park in Munich—when they apparently never lack for conversation; but they sometimes forget to go on, and stand face to face in long, earnest conference—Dollinger immobile and conclusive, Hyacinthe ardent and persuasive.

We were honored by the company of these two great men for an evening, just after the Congress; and never have we seen Dollinger so cheerful and confident, nor Hyacinthe so calm and hopeful. They entertain like opinions and are considered conservative. They express themselves as entirely satisfied with the proceedings of the Congress. Their principal causes of congratulation are these three great and happy results: the maintenance of perfect unity and harmony, notwithstanding the difference of opinion; the establishment of fellowship between divided branches of the church; and the resting within the strict limits of orthodoxy. This latter was Dollinger's chief concern. "We are Catholic," he said, "and we will neither abandon our faith nor be driven from the church! And as to Rome, I neither expect nor fear anything from there." He said to me, when I offered him my felicitations upon the position he had taken: "The world sends in its congratulations, and imagines my position a happy one. I'm only a duck thrown into the water, and must swim!"

Pere Hyacinthe handed him an article which he had just read in a notorious Ultramontane paper, and full of calumny for them both, exclaiming: "Is it not pitiable to see truth so misrepresented and talent so misused!"

"Oh, ho!" laughed the doctor, putting the paper aside. "I never read those things. I know what the editors are, and that is enough. And it is all the same to me if they represent me as a saint or as a cannibal. In any case they will scarcely tell the truth!"

He greatly interested us with an account of the friendly relations existing here in Bavaria between the Protestants and Catholics. There are many cases in his diocese where both worship in the same church, choosing different hours, for the convenience of each other; and in one village near they unite by general consent to celebrate a fete day belonging to the different churches—that of the Protestants is what they call the Peace Day; that of the Catholics, Corpus Christi. Are you as tolerant in New York?

Hearing of the defection of a mutual friend, (who had fought heroically against the definition of the dogma of infallibility,) which filled me with sorrow, he said: "I see this troubles you; but it has not the least effect upon me. I have got used to it. Then these bishops and others, who were yesterday one thing and to-day another, remind one of the gymnasts on the tight rope, who are forced to turn a summersault to maintain their equilibrium!"

When the news of Monsigneur Maret's second adhesion to this dogma was told him, he exclaimed, in the sublime conplet of Juvenal:

"Summum crede nefas animam praferre pudori
Et propter vitam, vivendi perdere causas!"

"The greatest crime is to prefer life to honor,
And, to preserve life, forfeit all right to live!"

The life of Dollinger is that of the wise man. His home is that of the savant and the sage. An elegant simplicity and immaculate neatness pervades every room and every object. The wealth is in books and pictures.

He is given to hospitality, seldom dining alone. His table is good, but not luxurious. His habits of life are simple almost to austerity. He rises at five o'clock in the morning, and commences his work; takes simply coffee and bread for his breakfast; and works unremittingly until one o'clock, when he dines. He drinks neither wine, beer nor tea. He greatly enjoys the long conversation with his guests at dinner. After dinner he receives visitors; and, notwithstanding their number, and his immense occupation, he always has time to see all who call. At four or five he walks in the park for three hours, sometimes going beyond the limits of the city, quite out into the country, and usually tiring down his companion, whoever it may be. He takes his supper at about seven o'clock, which consists of a simple glass of water. He is seventy-three years old, hale and elastic, and looks much younger. "I am an old man," he said to me, the other day, "and shall not live to see it; but I know it will come. It has commenced well, and must end in a thorough Catholic reform! I am sure of it!"

We cannot speak of the home of Father Hyacinthe, for he has none; but that which is far dearer to him than home he took rightful possession of last Sunday morning—the altar. The church of Gasteig was crowded by worshipers, who joined reverently in the ceremonies which we have never heard any other priest celebrate with such profound sentiment of devotion, such touching and distinct language, and such priestly unction. Since September, 1869, when his heroic hand opened the door and he went forth from his monastery, that had become a prison to his conscience, and his prophetic cry of the soul thrilled the whole Christian world, he has refrained in every way from the exercise of his ministry. But he has never ceased to demand justice and liberty of council, Pope and bishops; and, having failed to obtain either—instead of which he has received a saint's measure of reproach and calumny—he now takes up again that divine ministry that he has received, not from those who have laid their hands upon his head, but from that superior and infallible Bishop who calls his priests in the liberty of his everlasting truth, and anoints them with the holy chrism of his ineffable love, for which excommunications of bishops and anathemas of popes are as "sounding brass and tinkling cymbals."—Independent.

MUNICH, October, 1871.

THE NAME JESUS.

One of our exchanges forcibly says: The world's poet would have us think there is little in a name. Carlyle, in his strong, grotesque way, says: "There is much, nay, almost all, in names. The name is the earliest garment wrapt round the earth, to which it henceforth cleaves more tenaciously than the very skin." Plato recommended parents to give happy names to their children, because the minds, actions and successes of men depended upon these as well as upon genius and faith.

God the Father saw that there was a significance in names, that an appropriate one should be given to his Son, wherefore he highly exalted him, and gave him a name which is above every name.

There is a Midas magic, it is said, in a name that can change in a moment all things to their opposites. The name of Jesus has, must have, an irresistible force. It has been the means of changing many things to the opposite—sinners into saints, hate into love, and death into life.

Some names call up painful thoughts or suggest unpleasant relations. We cannot blame the Spanish king—Roman Catholic that he was—when he refused to employ as his secretary a man who, though also a Romanist, was called Martin Lutero. The name too plainly suggested the great reformer. Some eminent men saw the necessity of changing their names in order to exert a greater influence. One of the great reformers was originally named Hertz Schwartz—black earth; which he changed in favor of the elegant Greek word meaning the same—Melanethon.

The Father in naming his Son was careful in the selection. The name of Jesus has a pleasant sound in every language. It is simple and beautiful. The lines of the familiar hymn express the thought:

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds
In a believer's ear."

It will never cost the Sou his throne. There is a beauty in the name of Jesus which well befits the Prince of heaven. There will be no necessity to change it in order to have him exert a greater influence. He hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than the angels.

Names originally were given on account of some characteristic of the bearer, or incident. Thus Adam means red, indicating that the body was taken from the red ground; Moses, drawn from the water. So the name Jesus was given on account of a main characteristic. It means Sinner-Savior. He came into the world for the express purpose of saving sinners. He came to set the people free. There are names which still powerfully influence the world, though some of the owners have been dead for centuries. We feel the power of great names. They have a mnemonic power. They call up great deeds and memorable words. The name of Jesus works wonderfully in the world. It calls up our minds great deeds, words, looks. It has a mnemonic power. It brings before us Bethlehem, Nazareth, Gethsemane, Calvary. It stands in the center, and from it radiates Christ, Immanuel, Savior, Messiah, Redeemer, Mediator and all those other precious names. He has glorious titles, but Jesus is the most precious. We do not forget that the best of names are used as a cloak for the ugliest and basest of sins. "Oh, Liberty," said Madame Roland, as she bowed her neck to the guillotine, "what crimes are committed in thy name!" It is not strange, then, that many may make an injurious use of the name Jesus, when by it they cover fanatical acts and slanderous words. To what unholy uses has it been put!

It is a name of power, and we should use it so as to become powers. If in that name the Gentiles trust, if there is none other name given among men whereby we can be saved, if the disciples preached boldly in the name of Jesus and worked miracles, surely we too with it can work wonders. In ancient days the name of a hero was a standard to which men flocked. Mohammed's brought thousands, Napoleon's inspired multitudes. Men were drawn by their potent spell. Jesus is our leader. Will not his name inspire us with courage? Do we want a rallying cry? Here it is—Jesus. Do we want a watchword? Here it is—Jesus. Do we want a name to inscribe upon our banners? Here it is—Jesus. Do we want a name that will give strength in the midst of battle? Here it is—Jesus. Do we want a name that will terrify our foes? Here it is—Jesus. It is truly a name of power, for at the name of Jesus all the hosts of heaven, and the myriads of the human race who still live, or have lived, or shall live, are to bend the knee, and every tongue is to confess, either voluntarily or by force—even the wrath of men shall praise thee—that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father.—Advance.

INFLUENCING CHILDREN.—If you would influence children for the right, win their love. It takes little to do that. A child's heart is warm, ready to give back full measure of love for a tender smile or a helping hand.

Do not repulse them if their caresses are rough or their rejoicings noisy. What is your rumpled collar or aching head to the harm done when you chill the child's affection? Said a stout, rough farmer to me: "I like Will. S.; I haven't seen him for years and years, but I like him. He used to let us go with him to the fields or off fishing, and took pains to make us happy, as if he thought us of some consequence, if we weren't knee-high."

Don't scold them. If you must reprove—and children will respect and love you more if you reprove their faults—let your manner be firm and quiet. No bluster avails with them, but they know at once when you are resolute.

Above all, be sincere. As has been often said, children are the surest of detectives. You cannot cheat them with pretense, as you can their elders. To influence them to purity and truth you must yourself be thoroughly pure and true.

A LIBRARY of seven hundred volumes has been purchased for the use of the Brooklyn penitentiary inmates from funds collected by the Rev. Mr. Bass and Dr. Zabriskie.

THE THIMBLE.—The name of this little instrument is said to have been derived from "thumb-bell," being at first thimble, and afterward thimble. It is of Dutch invention, and was brought to England about the year 1605, by John Lofting, who commenced its manufacture at Islington, near London, and pursued it with great profit and success. Formerly iron and brass were used, but latterly steel, silver and gold have taken their places. In the ordinary manufacture, thin plates of metal are introduced into a die, and then punched into shape. In Paris gold thimbles are manufactured to a large extent. Thin sheets of sheet-iron are cut into dies of about two inches diameter. These, being heated red hot, are struck with a punch into a number of holes, gradually increasing in depth to give them the proper shape.

The thimble is then trimmed, polished, and indented around its outer surface with a number of little holes, by means of a small wheel. It is then converted into steel by the cementation process, tempered, scoured and brought to a blue color. A thin sheet of gold is then introduced into the interior, and fastened to the steel by means of a polished steel mandril. Gold leaf is then applied to the outside, and attached to it by pressure, the edges being fastened in a small groove made to receive them. The thimble is then ready for use. Those made in this manner do not wear out, as so many ordinary gold thimbles do, but will last for years. The gold coating, if cut away by needles, may be easily replaced; but the steel is of an excellent quality, and very durable.

"ONLY A LITTLE WHILE, SIR."—"Well, Molly," said the judge, going up to the old apple woman's stand, "don't you get tired of sitting here these cold, dismal days?"

"It is only a little while," said she.

"And the hot, dusty days?" said he.

"It's only a little while, sir," answered Molly.

"And your sick rheumatism days?" said the judge.

"It's only a little while, sir," said she.

"And what then, Molly?" asked the judge.

"I shall enter into that rest which remains for the people of God," answered the old apple woman devoutly, "and the troubles of the way there don't fret or pester me. It's only a little while, sir."

"All is well that ends well, I dare say," said the judge; "but what makes you so sure, Molly?"

"How can I help being sure, sir," said she, "since Christ is the way, and I am in him? He is mine, and I am his. Now I only feel along the way. I shall see him as he is in a little while, sir."

"Ah, Molly, you've got more than the law ever taught me," said the judge.

"Yes, sir, because I went to the gospel."

"Well, Molly, I must look into these things," said he, buying an apple and walking off.

"There's only a little while, sir, for that, and we are not quite sure of having even a little while," said she.

DEATH OF DR. BRECKINRIDGE.—The Rev. Robert J. Breckinridge, D. D., died at his home in Danville, Kentucky, December 19, after a somewhat protracted illness. He was born March 8, 1800, studied at Princeton and Union Colleges, and in 1823 began the practice of law. In 1829 he became a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in 1832 was made pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Baltimore, where he labored for thirteen years. For two years he was president of Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, and in 1853 was appointed professor of exegetic and polemic theology in the Theological Seminary in Danville.

Dr. Breckinridge was one of the leaders in the excision movement, and a pronounced and able opponent of all innovation. His concerted action with the North during the war rendered the later years of his life less popular among his old friends and neighbors. His chief work as an author is his book on Theology, which he designed should be a resume of all theological knowledge and a settlement of all theological questions.

The Breckinridge family have occupied a conspicuous place in the history of the country. The deceased was probably not inferior to any that have borne that illustrious name.—Interior.

DO NOT many go with burdened hearts, a sense of sin, troubled and grieved, when a look from you, a shake of the hand, a cordial, sympathizing word, a petition in prayer, a suggestion in exhortation, directed by the Holy Spirit, might prove just the necessary thing to comfort the afflicted soul?—Congregationalist.

"IT IS CURIOUS," said an old gentleman to his friend, "that a watch should be perfectly dry when it has a running spring inside."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

MR. GLADSTONE has replied to the anxious inquiries of Mr. Whalley, who wrote to know whether he really was a Roman Catholic or not, by saying that he was not.

THE new Methodist Episcopal church at Indianapolis, the handsomest church of that denomination now in the West, was dedicated on the tenth ultimo, the discourse being delivered by Dr. Sims, of Baltimore, Maryland, the old pastor, under whom the enterprise was commenced.

REMARKABLE progress has been made within a few years in India in the education and general improvement of the people, and especially in the emancipation of woman. No more striking evidence of this change could be given than the fact that a Hindoo lady has been delivering lectures on female education, and on other subjects connected with the elevation of her sex.

THE Rev. Dr. Leacock, rector of the Episcopal Church of the Epiphany, in New York, has resigned his charge. Reason why: He thinks that the prayer book does teach baptismal regeneration and various other sacerdotal doctrines; and, in spite of the bishop's definition, cannot be made to mean anything else. He does not believe these doctrines, and therefore withdraws from the active ministry.

CHURCHLESS COUNTIES.—Rev. Dr. Howe, Bishop elect of the Episcopal diocese of Central Pennsylvania, in an address lately made, presented a very dark picture of some parts of the field into which he is going. He said: "I am soon called upon to preside over the destinies of a diocese composed of thirty counties of this State. In several of these there is not an Episcopal church, and in two of them there are no churches of any kind."

EPISCOPAL.—The Protestant Episcopal Almanac for 1872 gives the following statistics of the Episcopal Church in the United States: Bishops, 54; clergy, 2,898; baptisms, 38,405; confirmations, 24,124; communicants, 224,999; marriages, 9,698; burials, 16,791; candidates for orders, 412; ordinations—deacons, 124, presbyters, 116; Sunday school teachers, 24,494; Sunday school scholars, 229,090; contributions, $5,544,574.81.

BISHOP PATTESON, of the English Church, who has been working for years most heroically and successfully in the Melanesian group, in the South Pacific ocean, has been put to death by the natives, no doubt in revenge for the crimes of the slave-traders who infest that region. In his missionary ship he was wont to sail from island to island, and on one of these voyages was captured by some of the enraged islanders, who did not know him, and who, in their ignorant vengeance, put him to death, simply because he was a white man.

SCANDINAVIANS IN MINNESOTA.—There are in Minnesota about 60,000 Scandinavians, divided as follows: 30,000 Norwegians, 20,000 Swedes and 10,000 Danes. Nearly all of those who profess religion are Lutherans. Each nationality has its separate church organizations and edifices, and there is no community of feeling among them, though they all sprung from the same parent stock. The Swedes use the German letter in their literature, and the Norwegians the Roman of English. The Norwegians have a theological seminary in Minneapolis, which is as yet but poorly endowed, but which is not likely to fail, for the men who support it are in dead earnest. So writes a correspondent of the Universalist.

ZION'S HERALD brings us an account of the annual meeting of the Boston Wesleyan Association, held in the new Association Hall, December 20. The report of the treasurer, J. P. Magee, showed that the property cost $300,000. Its value is much greater now. The income from the rent of the room is likely to be $5,000 per year, after meeting all expenses. The Herald has more than met its expenses during the past year. We congratulate all parties interested in this satisfactory exhibit. The following officers of the association were elected for the ensuing year: A. I. Benyon, president of the Exchange National Bank, president; Pliny Nickerson, vice president; Franklin Rand, secretary; J. P. McGee, treasurer; J. G. Cary, auditor; Isaac Rich, E. F. Porter, A. Spear, E. H. Dunn, directors.

GOVERNMENT AID IN SOUTH AMERICA.—In Rosario, South America, an important concession has been made to the Protestants, which argues well for the progress of liberal ideas in this important city. Rev. Thomas B. Wood, missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has succeeded in obtaining a monthly grant from the municipality to aid him in sustaining a Protestant school. Bro. Wood had a long struggle to obtain the grant, but it was given at last. The school, if successfully carried on, will aid the progress of the gospel greatly. In a note to us communicating this information, Rev. E. G. Wesley, late of South America, says: "They who have resided in these parts will readily appreciate Bro. Wood's success; it means far more than would at first be understood, since the whole corporation is Catholic."

THOSE CHINESE PERSECUTIONS.—The New York Journal of Commerce, having seen Dr. Maclay's letter concerning persecutions of missionaries in China, comments quite justly as follows. California is as illiberal as Arkansas.

While some State and city officials on the Pacific coast seem to be in collusion with the persecutors of Chinamen—being apparently afraid or powerless to bring the murderers and tormenters of those poor fellows to justice—the government authorities in parts of China are setting a different example. We have been favored with an advance copy of a remarkable letter from Rev. Dr. Maclay, superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal mission in Hokchiang district, south of Foochow. The writer mentions three outrages in different places, upon native missionaries, in each of which cases the local magistrate or military officer promptly interfered, rescued the victims, and took immediate measures to punish the assailants. In each instance the preacher would have been killed but for the firm and noble conduct of the authorities, who will take care by dealing out prompt retribution that such offenses are not repeated. The feeling against the native missionaries in China is stronger, if anything, than that against the missionaries of foreign birth. It is fully as intense as that cherished by the vulgar rabble of our Pacific coast cities against the Mongolians there. At this time, when news of the maltreatment of Chinamen in San Francisco and other American cities has become circulated in China, the antipathy to missionaries from this country and their native allies is stronger than ever. By so much more are the good faith and heroic firmness of the Chinese officials, who shielded and will avenge the injured missionaries, to be praised. For very shame, the so-called Christian magistrates of America should try to equal, in the administration of even and exact justice, the officials of China, whom we are so fond of terming "heathen."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

TROUBLES.—Some good Christians have a great deal of trouble in this world. The reason of it is that God is preparing them for very great happiness in heaven.

Last summer, when in the city of Amsterdam, in Holland, I was very much interested in a visit we made to a place there famous for polishing diamonds. We saw them as they were engaged in this work. When a diamond is first found it has a rough dark outside, and looks just like a common pebble. The outside must be ground off, and the diamond polished before it is fit for use. It takes a long time to do this, and it is very hard work. The diamond has to be fixed very firmly in the end of a piece of hard wood or metal. Then it is held close to the surface of a metal wheel, which is kept going round. Fine diamond dust is put on this wheel, because nothing else is hard enough to polish the diamond. And this work is kept on for days and weeks and months, and sometimes several years, before it is finished. And if a diamond is intended to be used in the crown of a king, then longer time and greater pains are spent upon it, so as to make it look as brilliant and beautiful as can be.

Now Jesus calls his people his jewels. He intends them to shine like jewels in the crown he will wear in heaven. To fit them for this they must be polished like the diamond.

And God makes use of the troubles he sends on his people in this world to polish his jewels. And when we get to heaven and see how beautiful they look, we shall see that it was indeed good for them that they were troubled. It has fitted them for greater happiness there.

WHO IS YOUR FRIEND?—Who is your friend? Not the boy or girl, man or woman, who tries to lead you astray, tempts you to do wrong, mocks at sacred things, or gives you bad advice or bad example. Such a person is your enemy. Listen not to him.

Who is your friend? The person who tells you to do right, to walk in truth, to be faithful in good works; the person who urges you to pray, to study God's word, to be always at church, to look forward to full membership with his people, to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. Such a person is your friend. Listen to him.

"IN 1870 ten million dozen corsets were imported into the United States. Near Strasburg there are one thousand five hundred handlooms employed in weaving corsets for consumption in the United States." That's just it—"corsets for consumption."

THE ADJOURNMENT.

The Louisiana Conference adjourned on Monday night, the eighth instant. The proceedings of Monday embraced the adoption of the reports of several committees. The memoirs of our deceased brethren, Rev. Thomas Samford and Rev. William G. McGaughey, were read, and grateful and affectionate tributes were paid to their memory by members of the Conference. The memorial service was concluded by singing, with touching pathos and power, the hymn:

And let this feeble body fail,
And let it droop or die,
My soul shall quit the mournful vale,
And soar to worlds on high.

Before the appointments were announced Bishop Kavanaugh made an appropriate address, broad and scriptural, and well calculated to stimulate and strengthen the noble band of itinerants who were about to enter upon another year of toil and sacrifice. The sublimest hour of all in our grand and effective economy is that one when a Conference of preachers receive their appointments from the Bishop. A gracious revival influence pervaded the community during the session, and a goodly number professed religion and were added to the membership of the church. We forgot to mention, last week, that our new church at Monroe is called Nolley Chapel, after the heroic and sainted pioneer, whose name has become a household word in Louisiana Methodism. Everybody spoke in the highest terms of the profuse and refined hospitality of Monroe and Trenton. Our home was with Colonel Garrett, a name long and favorably known to the judiciary of the State. We were gratified to find him and his house in the Methodist Church, and striving for the incorruptible crown. We are sure that Bro. Foster and President Andrews will join us in a testimony of gratitude to this kindest of hosts, and to his considerate and amiable family. Suitable expressions of thanks were voted to the good people, to the courthouse authorities, to the railroads, stages, steamboats, and to Richard Majors, the colored ferryman, who crossed everybody connected with the Conference, passing between Monroe and Trenton, free of charge. The New Orleans and Jackson, the Vicksburg and Meridian, and the North Louisiana and Texas railroads passed all the members at half fare.

On our return Dr. Marshall met the returning crowd on the ferry at Vicksburg with a writ of habeas corpus, and had the brethren conveyed in a body to his pleasant home, where an evening of generous and wholesome cheer was spent in the society of the ladies of the family and of other pleasant people. From those who were present we have received glowing accounts of the evening's entertainment as an occasion never to be forgotten. It was our luck to accompany some of the sick and feeble folk on the fine steamer Natchez home, and as the boat let go her lines immediately we could not be a partaker of the feast.

Our three days on the river were, however, pleasant ones, with the best of company and the best of fare. Captain Leathers treated our company generously, and is entitled to a vote of thanks. He is a veteran steamboatman, having been thirty-seven years in the business, and still stalwart and vigorous. We sleep better on the Natchez than on any boat afloat. As for matters outside, there was much cotton coming aboard at various points, passengers arriving and departing, a great many negroes shifting about, and seeking homes and employment for the year. The coast looks bare and quiet, enjoying the sleep of winter. The rolling season is over, no smoke goes up from the tall chimneys of the sugar-houses, and the billowy green of three months ago has given place to nude and brown fields. In some places the early plows were moving, but for the most part everything was in a state of repose. The next Conference meets in New Orleans. Circumstances constrained Bishop Kavanaugh to return home immediately. He will ever be welcome to the territory and sessions of the Louisiana Conference. With no apparent infirmities of age, his bow abides in strength, and his ministrations among us have lost nothing in vigor and power since he first met us sixteen years ago.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

AN APPEAL.

Mr. Editor: While you were at Conference I paid a visit to this honored institution. There I found a most admirable body of students and tried professors hard at work. In point of discipline and thoroughness of instruction the college was never in better condition. I was glad to learn that three-fourths of the young men are members of the church. On Sabbath afternoon I walked up to the center building, and there I found some twenty of the students engaged in a prayer meeting led by one of their own number. An unusual interest in the temperance movement has sprung up in the town; nearly all the young people in it, of both sexes, have joined the order. The scaffolding is still on the front of the main building; its columns have been rebuilt and are ready to receive their capitals; the iron castings upon which the entablature is to rest, and the stone for the caps, are on the ground. The builder, Mr. White, has thus far done his work well. He is now ready to resume and continue the front on to completion. This repairing is not in the way of the classes, which recite in the building. I would here observe, there is a great difference between work going up and walls falling down; and though many may be impatient while marking the slow progress of the builders, yet that progress is in the right direction. The Building Committee is composed of judicious, reliable gentlemen, and our friends may rest assured that all funds contributed toward the repair will be economically and promptly applied. The notes and drafts which were given me for these repairs have so far proved to be good, and but little will be lost.

In my report of collections made before I left for the Pacific, I failed to report the sum of $7,500 of promissory notes presented by Judge Edward McGehee, of Woodville, Mississippi, to the college, and available to the Board of Trustees in canceling its obligations to the former faculty. The amount of these notes, with interest, is at present in the neighborhood of $15,000. At its last session the board resolved to give it the direction indicated by the generous donor.

The whole sum so far actually collected for repairs does not exceed $12,000. We need for completion, and to sustain the faculty while the regular classes are forming, $12,000 more.

I see by the action of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences that this responsibility of repairing and sustaining Centenary has been devolved upon its president, Rev. G. G. Andrews, and myself. For my own part, I am ready to do any work for the cause of my Lord; and I believe no department of toil in the church more likely to redound to the glory of God and the salvation of souls than the full reviving of this college. I am content to supplement the labor and wisdom of such men as William Winans, John Lane and Benjamin Drake, and, so far as I may be able, to make good our virtual pledgee to those noble laymen who gave so freely of their substance toward the building up of this institution, of whom some are now dead, and some remain to this present day. I am sure that the church in this city, to go no farther, will not suffer us to bear this burden alone. I wish to obtain during the next few months, from every part of our territory, five persons who will give say $1,000 each, ten persons $500 each, twenty persons $200 each, and from fifty persons $100 each. This will enable us not only to complete the building, but to support the faculty until the college gets under full headway.

I know there are members of our church in the Southwest—and I appeal to no others—whom God has blessed; who have had the management of a great deal of money during their lives, and who are expected by him to act as faithful stewards of his mercies. I do not limit them. I know of no better use that can be made of money in God's service than in the support of a school that has added so much to the strength of our church in the Southwest. I am convinced that immediately around Centenary is a community the best suited to sustain a college of any in the two Conferences, because in nearly every farm-house in the Felicianas there is to be found one of its graduates. Our church is now demanding a better ministry—a more enlightened and sanctified. Let it be remembered that our own Wesley and his noble coadjutors sprang from the highest seat of learning in England; that he was Greek lecturer at Oxford when called of God to the greatest work possible to man; that his learning never came amiss, and fully baptized, as it was, into the spirit of the Master, that it constituted no small part of his power with the people.

I shall be glad to hear by letter from all whose hearts are moved to this good work. I speak both for the Savior, the Conferences, and in behalf of the youth of our people—too many of whom, alas! are being denied the advantages of sound religious influence and proper mental development and training.

J. C. Keener.

THE LEGISLATIVE WAR.

Since the fourth of January our Legislature has been in a disorganized condition, and the city has been almost continually threatened with violence and bloodshed. The Legislature is divided into two great factions, each faction holding separate sessions and claiming to be the true and legal body. Governor Warmoth and Colonel Carter are the leaders. The former seems to have outgeneraled the latter, holds possession of the State House, and has maintained the organization of his adherents as the General Assembly of Louisiana. Meanwhile Speaker Carter, and the members friendly to his movement, claim to be the lawful House, and hold regular sessions at the Cosmopolitan club rooms. Colonel Carter, ejected from the speakership by the Warmothites, and a number of his followers unseated by them, has in vain demanded possession of their hall in the State House. The Governor holds the capitol by armed policemen, and persists in keeping the Carter party out. At one time it was apprehended that the State House would be forcibly assaulted, and that popular riot and bloodshed would follow.

During all this peril United States troops have been quartered in the city, and Gatlin guns, with their murderous grapeshot, have been kept ready for action. The present indications are that quiet and tranquillity are about to be restored, and that the General Assembly, as now constituted and occupying the State House under the ægis of Governor Warmoth and his Metropolitans, will gradually draw the disaffected members and proceed with business. The oppressive legislation which has well-nigh inaugurated a reign of terror has been repealed by the Warmoth Legislature. We quote as follows from the Picayune of Monday, the fifteenth:

The Senate.—1 P. M.—There being a quorum of the Senate present, including Mr. Pinchback, bills were introduced by Senators Lynch, McMillen, Anderson and Thomas, (the two latter Democrats,) repealing in toto the registration law, the election law, the constabulary law and the printing law.

They were all repealed without a dissenting voice, and the repeal bills sent at once to the House.

The House of Representatives.—1.30 P. M.—There being seventy-eight members present, the House was notified of the repeal by the Senate of the registration, election, constabulary and printing laws.

The House at once took up these repeal bills and passed them without a dissenting voice, and notified the Senate of the fact.

Repeal Bills Signed by the Governor.—At 3 o'clock, the repeal acts, as passed by the Senate and House, were presented to the Governor, and were at once signed by him.

These iniquitous laws, under a strong popular pressure, are swept from the statutes, and it is to be hoped that a better era is dawning upon our oppressed and misgoverned people.

Things had reached a point where there must be violent revolution or legislative reform. We trust that the latter will be real and thorough, and that the utter ruin to which we have nearly come may be averted. It is not conceivable that lower depths of corruption and abuse of official position exist than those already reached. No people in the world have been subjected to so humiliating and grinding a despotism as that which Radicalism has inflicted upon our State. Such an abyss of rottenness and unblushing venality never yawned before to devour the substance and to overthrow the liberties of the people. Our citizens have suffered long and patiently, and their forbearance from violence and revolution has been wise.

The excitement and manifestations of the past fortnight will have a good effect in bringing our oppressors to their senses, and in demonstrating the absolute necessity of reform and moderation. A taxation which is equal to five or six per cent. on the value of property is no better than outright confiscation; and the tyranny of the executive, controlling the elections and the entire local affairs of the parishes, left hardly a particle of influence in the hands of the citizens and property holders. Such a state of affairs cannot continue much longer. Driven to recklessness and despair, the people's cry for relief must be heard, and no political combinations can successfully oppose the demand. All classes, except those who fatten on office, and are growing rich from the life-blood of the country, are equally concerned in the movement to secure better laws and a purer administration.

Colored M. E. Church in America. The recent organization of a Conference for Louisiana by this denomination promises much for the welfare of the colored people of the State. We have not space for the entire proceedings. The organization was duly perfected at Trenton on the fourth instant. Several were ordained, and a number admitted into full connection. Bishop Miles stationed thirty-five preachers, and it is probable that most of the work left to be supplied will be filled during the year. The appointments will be found on our second page this week.

The Nashville Christian Advocate begins the year in its new form of sixteen pages, and is perhaps a little more spacious than formerly. It has a bright and cheerful look, and is in a most convenient shape for the readers. Its entire make-up leaves nothing more to be desired in size or quality. All praise is due to the veteran editor and enterprising publisher for the very beautiful and complete paper which they are sending forth as the organ and representative of Southern Methodism. May great and deserved prosperity attend the Advocate.

The Southern Organ.—We notice that this staunch defender and advocate of temperance and good morals generally has been revived, and that its old editor, Rev. J. W. Harmon, is again at the helm. We wish the paper a prosperous and useful career. It is a handsome eight-page sheet, about half as large as the Advocate. Terms, $2 per year.

The aforetime Texas Christian Advocate is now the Christian Advocate, published at Galveston, and very much enlarged and improved. Veal & John have retired from the publication and turned it over to the Advocate Publishing Company.

In Russia people who are picked up on the highways in a state of intoxication are condemned, whatever may be their social station, to sweep the streets for one day, and it is not rare in St. Petersburg to see well-dressed individuals thus employed.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

Woman's Worth and Worthlessness. The complement to "A New Atmosphere." By Gail Hamilton. New York: Harper & Bros., 1872. Duodecimo, 291 pages.

We have found this book much better than we expected. It is piquant, readable, and a fair treatment of the woman question. The suffrage question is examined with a good deal of thoroughness and candor, and the expediency of granting the ballot to women is met with a strong and conclusive refutation. It would hardly do for any but a woman to say all that Gail Hamilton has said in this volume. Her estimate of her own sex may be supposed impartial, and we may hope that her arguments will tell upon those who would listen to no other voice. Containing, as it does, some exceptionable matter, the volume is on the whole timely, and calculated to do good service against one of the most pernicious movements of the age. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

Gentle Measures in the Management and Training of the Young. By Jacob Abbott. New York: Harper & Bros., 1872.

This is a 12mo of 330 pages, beautifully illustrated. The title indicates the central and prominent idea of the author, and the main principle which he advocates in the government of children. Without adopting his views altogether, we can safely recommend the book to parents and teachers. They will find in it many valuable suggestions, and will be grateful for the light and guidance which it affords in the discharge of some of their most delicate and perplexing duties. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

Burke's Magazine for Boys and Girls for December is the last number of the publication. We have welcomed its monthly visits from the first number to the last, and have borne our testimony to its merits as the best thing of its kind in the South. We quote "a last word" from the editor: "The present number of Burke's Magazine is the last that will be issued. For three years and a half we have striven to give the boys and girls of the South a periodical of their own. We thought such a publication was needed, and would meet with a cordial support. We were mistaken. Either Southern boys and girls do not want a Southern juvenile publication, or we have not succeeded in making one to their liking. It has cost the editor a good many hours of hard work, and the publishers a good many dollars, to find this out. It would be folly to continue what is not wanted, and we give way to any others who may choose to occupy the field of juvenile literature in the South. To those little friends—and many older ones—who have stood by us from first to last, and to many of our editorial brethren who have so kindly noticed us, we return our grateful thanks. They have done what they could—and if there had been more like them we should not be obliged to write this farewell."

The Christmas number of the Illustrated Christian Weekly is very handsomely illustrated with fourteen pictures—one of them, entitled "I wish you a merry Christmas," being a full-page design, beautifully printed. "John Rogers," the sculptor, is the subject of an interesting sketch, with a portrait and illustrations from his well-known works. "A Cathedral Door in Spain," and "A Protestant Church in America," are scenes drawn from actual life. The Christmas poem is well illustrated, and cannot fail to interest both young and old. This number is increased in size by the addition of a four-page supplement, and it is announced that, beginning with the next number, the paper will be enlarged to twelve pages, without increase of price.

Good Words for the Young for December has reached us. This splendid republication by Lippincott is hardly excelled by any periodical in the world in its literary and artistic finish. In its table of contents we note: On the High Meadows; Nineteen Hundred and Seventy-two; The Snow Fight; A Paddle in a Canoe; What we saw Underground; The Model Ship, and other articles.

The December number of the University Monthly contains its usual well-assorted and instructive articles. We sample their titles as follows: Learning to Write; Three Things Necessary to Success in a Primary Teacher; The Beginning of Education. The Boys and Girls' Department, and Monthly Notes and Educational Intelligence, are well sustained in the present number.

The Little Corporal for January comes out in a new costume, not military as of old, but in the garb of peace. The illustrations and printed matter are equal to anything in its past history. John E. Miller, publisher, Chicago, Illinois.

Appletons' Journal more than maintains its well-established reputation as the best journal of literature, science and art in the country. The number of January 6 is beautifully illustrated.

THE SOUTHERN MAGAZINE for January has: What I Saw of the Battle of Chickahominy; A Soldier of Fortune; Notes on E. A. Pollard's Lost Cause, by General G. T. Beauregard; Sovereignty in the United States; Run to the Earth; A Story of Nine Travelers, and other articles, besides Reviews and the Green Table.

OLD AND NEW for January has: Midnight, 1871-2; Six of One by Half a Dozen of the Other; The Gate Called Beautiful; Modern English Novels; The Organ Blower, and other articles. The number closes with a sketch of Frederic Wadsworth Loring, who was killed in Arizona in November last.

THE HOUSEHOLD for January is promptly to hand, and contains a world of good things in all of its departments of literature and domestic information.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST for January is an excellent number, and profusely illustrated. Published by Orange Judd & Co., New York, at $1.50 per annum.

THE SOUTHERN FARM AND HOME for January has been received. The frontispiece is a well-engraved likeness of Hon. Jefferson Davis.

THE Southern Christian Advocate of January 10 contains the salutatory of the new editor, the Rev. F. M. Kennedy. Sorry to part with Dr. Myers. We heartily welcome Bro. Kennedy. We quote as follows:

Satisfied with Southern Methodism as it is, the Southern Christian Advocate proposes the sponsorship of no "new departure" in church polity, but is content, for the present at least, to urge upon its readers the propriety and safety of walking by the same rule and minding the same things. Convinced, however, that much of the success which has crowned its work has been due, under God, to a flexibility in the system which yielded promptly to the pressure of providential demands, it will not withhold its cooperation or advocacy from any measure which is manifestly demanded for its improved efficiency and enlarged success.

As the organ of the patronizing Conferences, the Southern Christian Advocate will strive to reflect the views and deserve the esteem of those in whose interest it is conducted; and it is confidently hoped that its columns will be regularly enriched by contributions from the many gifted writers within its territory, who owe this service to the church, and should render it through the medium of their own paper.

If in the performance of the delicate and unfamiliar duties of our office, the editorial prerogative should at any time impinge harshly against the sensibilities of even the humblest of our readers, the injured may feel assured that the wound has not been wantonly inflicted, but has resulted from what we honestly, if erroneously, believe to be required by the interests of the paper or the welfare of the church.

To our brethren of the press—into whose august fellowship we enter with diffidence—we would say that if at any time the canons of editorial comity should be violated by us, they may, without disparagement to their charity, attribute the transgression to inexperience, and feel assured that we hold ourselves, to the full extent of our information, matriculated to the code of their honorable fraternity.

Dr. Myers, in retiring from the position which he has so long and ably occupied, has some last words, from which we quote as much as space permits:

But much remains to be done. The lessons of the past should not be lost. God gave this Methodist people great wealth. They were unfaithful in their stewardship. He stripped them of their possessions. Had they, in the years of their prosperity, lent their money to the Lord, instead of feeding their covetousness, and living in luxury, and pampering pride, they would have had their own with interest. They did not—they lost well nigh all; but God is blessing them again. As my last official warning and exhortation to the prosperous men of the church, let me say: "Beware of the error of the past." "Lay up treasure in heaven." Use your money to push the triumphs of Christianity. Build her houses of worship—support her pastors—educate her young—build up and endow her institutions of learning—work, work for God and his cause. Thus shall the rains of heaven fall upon your own souls, and you shall be "like a tree planted by the rivers of waters."

But the time has come to cease this hortatory strain. The vocation which has thus far allowed it, I must now delegate to another. He will not love the readers of the Advocate less than the writer does—more he cannot love them. He will not be less faithful to them, less diligent in their service or mindful of their profit. Receive him as a brother beloved in the Lord; and may his labors for those I now part with reluctantly be a hundred-fold more fruitful than mine have been.

My work in this long-continued relation to the church is done, and it is committed to the world for its judgment. Some will judge hardly of me and of it; but it is pleasant to believe that very many will judge kindly, leniently. I know I have had faults—have failed in much; but I can say, with clear conscience, that I have never done one an intentional wrong, never been influenced by prejudice or enmity in dealing with subscribers or correspondents; and it is a source of deep thankfulness that, so far as I know, I leave no enemies to rejoice over my disconnection with the paper. If I do, I hope they will pray God to forgive me, as I forgive them—as they forgive me. To that one Master have I sought to stand, though I should fall to all others.

I cannot say the parting word without an offering of gratitude to my cotemporaries—the church editors—for the expressions of kindly feeling and confidence with which they noted my resignation of the editorship. I am happy to know that a sharp word has never been interchanged with any one of them—that we part as friends and brothers. It is an honor to be fellow-laborer with such men—a reward to have their confidence. May heaven make them all, for many years more and more, a blessing to the church.

And now, trusting in the good Providence which has guided me through all my years, I lay down my pen, and offer an ardent prayer for the prosperity of the Southern Christian Advocate, and for gracious favor upon its new editor and on every one of its readers.

Obituaries.

DIED, at the residence of her mother, Mrs. S. C. Terrell, in Charleston, Mississippi, October 27, 1871, in the twenty-fourth year of her age, MIRIAM TERRELL, wife of A. S. Wate. Young, beautiful, a bride, with rare loveliness of disposition, which won her many friends, there was much to bind her to life. She remarked to a friend that she had "desired to live;" "but what a mercy," she added, "that I have not delayed preparation for death till now." She was brought up in the Methodist Church and converted under its teachings; and in the lingering illness of several months she proved the power of God's grace to give patience in intense suffering, through parting from dear ones, even through the "dark valley." Her faith in Jesus as her Savior made her last days triumphant. She was often happy in listening to the soul-stirring hymns of our church, and found precious comfort in the divine word read to her daily by her sister. At times her sufferings were so great that her friends feared life would end in one of the paroxysms. Prayer was often made that God would in mercy soothe the last hour. When it came she seemed only asleep—"asleep in Jesus." And the sorrowing ones in that home, which has lost so much brightness and love with her, are comforted by the thought that "them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

DOUGLAS COOPER WOOD was born on the second of October, 1811, in Wilkinson county, Mississippi, and died in Nashville, Tennessee, July 20, 1871.

First matriculated at Centenary College, where he was loved for his goodness of heart and remarkable warmth and generousness of impulse. He seemed to have all the affectionate tenderness of a woman in his friendships. Otherwise he was far from effeminate. No braver, truer or more enthusiastic soldier ever shed his blood for the lost cause.

From the very beginning to the very end of the war he fought, except when, through weary months, he lay wounded in Virginia. Officers and comrades united in saying that in all the qualities which make up the true soldier he had few equals. He was wounded twice—at the battle of Seven Pines and at Cedar Creek, which last would nearly proved fatal and lamed him for life.

He joined the Methodist Church during the war, and lived the rest of his life a consistent Christian, though he was naturally reserved in the expression of his religious feelings. His last illness was lingering and painful, but triumphant. His last words were such as these: "Tell my wife to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. I leave them all in God's keeping, and pray to meet them in heaven. I put my whole trust in my Savior. He has always been with me, and will not forsake me now. I am not afraid to die. All is bright beyond. Tell all my friends and my brother to meet me in heaven. Oh, my dear mother! Come to me. Kiss me, mother." With these words, so affectionate, tender and trustful, upon his lips, he breathed his last.

Thus in life's prime has passed away one of the truest friends, one of the best soldiers, and one of the most affectionate of husbands. He has gone to the "bosom of his Father and his God."

C. CHAMBERLIN.

MISS SALLIE MILLSAPS.

The subject of this sketch was born in Jasper county, Mississippi, October 15, 1850, and died in Carlandsville, in the same State, August 4, 1871.

Most of her short life was passed in Union parish, Louisiana. During the last three years she was a resident of Trenton, Louisiana. Her girlhood was lovely, and she blossomed into a graceful and beautiful womanhood. The pet of the household, she gladdened all hearts with the music of her presence. Like many young ladies whose hearts are entangled in the meshes of this world's pleasures, and to whose joy-seeking natures the tinsel of fashionable life appears true gold, she long omitted to seek the one thing needful. During our protracted meeting last winter her conscience became awakened, and she became a "pearl-seeker" in reality. Happily converted, her future life became adorned with the spirit of Christian love; and though it was short, yet was it bright and glorious.

Last summer, while on a visit to some relatives at Grindsville, she met the Christian's last foe, and, crossing Jordan's stream, she joined her sainted mother, who had only a little more than a year before fallen asleep in Jesus. Triumphantly she passed through "the valley of the shadow of death," holding to "Jesus, the author and finisher of her faith." Her last words were: "I am going home to Jesus and to my mother"—two names inseparably united, for from the lips of the one she had heard of the other. Although we miss her sadly, yet we rejoice to say:

"By the bright waters now thy lot is cast;
Joy for thee! happy friend; thy bark hath passed
The rough sea's foam.
Now the long yearnings of thy soul are stilled;
Home! home!
Thy peace is won; thy heart is filled!
Thou art gone home."

J. LANE BOWDEN.

ANOTHER good man has fallen asleep in Jesus. Rev. JOHN JASPER LAZENBY was born May 2, 1825, in Columbia county, Georgia, and died in Simpson county, Mississippi, December 7, 1871. His early educational advantages were very limited, and during his youthful life he availed himself of every opportunity to improve those facilities with which God had endowed him. At the age of fourteen he professed saving faith in Christ, and shortly afterward connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South; and but a few weeks previous to his decease the writer heard him say in a class meeting: "He had never for a moment doubted his conversion to God." At the age of seventeen, by the permission of his parents, he left the home of his boyhood to confront and to fight the battles of life alone, taking the Holy Bible as the man of his counsel and the guide of his youth. Shortly after leaving his native State he went to Auburn, Alabama, where he served an apprenticeship as mechanic, and during this time he devoted his leisure hours to the study of the ministry, storing his mind with those precious truths of the gospel which he for a number of years faithfully proclaimed to others.

At the expiration of his apprenticeship he was licensed to preach, and admitted on trial in the Alabama Conference, where he was actively engaged in the work of the ministry for two years, after which he was discontinued at his own request, in consequence of bad health. At the age of twenty-three he married Miss Helen S. Stubbs, of Russell county, Alabama, who, with eight children, mourn his loss. May they meet him on the banks of the river that flows by the throne of God.

Bro. Lazenby was hopeful and cheerful under all the circumstances of life, and under the sorest afflictions he always appeared the most happy, regarding them as the dispensations of a kind Providence, and as so many schoolmasters to lead him to Christ. During his last sickness he was not reluctant to realize that his earthly career would soon terminate—speaking of death familiarly and calmly, and urging upon his wife and children the vast importance of godliness, and that "the fear of God was the beginning of wisdom." A few hours before the fatal messenger came, he called his family around his dying couch, taking each one by the hand, bidding them farewell, with an exhortation to meet him in the better land, where no sods were to be broken for the dead. He then folded his arms, and, like a Christian philosopher, said: "Thank God, the die is cast; I am a sinner saved by grace. I have exhausted my life in teaching sinners how to live; I now show them how a Christian can die." We offer our condolence to the afflicted family in this their hour of bereavement and loss. May the great Head of the Church temper the wind to those little ones upon whose brows he has written: Fatherless!

FEMALE BOARDING SCHOOL.

THE SPRING SESSION of this school, located in the pleasant town of Athens, East Tennessee, on the East Tennessee and Georgia railroad, midway between Knoxville and Chattanooga, will begin on MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 1872.

The school is in charge of Mrs. M. W. Sullins, assisted by competent teachers. The boarding department is in the care of Rev. T. and Mrs. Sullins.

Athens is an eligible location for schools, noted for health, and was the resort of visitors from the South, last summer, in quest of health and pleasure.

Young ladies educated in this fine climate will live longer and enjoy more of life than if educated in the South; and the difference in expense would more than pay the passage to and from this place, so that parents in the South can educate their children here cheaper than at home.

The school rooms are in the same building as the family residence, and pupils can attend school at all times without exposure. Thoroughness in studies, promoting health, developing mental and moral faculties is the constant aim of the principal.

Terms.

Tuition in Literary Department, per term of five months, from $10 to $18, according to studies—payable half in advance, the other half at the middle of the session.

EXTRAS.

Music on Piano	$20 00
Use of instrument for practice	3 00
French language	5 00
Contingent fee	1 50

The Child's Corner.

LEARNING TO PRAY.

BY MARY E. DODGE.

Kneeling, late in the twilight gray,
A little child was trying to pray;
His cheek on his mother's knee,
His busy little feet half hidden,
His smile still coming unbidden,
And his heart brimful of glee.

"I was so naughty! Is it naughty?" Say,
O mamma! I've had such fun to-day,
I hardly can say my prayers.
I don't feel just like praying;
I want to be out-doors playing,
And I am undressed, down stairs.

"I can see the flowers in the garden-bed,
Shining so pretty and sweet and red;
And Sammy is swinging, I guess,
Oh! everything is so fine out there,
I want to put it all in the prayer;
(Do you mean I can do it by 'Yes?')

"When I say, 'Now I lay me'—word for word
It seems to me as if nobody heard.
Would 'Thank you, dear God,' be right?
He gave me my mammy,
And papa, and Sammy—
O mamma! you nodded I might."

Clasping his hands and hiding his face,
Unconsciously yearning for help and grace,
The little one now began.
His mother's nod and sanction sweet
Had led him close to the dear Lord's feet,
And his words like music ran:

"Thank you for making this house so nice—
The flowers, and folks, and my two white mice.
(I wish I could keep right on.)
I thank you, too, for every day—
Only I'm most too glad to pray.
Dear God, I think I am done.

"Now, mamma, rock me just a minute—
And sing the hymn with 'darling' in it.
I wish I could say my prayers!
When I get big, I know I can.
Oh! won't it be nice to be a man,
And stay all night down stairs!"

The mother, singing, clasped him tight,
Kissing and cooing her fond "good night."
And treasured his every word.
For well she knew that the artless jay—
And love of her precious, innocent boy
Were a prayer that her Lord had heard.

Hearth and Home.

A BOY'S HEROISM.

"Oh, dear!" sighed John Allen, as he closed the Sunday school library book, "how I wish I had a chance to do something heroic. I am sick and tired of this humdrum life out here in the woods. Nothing to do but drive the cows away in the morning and drive them back at night—chop down trees and cut them up for firewood—plow, harrow, sow, hoe, and so on to the end. If something only would happen once in a while!"

"When you have lived to be as old as I am," said his grandfather, a white-haired man on the verge of his grave, "you will learn that there is heroism in every-day life that is quite as sublime as those rare acts which are heralded from one end of the country to the other."

"Yes, I suppose you are right, grandpa—of course you are; but I would like to do one of those rare acts myself. It would seem to make a great man of me, and I know it would make me happy, too."

He took down his old straw hat as he spoke, and started off to the woods to hunt up the cows, little dreaming that before he again entered his log cabin home he should, under God, have been the savior of hundreds of precious lives.

He found all the cows but one, a favorite heifer, which belonged entirely to himself, and which he was calculating would some day bring him a nice sum of money toward finishing his education. So, after driving the rest into the barnyard, he went back to search for her.

As he was crossing the railroad track he stopped suddenly, and turned pale. Some wretch had removed several rails, and, of course, unless the engineer could be warned in season, the express train, which would be along in half an hour, would be dashed to utter ruin.

John's heart seemed for a moment to stop beating, while his head grew dizzy. Only for a moment. The safety of hundreds, their salvation from a fearful death, depended upon him alone, for there was no time to call upon others for assistance.

With wonderful rapidity he at once gathered together a pile of brush wood; tossed it on to the track, and set fire to it, which was an easy thing to do, as he had matches in his vest pocket, and the light materials were as tinder. Then he watched it—so carefully—so steadily—gathering more and more and heaping them on, and keeping the flames high and bright.

As he heard at last the shrill whistle of the engine, his heart again seemed to stop beating, and his head was so dizzy he hardly realized that he was awake—it seemed some awful dream—a nightmare, indeed, which bound him as with a spell.

By a wild effort he broke from the agony which entranced him, and, starting ahead of the fire, ran boldly along the track, waving his hat and shouting at the top of his voice.

There was a careful engineer on the train, one who realized the precious value of the human beings confided to his care; and so, on the alert for accidents, he caught the glimpse of John's fire as soon as he turned the distant curve, and the short, sharpe whistle nerved every brakeman to do his duty with electric rapidity. The train came to a dead stop a few rods from the scene of the miscreant's cruel work; the passengers rushed out to ascertain the cause of the sudden detention; and you may guess, little ones, how their faces whitened when they saw from what a terrible accident they had been saved! You may guess, too, their gratitude to God, and also to the young lad who, under him, had been their savior from such a sudden and fearful death.

"Let us pray," said a white-haired minister, who was one of the crowd, and instantly men, women and children knelt on the rough ground of that wild forest and joined with him in thanks to the All Father, and to the humble instrument of the blessed deed.

"What would you like best of all, my boy?" said he, afterward, as with the hundreds of others he went up to John, and took the boy's hands and thanked him personally.

"To go to school, sir," was the prompt reply.

"And go you shall," said the aged man, and instantly he went about with uncovered head among the crowd, holding out his hat and saying only: "The boy would like best of all to go to school."

Ah! how many, many crisp bank-notes and bright eagles found their way into the preacher's hat! Enough to pay all John's school bill, and educate him, too, for what was the darling wish of his heart—practical engineering.

"Wasn't it lucky," said he next day to his grandfather, as he rehearsed for the fortieth time what he meant to do hereafter; "wasn't it lucky that 'little Brin' strayed away—else I shouldn't have gone back—else"—he shut his eyes and turned white—the reverse of the scene was too terrible to think of.

"It was not luck, my son," said old Mr. Allen solemnly; "not luck, but your opportunity; one given by God to test your heroism. Such do not come often, my boy; once only, perhaps, in a lifetime; but opportunities to do good come every day, and in many, many of them there is a heroism which, in the sight of God, is as sublime as that of yours last evening; for it is harder, my son, to do a little act of kindness to a sinful boy or man than to save the lives of hundreds."—Guiding Star.

A GERMAN FABLE.—A raven was crossing a field and saw a cuckoo preparing a soft bed behind a shady bush. That seemed very odd to him; so he crept nearer and asked the cuckoo what he was making there.

"A bed, as you see," the cuckoo answered shortly.

"A bed! What for?" the raven kept on inquiring. "You are not going to lie on the ground? As far as I know, you usually rest in a hollow tree."

"It is not for myself," replied the cuckoo, "but for that poor sick hen there, you see behind the bushes. See that poor creature," he continued, weeping; "she fills my soul with pity; she has not been well for a long time."

"Really, an odd kind of neighborly love. I could never in the least have expected that of you," the raven cried in ecstasy; and the bright tears flowed down his raven cheeks at the thought of this noble deed.

"Yes," the cuckoo continued in a whining tone, "this good hen laid me nearly every day an egg; upon that I have hitherto lived when I could get at nothing else, and how miserable I should be if she should die. I must perish. Yes, must starve in these famine times."

"Ahn, so! It is not precisely for the poor sick hen, but for the eggs, you make the nest," croaked the raven, as, quickly drying his tears, he flew away.

GOOD MANNERS.—Young folks should be mannerly. How to be so is the question. Many a good girl and boy feel that they can't behave themselves in the presence of company. They feel timid, bashful and self-distrustful the moment they are addressed by a stranger or appear in company. There is but one way to get over this feeling and acquire easy and graceful manners; that is, to do the best they can all the time at home, as well as abroad. Good manners are not learned by arbitrary teaching so much as acquired by habit. They grow upon us by use. We must be courteous, agreeable, civil, kind, gentlemanly and womanly at home, and then it will become a kind of second nature to be so everywhere. A coarse, rough manner at home begets a bit of roughness, which we cannot lay off if we try, when we go among strangers. The most agreeable people we have ever known in company are those who are perfectly agreeable at home. Home is the school for all good things, especially for good manners.

The Farm and Garden.

EFFECT OF FOOD ON COWS' MILK.

Dr. Kuhn, of Germany, has recently been making experiments upon the food of cows, with reference to its effect upon the composition of the milk, and found that an increase of fatty or albuminous matter produced an increase in the yield of milk, along with bodily condition, up to a certain maximum; but that, when this maximum is reached, the increase in the yield of milk stopped, while the improvement of bodily vigor went on.

This is in accordance with the experience of every observing farmer. The only exception that can be made to the above rule is in regard to the maximum of the milk yield—that is, that the maximum point is not the same in all cows.

Some cows, the moment you increase the quantity or quality of the food, commence to take on flesh, or, as the doctor expresses it, improve in bodily condition. These cows are not valuable for dairy purposes; and of this class are most of the Durham and Devon cows.

There is another class that, as soon as the food is increased, respond at the pail and churn, and it is a long time before you can get them to fattening up. This class are the valuable ones for the dairy; and this is the principal difference in breeds of cattle for dairy purposes.

It is a common remark among farmers, when speaking of a cow noted as a good milker, that "she is the hardest cow to fatten I ever saw."

We never saw a good milker fat; and for this reason we said in a late number that the cow should be regarded simply as a machine to convert corn, hay, etc., into butter and cheese; but, as Dr. Kuhn has proved, there is, no doubt, a point at which the product will be fat, instead of butter and cheese. We advise farmers to experiment a little, and see how much they can make their cows eat without gaining in flesh. We believe such an experiment would prove profitable.—Practical Planter.

CLEAN CULTURE OF COTTON.

The clean culture of cotton and corn—especially the former—rapidly destroys the organic matter of the soil, the absence of which constitutes the difference between a virgin and an impoverished soil. Now, by what means shall we gradually restore this important principle to our exhausted fields? First, by a proper rotation of crops; we must cease to push our lands in cotton so many years consecutively. Where the lands are abundant the poor fields may rest entirely one year in four. One crop of small grain, two crops of cotton, and one year of rest. But I am satisfied, from my own experience, that a remunerative crop may be gathered every year, and the lands improved without rest. Second, by not depasturing the lands. Let every particle of organic matter, every stalk of corn and cotton, all the grass and weeds, remain to decay on the soil. Much humus will be husbanded in this way, which is lost by the wretched system of suffering stock to run in the fields during the winter. Third, by returning all the cotton seed to the land taken from it, which becomes an immense source of humus itself, in the heavy stubble it induces, besides the coating of grass and weeds, which springs up after a crop of small grain. Fourth, by a proper application of good fertilizers, which supply the soil with the two deficient elements—nitrogen and phosphoric acid—both of which become a great source of humus when applied directly to a small grain crop, or from the effects of what is left in the soil after the application to cotton. If you wish to prevent rust in cotton replenish your fields with the humus which has been extracted from them by our wretched system of cultivation, and the thing is accomplished.—E. M. Pendleton, in Practical Planter.

GREASING WAGONS.

The following extract from the Scientific Press refers to a matter of so much importance and so much neglected that we have no hesitation in bringing it before the attention of farmers:

"Greasing buggies and wagons is of more importance than some people imagine. Many a wheel is ruined by oiling too plentifully. A well-made wheel will endure constant wear for ten to twenty years if care is taken to use the right kind and proper amount of oil; but if this matter is not attended to the wheel will be used up in five or six years, or may be sooner. Lard should never be used on a wagon, for it will penetrate the hub and work its way out around the tenons of the spokes and spoil the wheel. Castor oil is a good material for use on an iron axle; just oil enough should be applied to a spindle to give it a light coating; this is better than more, for the surplus put on will work out at the end, and be forced by the shoulders and nut into the hub around outside the boxes. To oil an axletree, first wipe the spindles clean with a cloth wet with turpentine, if it won't wipe without it. On a buggy or carriage wipe and clean off the back and front ends of the hubs, and then apply a very small quantity of castor oil, or some especially prepared lubricator, near the shoulders and point."

JUDGING SOIL BY TIMBER.—Almost any one knows that the quality of soil may in a great measure be determined by the timber which grows upon it, but of the exact nature indicated by the primitive trees people are not so well posted. Mr. B. Smith, of Patmos, Ohio, writes to the New York Farmers' Club of this matter, and says that white oak land is poor; that red oak and soft maple also indicate poor land; that shell-bark mostly grows in cold, wet land; that flat beech and sugar-maple lands are good for summer crops and grass, but not for wheat; that rolling beech and sugar lands, where large poplar and black walnut abound, are fine grazing lands, and produce, when new, large crops of all kinds except wheat—it is winter-killed; that large white oak and chestnut growing together, and black oak and hickory, indicate a loose subsoil, and lands where the water soon sinks into the subsoil are much the most valuable for grain; that a soil that will raise large crops of all kinds of grain, and then clover and timothy, and after they run out will come in with green grass and white clover, is the best.—Norfolk Virginian.

INDIAN CORN IS KING.—Of all the crops raised in the United States, Indian corn, or maize, which is a better name, is the most important and valuable, as it is the largest in extent, commands the greatest cash value, and is applied to more useful purposes than any other. It may be regarded, too, as the most wholesome. Every animal, and every graminiverous bird, from the partridge up, prefer it to all other grains; and as to man, if not popularly upon an equality with wheat as an article of diet, it is next to it, and it is rejected by none. The meal can be prepared in almost every form in which wheat flour is used, and in several preferred by almost everybody. In pork-making it is indispensable.—Germantown Telegraph.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

LOAF CAKE.—Two cups of sugar, two of milk, two of flour, one of yeast. Make into sponge over night. In the morning rub together two cups of sugar, one of butter and four eggs; flour to make quite stiff; one nutmeg, cinnamon and cloves; if wished, one pound of fruit. Raise till light, and bake in an even oven.

CURE FOR BURNS.—A lady sends an exchange the following recipe for the cure of burns from kerosene, etc.: Take sweet milk and clear starch, and make a poultice; apply as warm as possible; have it draw an hour or two, when it may be removed; then take flour and water, spread on white paper, and place on the burn. The writer adds: "There will never be a scar to show afterward."

AN EXCELLENT TURKISH PILLAU.—Chop up one pound of good mutton, put in a saucepan with one quarter pound fresh butter; set it on the fire and let the meat stew a nice brown; add one pound of the best rice, (well washed,) two pints of hot water, sufficient salt, and a pinch or two of cinnamon, and let it boil slowly till there is no liquor remaining; then take it off and place on the hob with the cover on it for twenty or thirty minutes; dish it up in a dome shape, and serve hot.

Scientific.

THE Engineering and Mining Journal gives account of an interesting method for printing on glass. The type is made of some elastic material. The ink has fluoride of calcium incorporated with it. After the impression is made this ink is decomposed by the action of hot sulphuric acid, which sets free hydro-fluoric acid, which in turn acts on the glass to etch its surface. In this way a beautiful print can be made.

THERE is in the Museum at Cassel a curious collection illustrating European and other trees. It is in the form of a library, in which the back of each volume is furnished by the bark of some particular tree—the sides are made of perfect wood, the top of young wood, and the bottom of old. When opened, the book is found to be a box, containing either wax models or actual specimens of the flower, fruit and leaves of the tree.

IN THE Tower of London is still to be seen an anvil on which was forged the sword used by Richard Coeur de Lion in his conflict with Saladin. Pompeii has yielded up an anvil used before the Christian era; and the British Museum boasts an anvil of the Pharaohs, which is older than Rome, Greece or Jerusalem. This antique anvil is formed very much like those of our day, weighs about seventy-five pounds, and is as sound as when first used, thirty centuries ago.

THE name of "Barometre Cameleon" is given by M. Leuoir to an ingenious instrument, which may be regarded as a combination of the barometer and hygrometer. On the dial of a barometer is a paper circle, divided into four sections. These are colored variously in the parts corresponding with the usual "much rain," "set fair," etc., and these change color, according to the state of the atmosphere. The paper is prepared with deliquescent salts-chloride of cobalt and glycerine.

EXPERIMENTS are now being made at Sandy Hook, by the Stephens Institute of Hoboken, to test the effects of pressure upon boilers. A temporary structure forty-five by thirty-five feet has been erected, in which experiments are taking place. A number of condemned boilers have been secured, which have been in use from thirteen to thirty years. These experiments will test the reliability of the government tests; and the injury, if any, done by the common hydraulic test will be ascertained.

ORIGIN OF AMBERGRIS.—The true origin of ambergris (succunum grisea) was a matter of great dispute in former times; it is found floating in the sea, or cast up on the seashore in the neighborhood of Madagascar, Jamaica, Maldives, Brazil, Molucca, Japan, China, coast of Africa, and it is said also to have been found on the west coast of Ireland, the coast of Norfolk, and the Orkneys. The greatest supply now coming into the market is from the Bahamas and outside Morocco. Formerly several theories as to its nature existed. The inhabitants of Madagascar said it was a kind of bird guano; secondly, it was said to be bitumen from springs; thirdly, a sea mushroom; fourthly, a vegetable wax or gum. The real fact, however, is that it is simply a secretion from the intestines of the sperm whale.

It is generally met with floating in the sea, but it is also met in the intestines of sperm whales—healthy whales do not carry it, but it is generally found in dead or sickly whales. It is always in one place inside the whale—namely, at from two to seven feet from the termination of the intestinal canal. Mr. Dewhurst, therefore, thinks that it is a secretion which collects in the cæcum of the whale, and from the fact that it is found only in dead or dying whales he conjectures that it may possibly be the cause of the death of the whale. There can, however, be no doubt whatever but that ambergris is the refuse of the whale collected in a morbid form. On looking at it very closely I find that it is deposited in regular layers. By delicate manipulation I find the ambergris will split off in layers as one splits up the pasteboard cover of an old book.

The theory of its being a formation analogous to a calculus is confirmed from the fact that frequently hard, shining, black, horn-like substances are found imbedded in the body of the ambergris. These are the beaks of cuttle-fish, which form a great part of the food of sperm whales; these cuttle-fish beaks, however, are not perfect. When the whale swallows the cuttle-fish the soft parts are digested, but the hard beaks remain intact. That the beaks of cuttle-fish are hard to digest is evident from the fact that a few months ago, while dissecting a monk-fish, I found a collection of fifteen or twenty of the beaks in the stomach. I also found a lens of a cuttle-fish eye.

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no refusal. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Willcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors, and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

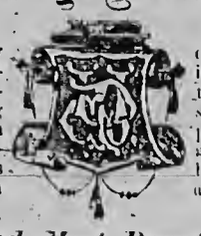
"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,



An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of strictly unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern School Books which should be entirely not to offensive to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. "A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

We have no important change to notice in the general market since our last issue. A few branches of trade have suffered some interruption from the political disturbances caused by the contending factions of the State Legislature; but whatever excitement the latter have created, they have had no material influence on the general commerce of the city. Sugar shows no material change; molasses has ruled at an advance in choice and at previous rates for other grades; flour has shown no variation: corn has been weaker, but without any quotable decline; pork has commanded full prices, and bacon sold at advanced rates for clear rib and clear sides.

The weather has been clear and cool. Nothing has been reported from the country in conflict with our crop remarks last week, but it is anticipated that good roads from the fine weather will enable planters to hurry forward the rest of their crops.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twelfth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales.	22,363
Lake	46
Arkansas	1,517
Mobile	3,160
Florida	153
Texas	386
Total	27,625

On Saturday the movement commenced under the stimulating influence of favorable Liverpool and New York dispatches, and factors advanced their pretensions ¼c., which checked operations. The sales embraced only 4,700 bales, and the closing quotations showed an advance of ⅛c. in good ordinary, and ¼c. in low middling and the higher grades. On Monday unfavorable dispatches from New York, where prices gave way ¼c., had a still more restrictive influence, and the sales were confined to 2,200 bales, the closing quotations showing a falling off of ¼c. from Saturday's figures, good ordinary being put down at 19⅛@19⅜c., low middling at 20⅛@20¾c., middling at 21@21¼c., strict middling at 21⅝@21½c., and good middling at 21⅞@22. On Tuesday the market opened under the depressing influence of a further decline of ⅛c. at New York. Prices showed considerable irregularity, but at the close the weight of opinion was in favor of a reduction of ⅛c. in good ordinary, ¼c. in low middling, and ⅛@¼c. in middling. Good ordinary sold at 19⅜ and 19½c., strict good ordinary at 19⅝ and 19¾c., low middling at 20@20⅛c. and 20¼c., strict low middling at 20⅜@20½ and 20⅝c., and middling at 21⅛c., 21c., 21¼c. and 21½c., the latter for high style. These figures indicate the prevailing irregularity. The sales embraced 4,900 bales.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 511,823 bales, against 627,077 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 321,013 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 16,968 to France, and a decrease of 18,537 to Great Britain, and of 72,708 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	18½ @ 19
Good ordinary	19⅜ @ 19½
Low middling	20 @ 20⅛
Middling	20½ @ 21
Strict middling	21⅛ @ 21½
Good middling	21½ @ 22

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1872. NO. 1.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Louisiana committee have reconsidered their action of Friday, and will depart for New Orleans on Wednesday.

Governor Warmoth has made repeated calls upon the President for troops. It is understood that General Emory has been instructed, in case of emergency, to protect private and public property from pillage, but not to interfere further without orders.

RICHMOND, IND., Jan. 23.—The city gas works exploded this evening, at six o'clock. The engine house and purifying room is a total wreck. No lives lost. The accident occurred by changing the purifier; the gas escaping caught fire from an adjoining room.

NEW YORK, Jan. 23.—Futures are firm. Sales for January delivery are reported at 21¾; for February at 21¾, for March at 22½, for June at 23. Receipts for the week are estimated at 115,000 bales, against 150,000 corresponding week last year.

Brown's sterling rules at 9¼ net. Picayune.

FOREIGN.

HONOLULU, S. I., Dec. 27, 1871.—The recent southerly gale which prevailed in Polynesia caused considerable damage upon the islands of Maui and Kauai. The Wahee and East Maui plantations lost their threshing houses. All the chief plantations had more or less cane blown down and were otherwise injured. The principal plantation had just completed the erection of its threshing house—it being before destroyed by fire—and again it was leveled by the gale.

On Kauai the wind raged with great force in squalls, tearing up trees and unroofing houses. In many instances the houses which were not destroyed by wind were swept down by rain. The whole island suffered from freshets.

Cane and rice fields were swamped and washed out in some instances. Portions of dwelling houses were blown off and carried out to sea.

DUBLIN, Jan. 17.—Cardinal Cullen energetically protests against making education wholly secular, and a call has been issued, signed by influential citizens, to signify the opposition of the Irish people to any measure having that object in view.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 17.—The first Tunca European train over the railroad skirting the Sea of Marmora entered Stamboul yesterday, crossing the old seraglio grounds.

MADRID, Jan. 18.—The ministry have addressed a circular to the governors of the provinces directing the suppression of all organizations connected with the Internationalists.

BOMBAY, Jan. 18.—A dangerous revolt, which broke out among the Loochas of India, has been suppressed. At the first signs troops were dispatched from Delhi; they marched direct to the headquarters of the rebels, whom they met in large force and entirely defeated, killing one hundred and taking several hundred prisoners. The rebels have dispersed, and the country is now perfectly tranquil.

VIENNA, Jan. 18.—Count von Ardecassy, in replying to a Catholic delegation, declared that the Pope was under no restraint, as was evidenced by the recent appointment of thirty bishops. The relations between Austria and Italy are on a good footing; and he knew of no Catholic power which would be justified in offering an asylum to the Pope.

HAVANA, Jan. 19.—The new cemetery will receive the title of "Columbus," and the remains of Columbus, which are now deposited at the cathedral, will be transferred, at some future day, to the new cemetery, and placed inside a grand monument to be erected to his memory.

ROME, Jan. 19.—The Pope was taken suddenly ill on Wednesday.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 20.—Ram Singh and other chiefs in the recent revolt have been captured, with twenty-nine of their adherents, and executed.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 20.—President Thiers and his whole ministry have resigned. The Assembly refuses to accept Thiers' resignation, and have appointed a committee to endeavor to effect a compromise; the deputation are waiting on him, and trying to induce him to reconsider his action, but he insists on resigning, as the Assembly has rejected his tariff measures. Great excitement prevails.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 20, midnight.—The deputation appointed by the Assembly waited on President Thiers this evening and informed him of the vote by which the Chambers had refused to accept his resignation. President Thiers, in response, consented to remain in the service of the Chambers and the country. It is probable the present ministry will remain in office.

PARIS, Jan. 21.—President Thiers has withdrawn his resignation.

Thiers, replying to the delegation from the Assembly informing him of their refusal to accept his resignation, said while withdrawing his resignation he sooner or later would be compelled to retire.

McMahon appealed to Thiers to withdraw his resignation, saying the army would obey the Assembly, but not a dictator, who would likely follow Thiers in office.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 22.—An imperial decree has just been issued which subjects all male citizens of Russia to military duty.

The Texas Railroad Certainly to be Built.

We have been favored with a copy of a very important and most welcome dispatch, as follows:

"NEW YORK, Jan. 19, 1872.

"MESSRS. CHAS. A. WHITNEY & CO.: We have to-day agreed on terms with responsible contractors for immediately building the road from Brashear to the west bank of the Sabine. Bailey is now preparing the contract for signature.

"J. L. MACAULAY,
"Vice President N. O., M. and T. R. R. Co."

Mr. Macaulay is the newly-elected vice president, and is well known in mercantile and financial circles. He is a member of the firm of Hunt & Macaulay, but resides chiefly in New York. The Bailey named in the dispatch is our well-known fellow-citizen, G. W. R. Bailey, Esq., superintendent of the road. We learn that Mr. Griswold, of New York, has been elected president of the company.

This news will be welcomed with great satisfaction by all who desire the prosperity and progress of our city, our State and Texas. Within eighteen months we have good reason to hope that New Orleans will be connected with the interior of Texas by a continuous railroad. The company show a determination to go forward with their great work promptly and vigorously. Whatever action our dilatory City Council may take, these enterprising corporators have the good will and approbation of all our inhabitants, and of millions more.—Picayune.

STATE HOUSE, NEW ORLEANS.

All is quiet around the State House and the political differences regarded as finally settled. A resolution will be introduced into the House inviting back the expelled members, with the exception of Carter. A number of them are already present waiting to take their seats.

It is understood that the new printing bill and a modification of the metropolitan police law will be introduced to-day.

A bill has just been introduced in the Senate, by Senator John Ray, "defining the duties," and "fixing the compensation of State printer." It passed to a second reading and will come up for adoption to-morrow.

Mr. Brewster offered his resignation to the House of Representatives this morning, and it was refused, on motion of Thomas Green Davidson, by a vote of 57 to 6.

Mr. Worrall then introduced a resolution confirming and ratifying the action of the House, in extra session, expelling George W. Carter from the House, and the election of O. H. Brewster, speaker. Adopted by a vote of 56 to 8, sixty-four members voting.

The House has been increased by six new members to-day: Hyams, Tatman, Chachere, Darby, Davis and Bronssard.

THE African expedition fitted out over a year ago to proceed in search of Dr. Livingstone, at the beginning of July last was at Kwihara, an Arab village, five hundred and twenty-five miles from Zanzibar. The first tidings of Livingstone were obtained at this point, and, though not conclusive, seem to justify the belief that he is still alive, though suffering from the desertion of his men, and the want of proper supplies. The expedition will continue its march until the explorer is found, or a definite and final conclusion is reached as to his fate.

THERE is a mighty gulf between God's thoughts and man's thoughts; and the shores of that gulf are as far apart as Christ and self.

THE SYNAGOGUE OF SATAN.

PERSECUTION AND CRUELTY IN MEXICO.

Was John Knox mistaken when he pronounced the Church of Rome to be the synagogue of Satan, in the Church of St. Andrews? If any think so, let them read the following account of a scene more barbarous than savage cruelty, from the London Record, the leading organ of the evangelical portion of the Church of England. It is given in the following letter from a "Cornish Methodist" in Mexico:

"Some Pauline missionaries lately visited the town of Tizayuca, and from the pulpit have been inciting the fanatical portion of the population to deeds of violence, saying that 'he who killed a Protestant would go to heaven, direct after death,' and to show their hatred of the Holy Bible have publicly torn up a volume in the pulpit and spit on it. Last month (I think the first Sunday) our brother Segovia, who took the leading part of the services, was in his house with his family, just preparing for bed, to which some had already retired, when an armed mob of about fifty persons, headed by some of the authorities, attacked his house, person and family, stabbing him in several places, shooting him through with pistol bullets, and then dragged him into and through the streets as one would a log of wood. To make their cruelty somewhat more refined, they tore away his little boy from his mother and placed him in front of his father while they were torturing him. The wife and rest of the family fled, with their clothes nearly torn from their backs, and others entirely naked. Several women were cut about their heads with swords. Fire was then put to the houses of Segovia and other Protestants, and very soon these poor families were left homeless and without means of providing for themselves. The State government sent a detachment of troops, and apprehended fifteen of the offenders, who are now in Pachuca awaiting their trial."—Christian Observer.

THE GOSPEL IN SICILY.

The Rev. Mr. Malan, of Messina, gives ample and exciting details, in Eco della Verita, of a visit which he paid three weeks ago to Riesi, a large town away among the mountains to the south of Sicily, and very difficult of access. The visit of a colporteur had caused an invitation, signed by seventy-six of the leading people of the town, to be sent to the evangelical minister of Messina, desiring him to come and preach the gospel to them, and a most cordial and enthusiastic reception was given to Mr. Malan on his arrival. For six days, during which the evangelization lasted, the church bells rang and services were held in one of the largest places of popish worship, in the presence of the Syndic, and from three to six or seven hundred persons. On the eve of the evangelist's departure the cunning priests tried to undo the good work which had been begun by challenging him to a discussion. He accepted at once, on conditions reasonable in themselves and acceptable to the whole country-side, which they however rejected; namely, that the discussion be in a public place of worship; that each side deposit one hundred francs in the hands of a notary, as a guarantee; and that if the evangelist went away the money should go to the priests, while if the priests declined on any ground the continuance of the controversy, the money should go to the poor of the town. No wonder a demonstration of triumphant joy and affection took place under the pastor's windows: "Long life to the evangelist!" "Long life for the gospel preached in Riesi!"

THE speech of the King of Italy, when opening the National Parliament at Rome, was worthy the occasion. The opening sentence was: "The work to which we consecrate our life is accomplished." This was greeted with applause. The next sentence was equal to the first: "After long expiatory trials Italy is restored to herself and to Rome." Here there was "loud and prolonged applause." The following paragraphs should be held in remembrance:

Here, where our people, after the dispersion of many centuries, are for the first time gathered together in the majesty of their representatives; here, where we can recognize the country of our thoughts, everything speaks to us of grandeur, but at the same time everything reminds us of our duties. The joys of these days shall not cause us to forget them.

We have reconquered our place in the world, defending the rights of the nation. To-day, that the national unity is accomplished and a new era of Italian history opened, we will not prove false to our principles.

Risen in the name of liberty, we should seek in liberty and in order the secret of strength and of conciliation.

We have proclaimed the separation of the State from the Church, and recognizing the perfect independence of the spiritual authority, we should have faith that Rome, capital of Italy, may also continue to be the specific and respected seat of the pontificate.

Thus we should succeed in tranquilizing consciences as, by a firmness of resolution equal to the moderation of the manner, we have succeeded in achieving the national unity—maintaining unaltered the amicable relations with foreign powers.

INDIAN MISSION CONFERENCE.

Jesse H. Walker, of the Chickasaw district, writing to the missionary secretary, says:

Immediately after our Conference I went, according to directions, to the Trinity Conference; and Willis G. Davis was transferred, and placed on the Tishamingo and Chickasaw circuits. His first quarterly meeting embraced the third Sabbath in November. It was a good meeting. John T. Talbott made a public confession, was received into the church, and is employed as interpreter for Bro. Davis. Boggy circuit, Jefferson Long's quarterly meeting, fourth Sabbath in November. A camp meeting in the woods; cold weather; but large fires and a large congregation; a full Quarterly Conference—licensed one to preach. On Sunday four sermons; received ten members; baptized one adult and six infants. Missionary money, $10.75. The Lord's Supper was celebrated, and I married a couple. Doakesville circuit, S. P. Willis, first Sabbath in December; a snow storm; but a few out, but a good little meeting. Jack's Fork circuit, Moses Perry, quarterly meeting at Culbertson's, on the road, twenty miles from Boggy Depot, second Sabbath in November. A good congregation and comfortable house; nine members received; one infant baptized; $5.50 missionary money. This is the house we want you to help us to pay for—$100 behind. But I think we will make it. I wrote a subscription for that purpose, and before I left we had $65 on the paper, and $32 of that collected and paid over. The Kiamichi circuit, Bylinchia's quarterly meeting a failure, owing to excessive cold. O that we had church houses! This is one great difficulty here in the winter.

NON-INTERCOURSE.

We were astonished, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, at the verdancy of some men who wonder why we will have no intercourse with Northern Methodist preachers who are laboring in the South. There are thousands of good Methodists in the North with whom we could maintain fellowship; but we wonder at the weakness of any one who knows anything about the questions in controversy between us and the North, who could imagine for a moment that we would give any encouragement to men whose avowed object is the disintegration and absorption of our connection, and who hold much of our property in the South to enable them to carry out their nefarious undertaking. What would sensible men say if we were to occupy their pulpits and invite them to occupy ours? Would they not look down upon us with deserved contempt? Would they not consider us lacking in principle, and regardless of the claims of truth and righteousness? There must be a great deal of fumigation done by "our Northern brethren" before we can have fellowship with them. While the slanders of such men as Cobleigh & Co. are indorsed by the leaders of the Northern Methodist Church we can give neither them nor their emissaries among us any countenance. They have done immense mischief among our colored people, and are doing it still—few of the white people have any use for them. Indeed, they have no call for this field, and they are abusing the confidence of their own people when they beg money out of them for missionary purposes, and then squander it on these miserable factors of mischief. Bet or throw it into the sea.

IT REALLY looks as though we were discarding alcohol for other forms of stimulants. Chloral, we are told, is rapidly taking the place of wine, and from the figures below printed it would seem as though opium was superseding whisky. The quantity of the drug brought into San Francisco, California, during the six months ending September 31, 1871, from Hong Kong, China, and Yokohama, Japan, was thirty-two thousand three hundred and fifty pounds, valued at $318,418. The duty paid on this, at $6 per pound, was $194,148. This is an excess over the previous six months of $71,000, and over the six months ended September, 1870, of $116,000.

DR. STUCKLEY once waited upon Sir Isaac Newton a little before dinner time; but he had given orders not to be called down to anybody till his dinner was upon the table. At length a boiled chicken was brought in, and Stuckley waited till it was near cold, when, being very hungry, he ate it up, and ordered another to be prepared for Sir Isaac, who came down before the second was ready, and seeing the dish and cover of the first, which had been left, lifted up the latter, and turning to the doctor, said: "What funny folks we studious people are! I really forgot I had dined."

THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1872.

"ARE ALL THE CHILDREN IN?"

BY MRS. S. T. PERRY.

The darkness falls, the wind is high,
Dense black clouds fill the Western sky;
The storm will soon begin.
The thunders roll, the lightnings flash,
I hear the great round raindrops dash—
Are all the children in?

They're coming softly to my side;
Their forms within my arms I hide—
No other arms as sure.
The storm may rage with fury wild,
With trusting faith each little child
With mother feels secure.

But future days are drawing near,
They'll go from this warm shelter here
Out in the world's wild din.
The rain will fall, the cold winds blow;
I'll sit alone and long to know,
Are all the children in?

Will they have shelters then secure,
Where hearts are waiting strong and sure,
And love is true when tried?
Or will they find a broken reed,
When strength of heart they so much need
To help them brave the tide?

God knows it all: his will is best.
I'll shield them now, and leave the rest
In his most righteous hand.
Sometimes souls he loves are riven
By tempests wild, and thus are driven
Nearer the better land.

If he should call me home before
The children go, on that bright shore,
Afar from care and sin,
I know that I shall watch and wait
Till he, the Keeper of the Gate,
Lets all the children in.

THE EVILS OF THE TIMES.

MR. EDITOR: Among the great "evils of the times" must be mentioned, first, that of false theories. And notwithstanding many people think the matter of theory a very small and insignificant thing, yet we can trace results from theories almost as correctly as we can tell fruit from the planting. Occupying this standpoint, we are prepared to assign another reason for the downfall and perishing of Persia than that given by some of the writers of the times. These say: "Man has stripped the soil of trees; the absence of trees has brought droughts; droughts have slowly diminished the productive powers of the ground, and finally destroyed them—the population, in the meantime, dwindling in numbers and vitality." The last word in the above quotation is the key to the rest. The lack of "vitality" is destructive to any people. The proof of this lack is found in the statement furnished in an article copied into the ADVOCATE of January 4. In this article it is declared that the Persians have neither "common roads" nor "railroads." Besides, it is announced that the country "is almost a wilderness, with a population of two millions, about half of them nomads." By turning from this statement to the teaching of ancient history we see that that country has always been lacking in that "vitality" which is manifested by proper improvement, even when the country had "trees." On page 91 of Mr. "Dow's Digest of Ancient and Modern History" we read as follows: "Have already seen that the Persians were half agricultural, half nomadic people from the mountainous country, who, under Cyrus the Great," etc. In the quotation from the newspaper article it is said half the people are nomads; and in the quotation from the history it is also said that half of the Persians were nomadic. Again, on page 93 of the above history we read as follows: "Herodotus makes Sandanis, the Lydian, say to Cræsus, when projecting invasion of Persia, 'What will you gain by waging war with such men? Their clothing is skins, their food wild fruits, and their drink water. If you are conquered you lose a cultivated country; if you conquer you take a barren region.'" Hence we see that in ancient and modern times the country has been filled, considerably, with a nomadic people, who have been greatly dependent upon the fortunes of chance and the "wild fruits" of the land for a living, and not so much upon the productive powers of the soil as some would endeavor to make us believe. And now, because the God of heaven has withheld for three years the fruit-giving showers, and the people are at the point to die, men come forward to blunt and stultify the impressions God seeks to make upon the great mind of the world, by saying the whole is the result of having no trees. Well, if it is the absence of trees that curses Persia, why is it that all countries in a similar situation receive not a similar curse?

This country has been noted from of old as the seat and stronghold of one of the profoundest theories of the most majestic system of idolatry known in the history of man.

But what has been the cause of the absence of "vitality" in Persia? The question may be answered by appealing to the teaching of history. Thus, referring to the above authority, we see that "polygamy existed," and that "everything was determined by eunuchs and favorite wives;" and that the "kings had as many concubines as there were days in the year." The love of ease, luxury and sensuality was the active and destructive enemy of the "vitality" of the country. And as Persia has thus gradually but terribly gone down, so went the once proud and polished Athens. The same cause was potential in both cases. It is true there was and is a vast difference in the two peoples, yet what was destructive to the one was destructive to the other. Speaking of Athens, on page 75 of the first volume of "Four volumes, latest London edition, 1830," Rollin says: "The love of ease and pleasure had almost extinguished that of glory, liberty and independence." On the same page, in giving the caption to be discussed, he talks thus: "Fondness for theatrical representations one of the principal causes of the decline, degeneracy and corruption of the Athenian State." The above is a bold, but doubtless correct, statement of the case. How alarming is the teaching of the past when applied to the present? When our own beloved country is so full of vain show and vain glory, what can we expect? When so many hundreds and thousands live only for "ease and pleasure," how can they be a blessing to the land? When so many thousands more live in order to sensual enjoyment, how can they be otherwise than a burning curse upon their own generation? While horse-racing, card-playing, skating, dancing, circus-going, theater-attending, whisky-drinking, cursing and fighting, and nameless other sins, characterize so many places and people, we have great reason to fear the displeasure of God upon our own country. Yet we have some hope, because of the many thousands who "fear God and keep his commandments."

A. DOWLING.

THE MACEDONIAN GRACE.

We extract as follows from the address of Bishop Keener, delivered at St. Louis on the occasion of the semi-centenary service in January, 1871. Lack of space has compelled us to abridge where we should have chosen to insert the entire discourse.

There was a time when through the entire range of humanity every particle of the substance of the world was held in subservicucy to the religious sentiment in the breasts of men. I may say that even the wars of the world and all their vast expenditure were in the interest either of the gods of Philistia or the God of Israel. There was a time when all the architecture of the world, all the learning of the world, all its amusements—as in the Olympic games—whou all the genius of the world was laid at the feet of religion in some form. And it is so now in many countries. There is no estimating what values are placed before Buddha and Brahma. The entire ancient world of paganism was to be found in the interests either of the sun or the moon, or some great abstract idea, as that of wisdom, illustrated throughout Greece; or of life, as illustrated throughout Egypt—the simple continuance of life passing through various forms and great periods, and at length emerging with imagined improvement. The temples of Karnoc and Luxor, that wonderful avenue of sphinxes, that elaborate performance of the human hand and brain on the shores of the ancient river of Egypt; all is in attestation of what I say—that the religious idea and religious sentiment formally and properly subsidized all the wealth and all the genius and all the power, mechanical and otherwise, there was in the world.

Well, now, the master-stroke of Satan is this: as far as false religion is concerned, this union between wealth and religion is not disturbed, whether paganism be pure or mixed; whether it is patent, or whether it is baptized into Christian forms. The grand combination of property and religion is undisturbed. And then the next master-stroke of the adversary is where religion is pure and undefiled to separate that which God intended should not be divorced, and to abstract from the true religious sentiment the wealth of the world.

Now, sir, it is very certain that, by the coming of Christ into the world, an entirely new use was given to values. I say an entirely new use in the opportunities for their employment. According to their measure the children of Israel placed a vast amount of property at the service of God, though the sphere of their religious activity was comparatively limited. But when Christ came into the world he opened all the doors; he gave to men a thousand opportunities to transmute the ordinary ingot and the wedge of gold into the imperishable riches of immortal life and light. It is because this has been lost sight of that we find at the present day Christians amassing immense quantities of wealth without any purpose whatever—wealth simply reproducing itself in the form of fields, in houses, and in styles of architecture. It now displays its folly in ten thousand shapes all over this land. We may take, for instance, the condition of the Southern Church. I will just ask you to run your eye down this side of the river or the other side, and take in the mansions, the wonderful expanse of grain and of cotton, as before the war, and you will come to the conclusion, I doubt not, that our church once contained absolutely more money than any other church. And yet, after all, it was all heaped up, in the main, for nothing; for we have no monuments, nothing to show for it worth talking about. We have displayed the immeasurable folly of gathering together values in order to have it said that we have them.

Now, it is very certain that the Christian system demands a vast deal, and because we have not answered this demand God has struck at our folly; to throw it down he has sent fire and all those instruments of destruction—war, mildew and worm, and whatever else can break up the wealth that is used to enhance the pride of men.

Our Savior has created a thousand uses for money that did not exist in the Old Testament system. Any one can perceive that, and any one can realize it who looks over the surface of the earth. The New Testament system, as far as Christ himself was concerned, is set forth in all its force in his own teaching. When one came to him and asked, "Master, what good thing shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" he said, "Sell whatever thou hast and give to the poor."

So far from loosening the grasp of the Old Testament on property, our Savior increased the demand. In the Old Testament this question of property is all summed up in the tenth commandment: "Thou shalt not covet." Not only that, but we find a tax was laid on all property, even to their fruit trees, and from the first bunch of grapes to the entire harvest of the sixth, seventh and eighth years; for if they could neither sow nor reap in the seventh year, it would involve the loss of three crops.

The sermon on the mount is an explication and enforcement of the ten commandments in their various applications to humanity. In it the Savior has a very extended paragraph on the entire subject of money; the anxiety in regard to a living—the argument as to the impossibility of serving both God and mammon—and the fact that when "the eye" becomes dim to the demands of God upon his property, man's whole moral nature becomes full of darkness. Before the Savior uttered this sentence we have the instance in which parties came to John the Baptist asking about repentance. And his answer in each case was in reference to the use of values. He said to the people, "If you have two coats take one and give it away;" to the tax gatherers, "See to it that you do not take any more than the law allows;" and to the soldiers, "Be satisfied with your wages." When the apostle addressed the elders at Miletus, his very last words were upon that subject: "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus how he said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'" So that this matter has a large place in the arrangement of the New Testament. Our Savior has distinctly set forth the fact that in the gospel system there is demand enough to exhaust all the wealth the church has. And what wonder? If it cost the riches of heaven to bring the Savior down to this world and introduce him to men, what wonder if it should take all the wealth of the world to proclaim that sublime coming, and that grand doctrine of life through the Son of God?

Now, we may and do give from different motives: for instance—first, one may give from a sense of justice, as you frequently hear it said by the church steward: "Here is a preacher who has been preaching for you, and you certainly don't want this man to serve for nothing." Oh, certainly not; and therefore men give something. That is one motive of giving—a sort of sense of honor and of justice in the premises. It is a very good motive, as far as it goes. Second, a man may give, and I suppose a vast number do give, simply from a notion that they are giving as a sacrifice to God; and a man may give in the spirit of self-denial—he gives "until he feels it." This principle of giving because it hurts you, and afterward comes up to you constantly—because it is a sort of medicine—because it is hard and difficult, and therefore troubles a man as a specter in his dreams, so that he cannot shake it off—because it is a sort of self-affliction, and believed, therefore, to be pleasing to God, is to give as the heathen give, through fear, to propitiate. They have a grosser view of it, but this system of giving is what you may call the heathen motive for giving in Christendom. Third, a man may give from a sense of duty, as under a tithing system, because it is the law. He may believe in giving if it takes all the cummin and annise, the good and the bad, clear through on the abstract principle of obedience to the law. That is a grand principle, that of obedience to the law. It is one step toward the higher and nobler principle, and we say nothing against it. Nor do we say anything against the general principle of self-denial. They are all, so to speak, schoolmasters, and lead you on to the greater and higher motive. But oh! what an immeasurable distance between these motives of giving and that grand one I speak of—a motive that, as I conceive it, is higher than a thank-offering. It is not giving because of anything received or in order to secure something in advance, but is a giving in order to find its reward in its own expression, and from the joyful consciousness of the riches of the grace of liberality. There is such a grace. You and I may be strangers to it, but depend upon it the Macedonian church was not; you may depend upon it, the Corinthians did not remain strangers to it, for Titus did his work, and "finished in them this grace also." And liberality must be in us not an argument, not a penance, but a life.

You and I have lost this grand secret. The New Testament church has lost the secret of the first part of the first century of that church.

Why, my brethren, how is it that in all the departments of our church the toils of covetousness are about us? Here and there we find some grand expression, some noble spirit, some generous movement. But what is the reason that men retire from the ministry about the time they are prepared to enter fairly on the result of many years' experience? What is the reason that men, before they are aged enough to cease work, have to go home and take care of an increasing family? What is the reason that all our schools are struggling for life? that our missionaries in China have been without churches for twenty years? What is the reason it takes the whole church with infinite groan to pay the small debt of $20,000? What is the reason, when everywhere there is money enough—money enough for everything else—for war, for politics—money enough for the advancement of the interests of a great city, for everything except the blessed interests of our holy Christianity? My brethren, covetousness has almost betrayed the church, just as the covetousness of Judas betrayed the Master; and if the love of gold betrayed Christ, why should it not betray Christianity?

I ask you, has it not been too often the case that we have followed after mammon rather than Christ; that in the secret chambers of our souls we have worshiped the god of mammon with just as much reverence as the Chinese worship one of those little, fat, money-idols before which they burn Joss sticks? I think the remark of John Wesley has a special application to our church to-day. Wesley said: "I told you to make all you could, to save all you could, and to give all you could. I have found that you have obeyed the first two precepts, but you have not obeyed the last; and I now take back what I said about the first and second."

There is one marked peculiarity about the New Testament, and that is, its greatest instances of liberality are taken not from princes, as in the Old Testament, who literally poured in their talents of silver and of gold, but from these poor people of Macedonia who could hardly keep soul and body together, from this poor widow with her two mites, and from the Samaritan with his two pence. "Now," says the apostle, "in regard to this grace I wish you to understand, O Corinthians, that the amount you give is not the question—not at all; you may be able to give exceedingly little, but mind, you are to give bountifully." A man may have but $1,000, and he might give very "bountifully"—indeed if he gave $500; or a man may have but $10 and yet give "bountifully" if he gave but $5; or a man may have $100,000, and he will have to give a very large amount to give "bountifully." The apostle says: "He that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

Don't you see the great mistake that Methodist preachers are making when they suppose that men are not called upon to give because they have but little means? Don't you see that all the power of the church lies in that direction, and that what we want is an enlargement of this idea in reference to giving bountifully, whether we have little or much? Don't you see right there the development of the church may be suspended? How can a man have a notion of the freeness and fullness of the mind of his heavenly Father—how can he get it if he does not practice a large generosity? That was a very philosophic statement of the Savior when he says a camel may as well try to go through the eye of a needle as a rich man expect to gain heaven if he has large values and holds to them tenaciously. I say it is philosophic, because a man cannot get an idea of the largeness of God, that he will give so much for nothing, when he himself is all his life cultivating a principle of quid pro quo—"value received."

That is one of the greatest difficulties we have. The truth is, God has given so marvelously to us, he does so much for us without consideration, that the mind is fairly staggered when it begins to contemplate it, and men can hardly understand the largeness of God and how abounding is his mercy toward the sons of men. I have no doubt that many people think they are sanctified when they are not. You tell me that a man is perfected in the Christian graces who is not generous! I do not believe a word of it. A man that is sanctified will amaze people by the generosity of his conduct.

Can we not see that by this arrangement of the Spirit the wealth of the world is reached; that so long as you confine yourself to ingots and large sums you will never reach the wealth of the world? Do you not know that the wealth of the world is not found in large masses? There are very few Rothschilds, and very few people worth $10,000 or $5,000. But the Holy Spirit has a system that addresses itself to unlock not ingots or ounces, but grains and drops of gold.

Christianity seeks the poor of the world, and with the poor Christianity is made rich.

Now, for many years I have kept my eye constantly on what I thought to be the wealth of the church; and it made my heart ache to see men with large sums of money, who ought to be actuated by a wish for the salvation of the world, when I found that they did not come up to what I regarded as the just measure of liberality; because it seemed to me that everything was suspended on their movements; that if they did not give the church of God would stop. But now I am convinced that that was a mistaken view.

I say to you, the church must look to the poor for support. The gospel is a gospel for poor people; and we do not take hold or appreciate the great power that exists in this direction. "If," says one, "you could only get everybody to give a cent a week, that would be fifty cents a year; and that would be $350,000 from our church alone for the missionary cause." True enough; do that and you have accomplished the greatest feat that ever was. But it requires a tremendous organization to only do that, and an immense enginery.

Now, there is no way in the world to do that but by the Holy Spirit, and if the Holy Spirit moves on the minds of all these people and brings them forward with their contributions, we will succeed in all the Christian enterprises of the day. The Catholic Church succeeds in her temporal affairs by means of small contributions brought forward by her people. The priest does not go after them. Every man who has a friend in purgatory, or who desires his own sins to be forgiven, can only accomplish this by making his offering of money. He must put it upon the altar himself.

So the Holy Spirit, when he wants a man to give, says that "a willing mind is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." God is not going to measure your gift according to $10,000, but according to what you have.

Many people stand back and say: "If I had as much money as such an one I would, give." Why not give now? You can give as much out of what you have, in proportion, as the man who gives a hundred thousand dollars.

I do not know but I have talked long enough on this theme. I will just say, I believe that God's Spirit will ultimately raise up a body of people that shall move under his impulse; and that, by and by, this great secret that seems to have been lost will be discovered as a living force in the hearts of all members of the church; and that the day will finally come when God will drive this worship of mammon from his church; when there shall be hundreds and thousands of people praying for the grace of liberality. And I say the time has now come when we are to labor for this result; and, if I were a circuit preacher and knew there were five men in the circuit who were praying for the grace of liberality, I would not have a doubt of my support. And if I knew that in this city a dozen men were praying for this same grace, I should calculate that the blessed influence would presently extend throughout these churches.

THE ANSWER TO SKEPTICISM.—Wait; and before long a clue may be discovered, and your difficulty solved. Such is the answer of Faith to skeptical cavils and objections. Where a shallow learning and a defective knowledge of the past have led unbelievers to think that they had found out an error, profounder research has always demonstrated the veracity and accuracy of the sacred writer. German Rationalists objected, for example, that the Evangelist St. Luke erred concerning Lysanias; but a few years ago an inscription was found near Baalbeck, which proved that there were persons named Lysanias, father and son.

Again, all the supposed contradictions of profane history by Daniel, as to Belshazzar, are entirely removed by a little document exhumed in our own day from the soil of Mesopotamia by the exertion of an English gentleman. The obscurity as to "Assyrian inscriptions," and the scholarship of the present day, throws the clearest light upon St. Luke's statement as to the "taxing" of Cyrenius, which the infidel Strauss declared "contradictory history."—London Record.

A PRAYER MEETING RECIPE.—A correspondent alludes to the wretched, monotonous dreariness of many prayer meetings, the long-winded exercises, the prayers that cover the whole dictionary of subjects, the exhortations that are stereotyped sermons, and thus suggests, by way of prescription:

When one prays in public, let it be a thoughtful, genuine prayer, and a short one; let the petition be varied, omit telling God about the attributes which he possesses.

Keep your long prayers for your closet.

Be cautious about the number of times in which you proclaim publicly how vile you are. Keep that for your closet. And when you speak in meeting have some fresh thoughts on Scripture, or some old thoughts redressed, or some new instances of God's love and converting power, or some personal experience, tersely told, that may profit hearers, or some joyous thing to awaken and make happy those who attend the meeting.

WAIT.—Wait, husband, before you wonder audibly why your wife don't get along with the household responsibilities as your mother did. She is doing her best; and no woman can endure that best to be slighted. Remember the long, weary nights she sat up with the little babe that died; remember the love and care she bestowed upon you when you had that long fit of illness. Do you think she is made of cast iron? Wait—wait in silence and forbearance, and the light will come back to her eyes—the light of the old days.

Wait, wife, before you speak reproachfully to your husband when he comes home late, weary and "out of sorts." He has worked hard for you all day—perhaps far into the night; he has wrestled hand in hand with care and selfishness and greed, and all the demons that follow in the train of money-making. Let home be another atmosphere entirely. Let him feel that there is no other place in the world where he can find peace, find quiet and perfect love.

"EXCITEMENT."—Rev. Dr. Arnot having been charged with "excitement" when speaking on total abstinence, has replied:

"People need not tell me that I am excited on these questions. I know that I am. I should be ashamed before God and men if I were not. There is more in the public houses of Glasgow to stir the spirit of a minister than all Paul saw at Athens. In my ministry I meet the horrid fruits of these whisky shops. I see men and women perishing in these pitfalls. The number of victims is so great that it overwhelms me. My brain is burning; my heart is breaking. The church is asleep, and the world too, and they are hugging each other. I am weary with beholding it. I must cry. I would rather be counted singular in the judgment of men than be unfaithful in the judgment of God.

THERE is as little in common, between the church and the world as there was between Israel and the sand of the desert. The most brilliant attractions and bewitching fascinations of the world are to the church of God what the serpents and scorpions, and the ten thousand other dangers of the wilderness were to Israel.

THE TURN OF THE YEAR.

BY GEORGE M'DONALD.

A gentle wind of western birth,
From some far summer sea,
Wakes daisies in the wintry earth,
Wakes thoughts of hope in me.

The sun is low, the paths are wet,
And dance with frolic hail;
The trees, whose spring-time is not yet,
Await singing in the gale.

Young gleams of sunshine peep and play;
Thick vapor crowds between;
'Tis strange that on a coming day
The earth will all be green.

The north wind blows and blasts and raves,
And flaps his snowy wing;
Back! toss thy bergs on arctic waves!
Thou canst not stay our spring.

Up comes the primrose, wondering;
The snowdrop droopeth by;
The holy spirit of the spring
Is working silently.

Sweet-breathing odors gently wile
Earth's other children out;
On Nature's face a hopeful smile
Is flickering about.

When earth lay hard, unlovely, dull,
And life within her slept,
Above her heaven grew beautiful,
And forth her beauty crept.

And though tears fall, as fall they will,
Smiles wander into sighs,
For if the sun keep shining still,
Her perfect day will rise.

The sky is smiling over me,
Hath smiled away the frost;
Clothed with young green, the patient lea
With buds the woods embossed.

The trees yet shut not out the sky,
It sees down to the flowers;
They lift their beauty fearlessly;
They hide in leafy bowers.

The day is yours, sweet birds—sing on;
The cold is all forgot;
I had a dream, but it is gone,
For that is past is not.

For that was past is come again;
And if the summer brings
So rare, it is a lovely pain,
That broods instead of sings.

Blow on me, wind from west and south;
Sweet summer spirit, blow!
Come like a kiss from dear child's mouth,
Who knows not what I know.

The earth's perfection cometh soon;
Love lingereth alway;
We have a spring-time—have a noon—
Some may summer day.

Rose-sprinkled eve, gold-bannered morn,
May still poor Nature's sighs:
To me a higher hope is born—
A secret in that we rise.

But the last sapphire day
Is over us will bow;
And man's heart, full of sunlight, say:
"Lord, 'tis thy summer now."

A Scholar's Opinion of the Bible.

Burke truly said that "the method of teaching which approaches most nearly to the method of investigation, is incomparably the best;" and assuredly two main elements pervade all successful education—investigation and interest.

Man, in this his chrysalis state, is in the school for heaven. He lives in two worlds, the seen and the unseen; he is schooled, tutored and trained in the one, that he may be built up, educated and prepared for the other. In this preparatory discipline for a higher life, the entire scope and nature of God's dealings with man are so unlike anything his ignorance could have devised, that his reason cannot grasp them; while his unaided intellect is wholly unable to solve, and his sin-dimmed eye powerless to discern, the complex, mysterious and ever-varying mirage of this life, which yet reflects the unchangeableness, the permanence and the peace of the next.

But God has furnished man with a heavenly class book, which makes all hard things intelligible. That class book is the Bible. It invites and richly rewards investigation; and rightly viewed, it is replete with interest. "It has shallows wherein the lamb may wade, depths wherein the elephant must swim." Its difficulties are among its chief treasures. Were the Bible clear, patent and shallow, we should read the volume, superficially or cursorily, and lay it aside. Hence it is not only not plain, but purposely and designedly obscure, deep, vast and measureless, in order to invite and necessitate investigation, and to intensify interest.

We have no clearer evidence of man's low moral and intellectual state than that afforded by the little interest he evinces in God's word, and by the treatment it receives from mankind. A few do study it—some find pleasure in it—very many read fragments of it, as others count their beads; but how many esteem it, with the Psalmist king of old, "better than thousands of gold and silver?" How many millions, even in Christian lands, take no pleasure in it! If placed beside the last poem or novel, and we have some lonely hours to while away, a hundred to one it is not chosen.

Yet it is the most interesting book extant. Vast in its sweep of earth, and in its grasp of heaven. Inviting us to share in its own breadth of thought, and range of vision. Solving all problems, moral and spiritual. Full of a science denied to the greatness of Egypt, Rome and Greece; full of such deep mysteries as earth, without revelation, could never attain to; yet patent to the child, while the worldly wise and prudent fail to understand. Full of divine sympathy with man's fears, and wants, and joys, and sorrows; offering a remedy for some, and a crown for all. Full of glad tidings, and in itself an ever-abiding wonder, it narrates, in language such as never man spake, that wondrous scale of miracles, whereby perishing mortals are empowered to exchange the vapor span of this poor human life for the glory and reality of that higher one, whereof "eternity is the measure, felicity the state, angels the company, the Lamb the light, and God the all in all."

It is the only book that never errs, that cannot lie, and will not mock. Its study, though exhaustless, can never weary; its knowledge, because the best and highest, can never perish.

It is, like the vesture of its blessed Lord, wrought outwardly by human hands, yet filled inwardly with "all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." Occupying fifteen centuries in its composition, it is perfect unity, woven without seam. Varied as the starry firmament in texture, it is perfect in harmony and in coloring. Seemingly the offspring of many minds, it is the teaching of one. Compiled by many writers, it has but One author.

With writers selected from courts and from sheepfolds, from thrones and from fishing-boats, it tells but one story, unbroken in thread and perfect in keeping, though the narrators did not fully know what the Spirit of Christ within them did signify (First Peter i, 2.)

Gleaming with heavenly truth at every pore, yet legible only in the light it gives—a light to Zion, but a dark cloud to Egypt. Distilling from every leaf the best wisdom and the highest knowledge, it yields its copious treasures not to the man of genius, the philosopher, and the scholar, but to the pure in heart.

Ancient of days, like its Author, "time writes no wrinkle on its stately brow." While other works become obsolete in language, lore and thought, it matures with age, ever yielding to faithful research new vigor, new unity, new beauty. The breath that animates, renovates its pages, making them new every morning, and to the spiritual senses perfuming them with holiness, purity and truth.

It is faultless—ages have discovered no flaw in it; decay's effacing finger has left no scar on it. All the untiring assaults of its great adversary; all the dissolving acids of criticism, philosophy and unbelief, have failed to taint its truth, impair its evidence or dim its lustre.

Finding an enemy in every human heart, "hated by the world," a stumbling block to many, an offense to all—assailed by the mythologies, philosophies and religions of the world; and when the world turned Christian, endangered still more by the subtle favor of its votaries, turned to merchandise, and sold, like Joseph by his brethren; dipped, like his vesture, in blood, by the "Holy Apostolic Inquisition;" sadly marred and wounded even in the house of its friends—it has nevertheless triumphed over assault, and worsted every assailant.

And in this age of progress, light and knowledge, has Scripture fared better? Has not the new infidelity merely changed its tactics? Now it masks itself in the garb and name of religion, and proudly adds thereto all the airs of scholarship, philosophy and criticism. Its votaries acknowledge Christianity, but transform it into a myth. Admitting the word, they question its inspiration and its facts; selecting their texts from it, they preach against it; joining its apostles and bishops, they, Judas-like, betray it with a kiss; and thus, uniting their own feeble powers with the powers of darkness, "offer the sacrifice of fools." Seated at the foot of the cross, like their great prototypes, they again cast lots, and trifle with salvation; there, in jest and in earnest, they gamble, with human souls for dice, and eternity for stakes; and it will ever remain the indelible reproach of this age, that while our would-be philosophers, lay and clerical, have irreligiously pronounced "the word" fallible, the mitered heads and intellect of the Catholic Church—gathered from the four continents—have combined, with all the pomp and circumstance of religion, to pronounce man infallible!

But while foes rage, and friends imagine a vain thing, while "fat bulls of Bashan compass it on every side," the word abideth forever; and amid ceaseless transition, amid the ebb and flow, the wreck and change of all things human, it stands unchanged, fresh, youthful, lifeful and life-giving, as on the morning* of creative miracles.

Its language is universal, at home in every garb, in every tongue, and in every people. More than one thousand million souls tread this earth every thirty years—and men's minds are as varying as their faces—yet it exactly suits the taste, capacity and wants—moral, intellectual and spiritual—of one and all.

Searching every individual heart, yet suited to all times, all seasons, all nations, all tongues; and to the ever-varying circumstances of ever-varying man. Revealing the mysterious economy wherein we live, it portrays that higher economy whereof all here is but the preparatory shadow. Borrowing all its language and imagery from earth, it speaks mainly of heaven; making this world a great parable, witnessing and testifying to the world to come.

With words few, but manifold in meaning, it builds up, with measured and majestic calmness, a great typical and spiritual structure—full of the plainest and yet the deepest teachings—full of wonderful analogies—full of historic facts, sparkling with spiritual interpretations—full of the miracles of salvation—full of the presence of the Deity—full of a dark, blighting spiritual economy, in conflict with the present—full of assured victory—full of the deep things of Christ—full of the deep things of the adversary.

In a word, it is the Magna Charta of mankind, offering them the freedom of the Great New City! The dying testament—ay, the title-deed drawn in blood—of a Friend and Brother, appointing us heirs of all things, and declaring us joint heirs with God—on the one simple condition: "Only believe."—C. B. Fraser-Tyller, in Sunday Magazine.

* "In the beginning was the word."—John i, 1.

REV. MR. HEPWORTH.

A sensation has been produced in our religious circles by the Christmas sermon of Rev. Mr. Hepworth, a well-known Unitarian clergyman of New York. He has distinctly abandoned his Unitarianism. Any orthodox divine can indorse his views of Christ. We cite in our department of "Current Opinions" a few paragraphs. Mr. Hepworth further remarked:

"This dogma is the basic element of my system, and therefore I speak of it. I cannot resist the feeling; it has grown partly out of the way in which I read the Bible, and partly out of my own religious consciousness that Christ's life and God's life are inextricably interwoven and interlaced. I am bound to believe in Christ's divinity, or else tear certain texts up by the roots, which I am wholly unwilling to do. When Jesus, in a prayer, says, 'O Father! glorify me with thine own self, with the glory I had with thee before the world was,' I cannot evade the conviction that the words, plainly as any words can, are intended to assert a pre-existence. If they do not distinctly say that Christ is coeval with God, then I fail to comprehend the meaning of the passage. Now, you may honestly deny the fact by openly doubting the correctness of the text. But admitting the text, the deduction is plain. Again, when he says, 'If a man loves me, my Father will love him, and we will come unto them and make our abode with him,' I think he clearly intimates a power co-ordinate with that of God. I don't see how the conclusion can be avoided, provided you admit the correctness of the text. I do believe this. You ask me, Did the Jews have any hint of this? I think they did. On one occasion they took up stones to stone him on the charge of blasphemy, saying that he made himself equal with God."

Mr. Hepworth has thus accepted the most obvious, the prima facie significance of the Scriptures. There is no logical possibility of holding on to the New Testament, and at the same time rejecting the dogma of Christ's divinity. But he not only finds the doctrine on the whole surface of the New Testament: he sees its consistency with the deepest moral needs of the human heart. Evangelical truth is thus always in complete analogy with human nature. Both arguments are good, and irrefutable.

On Sunday last Mr. Hepworth resumed the subject and took leave of his church. The scene is reported to have been intensely interesting and affecting. He said:

"You ask me what I propose to do. I cannot work any longer with the Unitarian party. If I do not believe its tenets, or accept its interpretations of Scripture, simple honesty demands of me that I should leave it. I say to you now that I shall leave the body, because I believe it to be radical in theology, and I think radicalism for the average mind about as bad and destructive an element as can be introduced. You introduce a series of negations into this great, convulsive, throbbing world of New York, and you would have Bedlam here in six months. You want a pulpit, and that pulpit must be the true one, which reaches out its hands, and tells the people ever to remember that God is above them, that Christ is there in their midst, and that he is no man, but stands before them as the very representative of God himself; that the church is builded upon his name, and that Christ is the type of our faith and of our life." Methodist.

The correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette in Heidelberg gives an interesting view of the religious quarrel in Germany, from which we condense the following statement. The opinion of many persons that the Old Catholic leaders have not the stuff in them necessary for the successful prosecution of this final reform begins to be slightly modified. Certainly they have acted with great prudence; but they have already accomplished much, and the indications are that a much more decisive struggle is not far off. According to the most trustworthy information it has been possible to obtain, it would appear that up to now the real strength of the anti-infallibilist movement, as an active body, is concentrated in certain towns of Bavaria and Rhenish Prussia. There are sympathizers in other parts of Germany, and some, indeed, of mark—as, for instance, Dr. Reinkens, from Breslau; but congregations have not yet been formed anywhere except in Bavarian and Rhenish Prussian towns. In rural parishes, with one or two significant exceptions, there has been hitherto no movement; a fact very intelligible if it be remembered how, in Bavaria particularly, the peasantry is at the beck of the priests, and how the parish priests again have kept quiet by dependence on the bishop. The exceptions to this rule prove its force. In the two or three cases where rural congregations have gone into dissent, they have done so in the wake of the parish priest, exactly as was the case in Germany at the Reformation. A case is now pending which may have considerable consequences in the propagation of the movement. The priest at Kufstein, in the Tyrol, has taken the anti-infallibility side; and, if he has the hold over his congregation he is believed to possess, by some, we may be prepared to see a spread of the movement into districts where, if once taken up, it will be embraced with characteristic fanaticism. The legislative action of the Bavarian government will, it is believed, encourage priests to defy the bishops and express their real sentiments, which in many cases are undoubtedly in favor of reformation. In Wurtemburg and Bohemia there is a curious deadlock. In the former State the Catholic prelate is Dr. Hefel, at the outset one of the most pronounced of the anti-infallibilists. He has submitted and promulgated the doctrine in his diocese. But this is all he has done. None of the clergy have been asked to subscribe, and some who were known to be ready to refuse submission have been left unmolested. In Bohemia, Cardinal Schwartzenburg, who declared that rather than promulgate the dogma he would resign the purple, has ignominiously yielded; but in Bohemia, as well as in Wurtemburg, nothing has been done to enforce the vatican decree, and it remains practically a dead letter. Dr. Schulte, one of the most prominent of the Old Catholics, now resides at Prague without molestation. Naturally, this has given umbrage, and it is reported that the cardinal is being much pressed to proceed against the recalcitrant canonist. But no step has yet been taken, and the cause of hesitation is confidently affirmed to be the knowledge that in Bohemia there is a widespread Hussite element, which, at the least provocation, would flare forth mightily. But in both countries the religious quiet is, therefore, very treacherous, and likely to be broken by any incautious move of the Roman emissaries. Take it, therefore, all in all, there is little reason for assuming that the religious quarrel that has sprung up among German Catholics is likely soon to subside.—Independent.

A writer in Fraser's Magazine says there is a village in Bohemia the name of which is only pronounceable by sneezing three times, and adding the syllables sischki.

Running Away from Prayer.—Two gentlemen coming northward sailed to S—— in the same vessel with an agent of the American Tract Society, who invoked a blessing at table, and called upon God in morning and evening prayer. Their consciences were ill at ease. When they arrived at S—— they took passage for New York in a commodious vessel; but finding that the praying man had engaged his passage in the same vessel, they left and sailed on board a vessel that was greatly crowded, and where they were compelled to lodge upon the cabin floor. To their confusion and amazement they found a pious minister among their fellow-passengers, who prayed as earnestly and proclaimed the truth as boldly as the one from whom they had escaped. They had "jumped from the frying pan into the fire." If all ministers and Christians would let their light shine wherever thrown in the providence of God, few ungodly men on the land or on the ocean would be permitted to live at ease until they repented of sin and trusted in Christ.

In faith's arithmetic God is the only significant figure, and, having him, you may add as many ciphers as you please. If all your springs are in the living God, it ceases to be a question of his sufficiency.

The more closely we adhere to Christ, and to him alone, the stronger and the safer we shall be.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The best-paid preacher in the world is said to be the rabbi of the great Berlin synagogue. He receives $20,000 a year.

Itinerant "Settled Pastors."—The Churchman says of Episcopal clergymen that they have become an itinerant class—parishes not expecting to retain rectors more than a year or two.

Non-Communicating Members.—The Lutheran Observer states that, out of 666,305 members of the churches of Berlin, only 99,355 commune with the churches at the Lord's table.

The late Congregational Council voted that nothing less than the following amounts ought to be raised the ensuing year: For church building, $100,000; for work among the freedmen, $400,000; for home missions, $500,000.

Missionary to Syria.—The Scotch Reformed Presbyterian Church have appointed the Rev. James Martin, A. M., M. D., to be their first missionary to Syria. The mission is to be conducted conjointly with the Irish Reformed Church.

Among the prominent Unitarian clergymen who have died this year are Joseph Angier, Ezra S. Gannett, Alonzo Hill, Samuel J. May, John M. Merrick, Joseph H. Phipps, Joseph Richardson, William G. Scandlin and Joshua A. Swan.

The Baptists of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island sustain thirty native preachers and two Bible women, who labor among the Burmese, Karens and Shans. They now propose to send two missionaries to a new field in Siam.

Mrs. Ruth Wilson, of Burlington, Massachusetts, has given $6,000 in trust to the Congregational church there, the interest to be used for the support of preaching. Mrs. Wilson's property is the result of the earnings and savings of fifty years' hard labor.

Prizing the Gospel.—During the last two years the Bassein Karens, though very poor, have supported their 58 pastors without any aid from America; have built their chapels, and contributed 9,023 rupees for religious purposes, and 16,341 for schools.

During the last two years the German deaconesses, in their hospital at Jernsalem, have cared for 1,414 patients, belonging to nine religious sects. Out of this large number only 46 have died. In their institution, Talitah Kumi, they receive for instruction more than 100 young girls, nearly all of whom, in subsequent life, attest the value of Christian education.

The Melbourne Argus says that at a recent Church of England Assembly, held in that city, the bishop, who has before distinguished himself for liberal learnings, recommended the alteration of the laws of the church so as to allow church buildings to be used for other than Church of England purposes. This is supposed to have reference to an exchange of pulpits with Dissenting ministers.

The Baptist churches of southern New York have a church extension committee, which during the last year has raised and expended within its own borders—in aiding missions, furnishing chapels, distributing Sunday school papers, etc.—about $7,000. It is proposed for the coming year greatly to enlarge the work by building mission chapels and helping feeble churches to pay their debts.

Progress in Madagascar.—Christianity is making progress in Madagascar. It is stated that there are 2,011 native preachers and pastors, 20,961 members of the churches, and 331,759 adherents to the Christian cause. The increase last year is reported as follows: Native ministry, 1,056; church membership, 10,405; Christian population, 78,752. Yet twelve years ago Christianity seemed well-nigh destroyed by persecution.

Miss Mary H. Graves was recently ordained as pastor of the Unitarian church in Mansfield, Massachusetts. Miss Graves is the first woman who has entered the Unitarian ministry in Massachusetts, and the second in the whole denomination, Mrs. Celia Burleigh, of Brooklyn, Connecticut, being the first. The latter lady, with the Rev. Miss Olympia Brown, of Bridgeport, (Universalist,) assisted in the ordination of Miss Graves.

There are ten branches of the Presbyterian Church in the United States—the Reunited General Assembly, the Southern General Assembly, the United Presbyterian General Assembly, the Reformed Synod (Covenanters, old side,) the Reformed Synod (Covenanters, new side,) the Reformed Synod (Dutch,) the Reformed General Synod (German,) the Associate Reformed Synod of the South, the Associate Reformed Synod of the North, and the Associate Synod.

Persecution is increasing in Syria. At Keferfoo the Protestants have all been forced by the governor to recant, and the teacher is driven out. At Kisbo the teacher was beaten, the books torn to shreds, and the bell stolen. "Pray," says Dr. Jessup, "for the persecuted in Syria. There are dark shadows in the gorges and ravines of Lebanon even after sunrise." At the same time, Hussain, a recent convert from Mohammedanism, and who should, therefore, by the law of that religion, have been put to death, has been allowed, after long delay, to go in peace down to Egypt.

After a protracted struggle of several months, the Jesuits have been expelled from Gautemala. The exiled fathers, eighty in number, will probably go to Ecuador, as none of the other states in the country will receive them. In retaliation, the clerical party has armed some Indian bands, who got up an insurrection in the districts of Chiquemales and Santa Rosas; but they have been defeated with great loss by the troops under General Barrios, leaving several hundreds of them dead upon the field.

Denominational Map.—The New-York Evangelist of December 21 publishes a handsome map supplement, showing the rapid increase and large territorial boundaries of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. This body of Christians, since the union of the Old and New Schools, now numbers 85 synods, 167 presbyteries, 4,346 ministers, 4,616 churches, and 455,378 members, representing a total aggregate of souls under its care of over two millions, not counting half a million in the churches connected with the Southern Assembly.

The Episcopal paper of San Francisco says: "It must be confessed that there has not been much cause for congratulation in the growth of the church in San Francisco, of late years especially. Ten years ago this city had a population of about 50,000, and four church edifices belonging to the Episcopalians; now we have, it is claimed, 170,000, and five church buildings. Then we had one church to about 12,000 people; now one to about 34,000. Three more parishes exist now than then; only one of them, however, has a place of worship of its own."

Choctaw Mission.—Our church has four missionaries among the Choctaws: Rev. Messrs. Colton, Lloyd and Wright, and Mr. Elijah Brewer, a licentiate. More laborers for this field are called for. Our solitary laborer among the Creeks, the Rev. Mr. Perryman, has been much blessed in his work. Twelve converts have been added to his church. Our committee has but two ordained missionaries among the Cherokees: Rev. Messrs. Foreman and Balentine. Mr. Balentine is not left without indications of the divine blessing.—Southern Presbyterian.

A branch of the Catholic Union has been organized in New York city. This society has been started for the purpose of expressing sympathy and affording aid to his holiness the Pope; but is not solely confined to this purpose, the promotion of general Catholic interests, especially those pertaining to education, being included in the programme. The number of those who have already joined is very great, and is daily increasing; and, as it has the hearty sympathy and support of the bishops and priests, it will probably become an important institution among the Catholics.

Episcopal Church of Scotland.—On November 15 the annual meeting of the synod of the Scottish Episcopal Church was held in Edinburg, the primus (Bishop of Moray and Ross) in the chair. The bishops in this synod adopted a strong protest against the Pope's claim to infallibility, and also against the council as ecumenical, as neither the churches of England or Scotland, nor the churches of Constantinople, Alexandria or Jerusalem, were represented in it; neither, as is credibly reported, was there freedom of debate, or a sufficient degree of unanimity in deciding doctrine.

The Athenians have lately had a new thing to talk about in the conviction of the abbe of the Monastery of Mount Pentelicus, together with a number of its monks, first on the charge of poisoning, and second on the charge of having sheltered the brigands who for many years committed the crime of Marathon. This will be pleasant news to those who have enjoyed the hospitalities of the Pentelican cloister, either before ascending the mountain or on their way to the renowned battle-field. It has already raised the question of closing the monasteries, and may result in radical reforms within the Greek Church.

The missionary hens will be glad to hear that Dr. Gibson, of Grace church, Petersburg, Virginia, has set his Sunday school children to raising missionary corn. Six kernels were given to each of the two hundred and fifty children last spring to plant for missions; and the harvest just gathered and shelled amounts to nearly five barrels, worth $20.

OUR READING.

What we read has much to do with the formation of character; even more, perhaps, than our company and other external conditions. Reading is the education of the great mass of people. It is their mental culture, their information, their convictions and opinions, and their religion. Like the worm which takes its color from the foliage on which it feeds, the mind reflects what it receives from the literature which it luxuriates on. The facilities for reading more than keep pace with the general march of improvement. The world is full of books, and they are wonderfully cheap. The multiplication of papers and magazines surpasses every other aspect of modern activity and enterprise. So great is the competition in the literary market that every house is canvassed, books and periodicals are thrust upon everybody, and people are compelled to have them, and, to some extent, to read them. The tastes, capacities and peculiar wants of all ages and classes are anticipated, and the demand is met before we are fairly conscious of our needs. For children, for youth, for old folks, for farmers, mechanics, scholars and the professions there are publications ready and forced upon the attention. Educated to read, reading is the education of the people. It is a social necessity, and where the taste is lacking men must bow to the authority of fashion, custom and public opinion, and read.

What are we reading? In such a world of books, and with the presses teeming with fresh and inexhaustible supplies, there must be an election. Almost everything is read by somebody; but no one individual, even with a life of complete leisure, can look through more than a mere sprinkling of the pages which are printed every month and week of the year. With many it is a matter of hap-hazard as to the book or paper which they have in hand. Something to occupy and to please, or anything which comes in the way of the hour's or day's leisure. There is no thoughtful selection and no careful provision made, but they seize what chance throws in their way, or what the last agent or canvasser has urged them to buy. The peculiar wants of the mind, the information most required, the moral and mental regimen demanded are not studied, nor perhaps understood. Multitudes are habitual and almost exclusive readers of fiction. Everything of this kind, except the better sort, is eagerly devoured, and the mind takes its tone from these exciting, vicious and overstimulating products. There are those, we doubt not, who have a standing order with their bookseller to send them all the novels as fast as they are received. It is perhaps useless and unwise to attempt to exclude all fiction from our reading; but a most careful discrimination and a very moderate indulgence are imperative. Otherwise mental imbecility, moral relaxation and utter frivolity are certain to ensue.

There are others who read nothing but newspapers and magazines. Standard works of science, history and religion are rarely, if ever, taken up. Their reading furnishes information on the topics of the hour—commercial, political and social—but it is necessarily fragmentary, and altogether wanting in the elements of thoroughness and mental discipline. Newspaper and periodical literature has a high and important mission, but it should not exclude the more permanent and complete volumes. Even our religious papers, valuable as they are, should stimulate rather than substitute the use of our standard religious works. This is the danger into which we are drifting. Books are giving place to periodicals; and while reading is becoming more and more universal, the appetite and capacity for the stout and substantial volume grow less and less.

Looking at the religious aspects of the subject, we fear that Christian people are more superficial and more ignorant in matters of doctrine and experience than they were before this fugitive style of reading became so universal. One and two generations ago our people read religious books and their Bibles almost exclusively, and their knowledge of doctrine and experience was accurate and profound. In those days Wesley, Fletcher, Clark, Watson and Benson were bound in leather, and were well thumbed and thoroughly mastered by the most of our members. It is not so now. Our religious journalism has increased beyond all estimate, but we doubt whether the circulation of our best authors has been correspondingly great. A light and secular literature is filling our Sunday school libraries often in undue proportion. There is in many cases too much fiction and adventure, and too little of the old-time staple of serious and religious books. If not limited in the selection to such books as can be read on Sunday, we think that the greater part should be of this sort.

The very affluence of our literature and the pervading taste for reading have their dangers. The devil's tares are springing up with the wheat, and there are noxious plants and venomous reptiles hidden in this wealth of bloom and verdure. We must guard our reading as we do our associations, avoiding bad books as we avoid bad companions, and study to surround ourselves with a literature which is wholesome, refining and invigorating. Especially let us aim somewhat at the robust, the solid and instructive, and not confine ourselves to the daily or weekly newspaper. In our religious reading let us have books as well as periodicals; and while we take the Advocates, let us also take the Quarterly, and furnish our libraries with the best of our religious and denominational works. Instead of limiting ourselves to the pamphlet sermons of the day, it would be well to go back occasionally to Barrow, South, Watson, Hall and Chalmers. For purity of style, sprightliness of matter and sound religious instruction, we would not give one of John Wesley's sermons for a basket full of such as Spurgeon, Beecher and Murray are sending out weekly from the press.

The literature furnished to our children should be most carefully inspected. Your boys are at home of nights, but they might possibly be in better company abroad. The pure and virtuous influences of home depend much upon what they are reading. Your girls are housed and their associations are guarded; but that volume, bound in green and gold, over which they are poring may be Reade's "Terrible Temptation," or something worse. A taste for vicious and sensational reading is an evil of fearful magnitude, and a life-long calamity. The prevalence of impure and pernicious newspapers, with their shameful illustrations and immoral stories, makes vigilance the more urgent. The reading of our youth must be more carefully watched than all their other habits and associations.—While they are directed to the pure and healthful springs of knowledge and wisdom, they must also be warned, and restrained from the poisons which gush from a thousand seductive fountains.

WRITE FOR THE ADVOCATE.

There are a good number of well-wishers to the Advocate who are every way capable of contributing to its columns. Many in the number of our friends and readers who have more leisure and ability than the editor, who ought to be seen in our pages, are allowing their pens to rust. We invite them to the fellowship of our labors, and will give a cordial welcome to their contributions. We do not want long articles; we do not prefer serials; we would rather, as a general thing, avoid controversy. Topics of a literary and religious character, matters of doctrine, experience, and the living questions of the day in reference to education, church operations, and fresh news from the fields of labor, are most desired. Help us by writing. We need the variety and gifts of many minds to make up a first-rate paper, and there are scores of our friends who can help us to furnish our readers with a much better journal than they now have. To those who have facility in writing there is no greater opportunity for doing good. An audience of many thousands awaits them, and a single hearing in the Advocate is more than the aggregate of a year's preaching with many preachers. We do not promise to publish everything sent us, but where an article fails to appear the writer has some benefit from its preparation, and has the consciousness of trying to help the cause. We aim at justice and impartiality in dealing with contributors, and seek only the edification of our subscribers and the highest good of the church. We are abundantly liable to mistakes, however, and take all buffetings patiently, as often deserved by us, and as always well intended by those who chide. In the meantime old contributors and new ones are cordially invited to send us the fruits of their thinking and observation.

SOUTHWESTERN BIBLE SOCIETY.

The anniversary of this institution was held at the First Presbyterian church, Lafayette square, on Sunday night, the twenty-first instant. The spacious house was filled at an early hour by the different Protestant denominations, united by the love of a common Savior, and by their devotion to the Bible. The choir discoursed excellent music, Dr. Palmer read the Scriptures, Bishop Keener made the prayer, Rev. William V. Tudor delivered the address, and Rev. J. M. Lewis, of the Baptist Church, pronounced the benediction. Rev. Dr. Doremus, the general agent, read the annual report, giving a clear and satisfactory exhibit of the operations and condition of the society. Mr. Tudor's address was worthy of the occasion, and more completely satisfied us than anything we have heard on the subject for a long time. It was brilliant, original, instructive, and most eloquently pronounced. This was the twenty-second anniversary of the society.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.

Our popular college at Greensboro is getting under headway finely, and only needs what its many friends are able to do for it, to fill its halls with students and to give it an ample endowment. The preachers and leading laymen of the church should keep this great enterprise constantly before them, and work enthusiastically to secure patronage and funds. Our people are slowly waking up to the importance of education, but they are, we fear, but partially aroused. We quote as follows from a private communication of January 12, from Dr. A. S. Andrews, the worthy president of the Southern University:

We are all well, and the University is having fresh accessions to the number of her pupils. We hope to succeed, and intend to deserve success. We have never had a nobler class of young men. Our messing department is doing well; it is fully meeting the expectations of its friends. Our young men are living well at an expense of $10 per month. Young preachers and preachers' sons can be educated here at an expense of $100 per year, and the sons of laymen at from $160 to $170 per year. Where can such an education as we give here be obtained at such rates? If the members of the church will give us their sympathy and prayers, and their influence and patronage, the University can be made a source of great power and glory to Methodism in the Gulf States.

REV. T. B. WHITE.

The former pastor of the Moreau Street church leaves us for his new appointment, New Iberia, in a few days. Three years of faithful and successful labor has greatly endeared him to his old charge, and they relinquish him with many regrets. We doubt not he will meet with a warm reception by the Methodists of New Iberia, and that a pleasant and prosperous year awaits him there. Personally we feel as one bereaved to part with him. Our prayers and affectionate esteem will follow him and his interesting family. We give the statistics of his late charge, as follows:

Report of Moreau Street Charge for Conference Year of 1871.—Number of members, 114; number died, 2; dismissed by letter, 8; officiated at funerals, 10; infants baptized, 11; sermons preached, 96; number received, 31; number dropped by church meeting, 4; officiated at marriages, 4; adults baptized, 5; pastoral visits, 880.

Financial.—Bishops, $30.90; widows and orphans, $40.25; parsonage, $1,656; poor, $89.80; pastor, $1,020; sexton, $240; incidental, parsonage, $30; missionary, by church, $74.10; missionary, by Sunday school, $111; church repairs, $589; Sunday school purposes, $29.90; presiding elder, $75; incidental, church, $250.20; total, $4,236.15.

T. B. White, Pastor.

A RESPONSE.

Mr. Editor: For the encouragement of our people, and for the quickening of all who take interest in the fortunes of our Methodism in the Southwest, I report that a member of Carondelet Street church responds to the call made in behalf of Centenary, and has sent me a check for $1,000. This is as it should be. I cannot say that I am surprised at anything, in the way of Christian liberality, from that church, nor should I be at any sum from Felicity Street or from Morean Street; but I am profoundly grateful to God. I have had so many favors at His hands that I now hold myself prepared for any mercy. But this gift is increased by its promptness—"Bis dat qui cito dat." Our enterprise is under full way—the workmen are on the scaffold, the professors are in the lecture rooms; and whatever our friends are willing to do we shall be doubly glad to receive now.

If we might hope for four other such responses during the next week, what a flood of sunshine it would pour upon the halls of our college! Who will come up to the help of the Lord in these struggling hours of this great enterprise, that it may fairly pass the center and move off upon the accomplishment of its noble mission? Southern Methodism must have her seats of learning which may creditably compare with any in the land, so that her youth may be educated where all the atmosphere is filled with Christian influences, where they may model upon men who adorn the highest learning with the purest faith, and where her young prophets may become skilled, as was Moses, in all the learning of the times.

There is something more than money in the note in which my generous friend inclosed his check. I therefore quote from it. He says:

"New Orleans, Jan. 22, 1872.

"Bro. Keener: I read your appeal in the last Advocate, and find the best way for me to express my sympathy and interest in the work is to send you a check for $1,000. Would to God that our college could only be put on a firm, solid basis, sending out an hundred preachers every year.

"* * * As I prosper and have money placed in my hands, you shall hear from me again for Centenary. Yours affectionately,

"——."

It is the way of grace to take up the very worst cases.

MISGIVINGS.

We are glad to see that some of the earliest advocates of woman suffrage are beginning to doubt the wisdom of their course, and to draw back from the horrible consequences which the measure is almost certain to bring. There is even hope for the editor of Zion's Herald, who quotes Olive Logan and comments as follows:

Olive Logan, lately married to Mr. Wirt Sikes, denounces the horrid free-lustism in just terms. She says in the Tribune:

"I have steadily defended the holy institution of marriage in all my utterances touching the subject. I have earnestly contended that it is the basis of all that is best and most desirable in this life, and I have even gone so far, under the pressure of recent clamor, as to say that if woman suffrage means free-love, I am opposed to woman suffrage. My marriage to Wirt Sikes was the last, most emphatic protest I could make against the free-love notions of which we hear so much in the present day.

"I little dreamed, when I attended the Women's Convention at Steinway Hall, in the spring of 1869, (the only one I ever attended,) that the utterances of that body would ever lead up to such monstrous doctrines as are now put forth in the name of the advocates of woman suffrage. In the short speech I made on that occasion I conjured my hearers to believe that we sought no conflict with the gentle household gods, that we waged no war on the sweet home virtues, and much of like purport. I have not 'progressed' one inch in this matter since. I still think a happy home the best thing there is on earth, and I still believe that the old-fashioned marriage is the basis of it. Therefore I, like my husband, do not 'stand in the front line of the ultra-progressionists of the age with regard to marriage.'"

That is what Mr. Tilton and Mrs. Stanton have brought their cause to, so far as they can bring it. Mrs. Logan Sikes justly declares that if woman suffrage means free love, she is done with woman suffrage. So will all its real advocates say. But the New England advocates are denouncing this abomination. It will clear itself of it yet, if it is of God.

"It will clear itself of it yet, if it is of God!" Dr. Haven is not certain about the divine origin of woman suffrage. This is much for him to concede, and we trust he will continue to grow in grace and wisdom.

REV. W. F. EASTERLING.

This able minister was received among us of the Louisiana Conference by transfer, at the recent session in Monroe, and stationed by the Bishop at Opelousas. We were glad to welcome him to our territory, and commend him to the good offices of those he is appointed to serve. The following tribute from his brethren of Russellville is published in the Nashville Advocate:

Whereas, The Rev. W. F. Easterling, preacher in charge of the Russellville station, Louisville Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, feels constrained, on account of the failing health of his wife, to remove her to a climate better suited to her physical constitution; And whereas, In order so to do it is necessary for him to sunder his connection with our station as our minister; And whereas, The announcement of his intention to remove causes great regret in this community, and especially among the members of his charge; but as his family physician has so advised, and our brother feels that it is his duty to remove from our midst, we reluctantly consent, and we, the Quarterly Conference, on behalf of the church, tender our sympathy to our dear brother and his afflicted family, and hereby take great pleasure in recommending him as worthy of the confidence of the good people of any place to which he may be called, as a consistent, zealous and able preacher of the gospel.

Condition and Prospects of Our Church.

Dr. McFerrin, our missionary secretary, writing under this head to the St. Louis Christian Advocate, sums up the favorable indications as follows:

1. Our Bishops are all at work, and manifest a zeal commendable. If at fault at all, it is that they are laboring beyond their strength. Surely the office of a Bishop in our church is no sinecure. One pleasing feature in this connection is, that they are everywhere welcome, and universally popular. The preachers and people receive them joyfully as ministers of Christ, as messengers of the churches. They give satisfactory proof that they are in "the succession" and are true Bishops after the apostolic pattern.

2. The preachers, traveling and local, are in great harmony. I know of no parties, jars or divisions. The preachers and people are a unit in doctrine and government. Now and then some disappointed, restless spirit, who is not as highly esteemed by others as by himself, slides into obscurity. Such losses are, in the end, gain—gain to Methodism, but a loss to the poor, deluded souls who are led astray. In all the old Conferences there is a full supply of workers. Many young men of promise are coming into the ministry. We are not dependent on others for preachers. I pity a church that has not the ability to supply itself with ministers. It must be a sickly parentage that has next to no offspring, and lives only by adopting the children of the more prosperous. I know a church, so called, that has but few children except proselytes; their preachers are nearly all orphans, and go into orders for bread—and butter.

3. The great body of the membership is becoming more and more interested in the church. Hence there is a liberality in the support of the institutions of the church which never before existed. In proportion to their means, there is an advance of one hundred per cent. within the last seven years. Many more persons now aid in the support of the church than formerly. The preachers are more generously sustained, and other interests are more favorably considered.

4. The cause of Sunday schools is rapidly advancing, and the children are receiving more attention and more thorough instruction.

5. The spirit of church building is pervading the whole connection. More good houses of worship have been projected and completed, or old ones enlarged, repaired and made more comfortable, than in any one year since 1860—perhaps since the time of our organization.

6. The education of the youth of the land is demanding more attention, and the number of pupils in our Conference schools is increasing.

7. Notwithstanding the hardness of the times in money matters, I think our missionary collections, including what has been contributed in payment of the old debt, will exceed those of any year since 1865, by several thousand dollars. And I find more preachers than at any former period willing and anxious to enter new fields of ministerial toil. Scores are just waiting till the church can afford a little means to aid them in removing to destitute places.

8. There has been a general revival of religion within the past twelve months. I think the net increase for the year closing will reach nearly fifty thousand.

MONTANA.

Rev. Julius T. Curtiss, writing to Dr. McFerrin from Helena, Montana, gives the following account of his work and prospects:

This is an important field, and our church has every advantage now. It is by far a more important field than many suppose to our church, and by a little sacrifice of time and labor of some of our best preachers, we can take this country as by storm. And in order to this, we must first have this Territory and northern Idaho set off as a Conference. When the people see that we have a permanent organization, and that the preachers are to be retained among them, it will inspire confidence, and give weight to the efforts of the church, and we can then succeed, and the people can be reached and brought into the church. With our present condition, the masses look upon us and our efforts in something of the same light that they do upon the mining towns in the gulches and canons. Then, in the second place, we need strong and experienced men. The Protestant Episcopalians and Presbyterians have no church or preachers at all. The Baptists have a preacher. The people are in sympathy with our church, and are willing to help us with means. Our church here only numbers twenty-four members, and about half of these live in the country. We will soon have an elegant church building completed, with audience room sixty by forty; lecture room, forty-five by forty; library and preacher's office, each sixteen by fifteen. It will be the best house in the city, by far, I think. Two other brothers came out with me—Bros. R. S. Clarke and T. W. Flowers. It cost us nearly double what I expected it would. It cost me about $400 to get here.

We are pleased to notice the recent enlargement and general improvement of the Home Advocate. May publisher and editor be abundantly rewarded and blessed in their work. The Home Advocate is published at Jefferson, Texas, by G. A. Kelly, Esq., and edited by Rev. S. J. Hawkins, of the Trinity Conference.

WEST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

Bishop Marvin, writing of this Conference, which was recently held at Leesburg says:

Two important facts have occurred at the present session. One is the occupation of an outpost on the Rio Grande. The town of Laredo bids fair to become an important railroad center. It has already one thousand American inhabitants on this side of the river, and a considerable Mexican town has been built up on the other bank. The place is growing rapidly, and is even now the center of a very active business. The Laredo mission appears for the first time in our minutes. The missionary appointed to the work is one of the best men of the Conference. He speaks the Spanish language with good facility, is a man in middle life, tried and true. Several members of our church are already there, established in business, and others are going this winter. They hope to be able to build a church in the course of the year. With the blessing of God we hope to build up a strong society at this place.

The other fact is the reception into the Conference on trial of Alejo Hernandez, and his ordination for the missionary work among the Mexicans. Our brother Hernandez is an educated Mexican, brought by strange providences to the knowledge of God, and by equally strange providences brought into our church after his conversion. Few cases on record illustrate more impressively the grace of God.

He is held by our brethren, both lay and clerical, who have had large experience with Mexicans, to be a man of singular good sense and poise of character. Bro. William Headen, of Corpus Christi, a layman who was a member of the last General Conference, writes to me of him that he "is about thirty-one years of age, and is most anxious to do the work of one called of God to preach the gospel. His education is good. His advantages have been more than fair. His reading has been extensive and well directed since he embraced religion, and his doctrinal views are sound. It seems singular to me that he should be able to make not only nice, but judicious distinctions in doctrinal points. Such careful distinctions have been made by him in his letters to the Congregational and Episcopal ministers here as are found only of easy utterance by one convinced and thoroughly persuaded of the doctrines, charity and fullness of the gospel. Let me say, in a word, * * * the man is a Methodist. * * * * * *

"He is anxious to be ordained both deacon and elder. Our Quarterly Conference, fully persuaded of his piety, discretion, education and love, did not hesitate to commend him to the Conference for both orders."

So writes Bro. Headen, who knows him well, and so voted one of our most intelligent Quarterly Conferences.

Whether these two events—the organization of a mission on the banks of the Rio Grande, and the reception into our ranks of an educated and intellectual native Mexican—may be seed of a great harvest, we commit to time and to the mercies of God. We have done all for his glory, and with solemn prayer and reference to his will. May the seal of his approval appear in the results.

TAXING CHURCHES.—The Pacific states that the churches in California are now groaning under the burden of heavy taxes imposed upon their houses of worship by the laws, and some of them are at their wits' ends to know how to raise the amount levied. In the case of one country church, at least, the question has been mooted whether they should not abandon their edifice. In many cases the churches find it almost, and in some, in fact, entirely impossible to meet the expenses of supporting gospel institutions, aside from the tax, and then to have this superadded reduces them to despair. In San Francisco the tax is from $100 to $800 on an edifice. This is the only State in the Union in which purely benevolent institutions are thus burdened.

BIBLE REVISION.—Dean Howson says that the Revision Committee have laid down two rules which it will be well to remember. First. No alteration to be made unless in the careful opinion of the revisers it be absolutely necessary. Second. That all alterations be expressed in the grand old form adhered to in our existing Bibles. Alterations will arise from either of two causes. Either the copy of the Hebrew or Greek text translated from was faulty, or else the translation itself was faulty. The work will be completed in seven years.

THE Rev. Horace Brown, of the Missouri Conference, died in great peace, near Huntsville, Missouri, January 11

Obituaries.

RAIMON JOSEPHUS ALFORD, son of B. S. and Anna Alford, was born February 19, 1867, and died November 27, 1871, aged four years, nine months and eight days.

MISS MILLIE LEE was born April 5, 1801, and died December 7, 1871. She was a great-niece of old Uncle Jesse Lee, and a near relative of Leroy M. Lee. Being a descendant of this historic family, the reader will not be surprised to learn that she has been a member of the Methodist Church for half a century.

Losing her mother in childhood, she was raised by and became a member of the family of Mr. Joseph Perkins, of Virginia, in which she lived a life of celibacy till the day of her death. She was a member of old Tabernacle church for upward of forty years. When, at length, Mother Perkins found it necessary to move to Mississippi, with Ruth's attachment Millie seemed to say: "Entreat me not to leave thee, nor to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest will I go, and whither thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, thy God my God; whither thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried." Thus we laid her away in the family grave-yard of her adopted friends in Mississippi—Naomi, or Mother Perkins, still lingering on the brink of time, patiently awaiting the Master's call. Miss Millie was a long and sore, but patient sufferer, and evinced to her friends the sustaining power of redeeming grace, and doubtless ere this sees clearly how it is that "we are made perfect through suffering." HER PASTOR.

VICKSBURG, MISS., Dec. 27, 1871.

Richmond Christian Advocate please copy.

SISTER CAROLINA L. STEEL, daughter of Thomas and Gobrolla Hewett, was born in Charleston, South Carolina, February 16, 1815, and departed this life in Holmes county, Mississippi, August 11, 1871. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1852, and professed religion at Pleasant Grove camp ground, in North Carolina, in 1857.

Sister Steel was sick for some time, and suffered much; but felt in all her sufferings that Jesus was with her to support and comfort. It was our fortune to be with her several times before her death. She talked a great deal about her future prospects, and often rejoiced in anticipation of heaven. Just before she died she called her children around her and gave them a parting blessing, and asked that they meet her in heaven. Thus it is the good are being housed in glory. "One by one a star declineth." Soon we will all be there. Oh! may the triumphant death of the mother be the means of saving the children. Some time before Sister Steel was called away she was called to mourn the death of a lovely daughter.

MISS ALEXENA STEEL is also gone. She said to her mother: "Every summons that is sent from heaven I will look for you." The summons has come, and now the mother and daughter are together, where there will be no parting." The last words of the mother were, "Help me to God;" and the daughter's last words were, "Precious Jesus." "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." K. A. J.

FRANCES HEARN, wife of Dr. John C. Gordy, was born in Sussex county, Delaware, on the sixteenth of January, 1809; was married on the fourteenth of January, 1830; and died at home, in Franklin, Louisiana, on the thirteenth of December, 1871. On the fourteenth of December her funeral services were performed by her pastor, in presence of a large assemblage.

She became a member of the Methodist Church in 1824, at Union chapel, Worcester county, Maryland. In 1837 she removed to Louisiana, and joined the church by certificate, and continued a member up to her death. In all the relations of wife, mother, sister and friend she gained and maintained the confidence and love that sweeten and bless those relations by a consistent Christian bearing. In the latter part of her life she was subject to great suffering, which she bore with Christian fortitude. During the last months of her suffering pilgrimage the joy, the blessing and the power of faith in Jesus Christ were nobly illustrated. When asked on what she built her hopes, which made her so resigned and confident of the future, she responded with peculiar animation and glow of countenance: "On Jesus Christ, my Savior, who loved me and saved me, a poor sinner." When in a dying state she expressed a desire to partake of the sacrament with her family once more on earth. After partaking with joy the holy sacrament, together with children, grandchildren and a few friends, she with uplifted hands and tearful eyes committed them to the gracious Savior, asking his guidance and blessing on them all, and asking dying, as she then thought—a blessing on her absent husband. She lived, however, long enough to witness his return home, and impart to him her words of cheer, and let him witness her patient resignation and triumphant death. Sad is the home, sad are the grief-stricken hearts in the home circle; but we sorrow not as those without hope. Sister Gordy rests from her labors.

B. CLEGG.

MRS. MARTHA PRICE, wife of Robert Price, and daughter of William and Sallie Barnes, was born in Marion county, Mississippi, May 3, 1838; fell died at the residence of her husband, in Covington county, Mississippi, June 7, 1871.

When about twenty years of age, after several years' seriousness on the subject of her salvation, she retired to her room one evening, and was there converted before her eyes were closed in sleep. Soon after this she attached herself to the Baptist Church, in which she remained an acceptable member until 1867. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which church her husband was a member. She was united in wedlock January 1, 1856, and became the mother of four children, two of whom preceded her to their heavenly home. Some three years and a half before her death it became apparent to her family and friends that she was the subject of pulmonary consumption; but this disclosure was not alarming to her, because she had set her house in order, and awaited the work of this fatal disease with composure and Christian resignation. The evening of her death the regular family physician informed her that her time was short. She received this information calmly, remarking: "The Lord's will be done." She now talked much to her friends present, and to her husband and children, on the subject of a preparation for heaven, and gave strong evidences of her Savior's presence with her in her last struggle with the enemy. When she had only a few minutes left she called her physician, who had done all that his skill would permit him to do for her, and thanked him for his kindness; then other friends, husband and children, telling them that she was going to leave them, and kissing them an affectionate farewell, as if she were merely starting on a journey. She again requested her husband to train Luther and Ellen as she had endeavored to do. She then sent good-by to her aged mother, turned herself in the bed, and died without a struggle. May her husband, children and relatives follow her Christian example.

N. B. YOUNG, Pastor.

DIED, at her residence in Summit, Mississippi, on the nineteenth of October, 1871, Mrs. DELIA HAYNES, daughter of Mrs. Eliza and the late Robert McCoy.

Deceased was born in New Orleans, Louisiana, May 19, 1822, and was married, in Pike county, Mississippi, October 21, 1847, to Bythell Haynes, Esq., of Clinton, Louisiana. Her early married life was spent in Clinton, where she enjoyed a great deal of happiness with her husband, who was known and esteemed as one of the best citizens of that place. She had but one child, Eliza McCoy, (now Mrs. H. Q. Bridges,) who in childhood embraced all the elements of loveliness in grace of person, charm of manner, sweetness of temper and brightness of intellect. Her mother's life was wrapt up in her. She became a member of the Methodist Church many years ago, and was a worthy exemplar of the religion of Jesus. She became religious not from the force of circumstances, but from a deep, settled, fixed principle; and the same motive urged her forward in every good word and work, encouraging all good Christians, and rejoicing in the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom under every name where the banner of Christ was unfurled. Her mental capacity was of a high order. She loved to talk on the subject of religion and theology, and her good sense and well-informed mind made her conversation pleasant, instructive and edifying. The long affliction that ended her pilgrimage wrought in her the fruits of holiness. When her body was tortured with racking pains, so that death at any time would have been a happy relief, the vigor of mind rose above them, and the patient, submissive spirit cried out, in the language of Job: "Though the Lord slay me, yet will I trust him." To a friend she was the truest of friends. To her aged mother, her sister and her only daughter she was very precious. God hath taken her to rest. The weariness and losses of life are ended. The better world has added to its society one whom we prized highly and loved dearly. The amiableness of her spirit and her strong confidence in God are an example worthy of imitation. M. L. J. H.

SOULE'S COLLEGE.—The enterprise of Mr. Soule in prosecuting the great work of commercial education, upon a national and thoroughly effective scale, has at length placed this institution wholly above praise. Its practical and sterling virtues are now almost universally known. Whoever wishes for himself or those intrusted to his care a truly accurate and thoroughly available preparation for business life, amounting to an actual induction into the complex routine of that life, will be able to realize his wishes at the above college. To the youth of no city or town were there ever extended opportunities more invaluable for becoming qualified to certainly achieve success in life.

FEMALE BOARDING SCHOOL.

THE SPRING SESSION of this school, located in the pleasant town of Athens, East Tennessee, on the East Tennessee and Georgia railroad, midway between Knoxville and Chattanooga, will begin on MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 1872.

The school is in charge of Mrs. M. W. Sullins, assisted by competent teachers. The boarding department is in the care of Rev. T. and Mrs. Sullins.

Athens is an eligible location for schools, noted for health, and was the resort of visitors from the South, last summer, in quest of health and pleasure.

Young ladies educated in this fine climate will live longer and enjoy more of life than if educated in the South; and the difference in expense would more than pay the passage up and from this place, so that parents in the South can educate their children here cheaper than at home.

The school rooms are in the same building as the family residence, and pupils can attend school at all times without exposure. Thoroughness in studies, promoting health, developing mental and moral faculties is the constant aim of the principal.

Terms.

Tuition in Literary Department, per term of five months, from $10 to $18, according to studies payable half in advance, the other half at the middle of the session.

Mamma can't guess where I been
If you fly over so harn;
So I a queer place as I'se in—
'Twasn't out in the yard.

I climbed up, and I not down,
I didn't fall much no ways,
I looked out sharp for my gown—
Only tore—two—three place.

'Twasn't in the street I was,
Nor in among the trees skeet!
I didn't climb them now, cos
The app'les ain't fit I eat.

No! I didn't go to Charlie's—
If I had I'd changed my dess;
Nor didn't see Charley Grant, she's Done to school, I dess.

I was making no mud pies,
Nor baking them so done;
I didn't chase no butterflies—
My stars! but it was fun!

Yes; 'twas out in the barn house!
Dat's it exactly fhens;
I climbed up where the biddies stows,
And roosted wid the hens!

WILLIE'S TEMPTATION.

BY AUNT HOARY HEAD.

A more miserable-looking wight than Willie Gilbert never existed. There he stood, with his poor little face smeared with tears and dirt, pressed against the cold window pane, outside of which the rain was streaming. His warm breath had made a lovely cloud over the glass, inviting him most temptingly to scrawl the unsightly Ws, for which he was so famous, and which had so often brought down the housemaid's wrath upon him; but Willie was determined not to be amused to day.

Hour after hour he stood there, stolidly miserable. Omnibuses and carts rattled up and down the muddy streets. The old apple woman at the corner, with whom Willie always settled a little business on Saturday, set up a huge white umbrella over her gingerbread horses and other tempting wares, and settled herself at shelling her groundnuts as composedly as if the sun was shining. Willie's schoolmates nodded cheerily to him as they passed, hugging their big capes, and dancing purposely through every mud puddle with their India rubbers. One great boy, catching sight of the woebegone countenance, made a face at it, but a poor little lame fellow limped back after he had paddled on a whole square, hoping to comfort him by shouting out: "Cheer up, old fellow; we'll have plenty of fine days for it yet." But Willie's only reply was a shake of the head and a fresh burst of tears.

The matter was this: His teacher had promised his scholars a holiday if the day should prove fine, that they might spend in the woods—a plan which had so long filled their heads as to leave very little room for history and geography. They were to have the grandest time that ever was known. They were to carry their dinner and eat it on the grass, just as they chose, without any bothering knives and forks. The big boys had put up swings in the high oak trees, and they were to swing until they were sick, if they liked. Some of them had saved up their money and bought new fishing-lines, with bright red bobs, with which they intended to catch baskets full of minnows, and "who knows but what somebody might catch a trout." Old Sambo was to come round in the afternoon and give them some fine music with his fiddle, which, as Willie said, "could play just as splendidly as anybody else's, if one string was twine!" And they were to dance and frolic until their feet were ready to drop off. To crown all, they were to come home in a wagon by moonlight, and were to sing until the very owls would open their sleepy eyes with admiration and astonishment.

Willie went to bed so full of it that he dreamed he had turned into a great big lion, and that just as his schoolmates had sealed themselves at dinner he rushed in on them, upset the tables, threw the chicken-pie and ham and all the other nice things into the river, swallowed the plates and knives and forks, kicked his teacher in the nose, and just as he was preparing to smother them all with the table-cloth, woke up, and found that he was not a big lion at all, but only little Willie Gilbert; and, instead of being at a pic-nic, he was lying in bed, with his head at the foot and his feet on the pillow; and O! sad to tell, instead of its being the beautiful day Willie expected, with the bright sun shining in at the windows, there was only a leaden sky overhead, with a ceaseless pour upon the shed.

Now a wise little boy would have got out his tools and paint box and rainy-day toys, and tried to make the sun shine in doors; but Willie was not a wise little boy, and as he could not be happy in the way he intended, he would not be happy at all.

His mother sat at the end of the room, busily sewing, and, although she appeared to take no notice of her little boy's ill-humor, knew exactly how he felt.

Everybody gets tired of being idle and sulky after they have tried it awhile, and, when the morning had half worn away, Willie began to think that he might as well turn his attention to something else. He was tired, and cramped too, from his long standing at the window, so he went over to his mother and sat down on her low foot-cushion, leaning his head wearily against her knee.

"Willie," she said cheerfully, "what are you going to do with that?" and she pointed to his lunch basket, which she had packed the night before for him. There it stood, crammed almost to bursting with everything that could tempt a boy's appetite. There were delicate sandwiches, and boiled chicken, and fat little tarts, and crisp brown rolls, and as for the cakes! why, you can't think of a shape those cakes were not baked in! Hearts, and diamonds, and rings, and round, and squares, all covered with icing, with a pink sugar-plum in the middle of each, and then, in every crack and corner that was left between them, Willie's papa had popped in an almond or a raisin.

"I don't know," he replied dolefully; "I'm sure I don't want it now. O dear! I meant to have such a nice day with it," and the big brown eyes began to fill again.

"Well, cheer up, little man; we can't have rainy days forever, you know! Suppose you carry your basket off to old nurse and give them all a treat. It has stopped raining now, and may be if you give a little smile the sun might be encouraged to peep out."

Willie brightened up in a moment. "That's splendid, mother! Won't Ellen and Joe know how to dive into those cakes, and won't I make them stuff the baby, too. You are a trump, mother, and no mistake!" Snatching a kiss, he slung the basket on his arm, caught up an umbrella as he dashed through the entry, and in a trice was whistling down the street.

About an hour after the street door opened and Willie came in, not with the careless dash with which he had left, but walking soberly and quietly, and his face was very grave and pale. He would not even stop to notice Dan, who capered up on him, but went straight on to his mother's room.

"Why, Willie, what is the matter?" asked Mrs. Gilbert, as she caught sight of the child's startled face.

"O, mother! such a thing has happened! such a thing!

"Nurse Stone's Jim fell through a trap door this morning and nearly killed himself, and the doctor has been there all the morning, and has cut off his arm—his right arm, mother!—and you know how splendidly he carves ornaments for ceilings. A rich gentleman had engaged him to do a great deal of work for him, and was to speak to some others about him and get him steady employment, which would have made them all so comfortable. And now he can never carve any more. Nurse carried me in to see him, and he was all bandaged up in bed, and looked dreadfully. His voice was so weak he could hardly speak; and he only said when I went in: 'O, Master Will! O, Master Will! My poor old mother!' Oh, mother, now I see how wrong I was this morning. The very time I was thinking I was the worst-used boy in the world the doctor was cutting off Jim's arm. But, mother, if God is kind, and loves people, how can he let such dreadful troubles happen to them?" and the little fellow trembled with sorrow and excitement.

Mrs. Gilbert drew her little boy close to her side and soothed away his excitement, and talked with him tenderly and wisely. "Willie," she said, at length, "some of these days, when you are a man and think of to-day, you may laugh to remember how heavy a grief the loss of a pic-nic was to you. But if you do, you will be wrong. You are only a child, and your disappointment was a very heavy one; but if you had borne it patiently and cheerfully you would have been better and happier for it. Some people have had disappointments and sorrows that have darkened their whole lives, and yet before they die they found out that they were the best things that could have happened to them, because they were reminded of God and the long, long life to come, and were taught to believe on him and grow holy. And yet some of the disappointments were so terrible that we can hardly imagine how they could be borne so cheerfully as they were. A man lived many years ago, named Beethoven, who wrote such wonderful music that as long as the world lasts people's hearts will thrill whenever they hear it, and yet he was so deaf that he couldn't hear a single note of the sweet sonads he made. And there was a man named Huber who gave up his life to finding out all the wonderful things about bees and different insects. He would spend days poring over an ant's nest, and then he would write down all that he found out about it for others' benefit, and yet God took away his eyesight. But instead of giving up to despair he taught his servant to make observations for him, which he knew how to turn to account. Now all this seems very hard and strange to you, but God knew that in the end he was doing the wisest and best and most loving thing for them; and they have found it out too by this time."

And then they talked about Jim Stone, and started wonderful plans for helping him, and Willie wanted to run right off and sell his hens and pigeons, and could hardly listen to his mother when she said: "Wait until we see papa."

How I wish I had time to tell you how the sympathy for Jim spread, how the neighbors flocked round him in his trouble, and comforted him by helping him in a substantial way, and how Willie's papa found plenty of employment for him that paid him well, and kept him from being unhappy about his lost arm—for he was a brave lad, that Jim Stone.

A bright day did come at last, and didn't Willie enjoy himself, in the woods, to his heart's content, and danced so heartily that the moment he tumbled into the wagon he fell fast asleep, in spite of Old Sambo's fiddle; and his papa lifted him out without his knowing anything about it. It is a wonder that the big piece of cake he had saved for Jim hadn't dropped out of his pocket.

Willie is a man now, with little children of his own about his knee. He often tells them the story of these two days, and never forgets to say that, although the second was the happiest, the first was the best day, and he prays God that the lesson taught him then may go with him to his life's end.—New York Observer.

ONE DROP OF EVIL.—"I don't see why you won't let me play with Will Hunt," pouted Walter Kirk. "I know he does not always mind his mother, and smokes cigars, and once in a while swears just a little. But I have been brought up better than that; he won't hurt me. I should think you would trust me. I might do him some good."

"Walter," said his mother, "take this glass of pure, clear water, and put just one drop of ink into it." "O, mother! who would have thought one drop would blacken a whole glass so?" "Yes; it has changed the color of the whole, has it not? It is a shame to do that. Just put a drop of clear water into it, and restore its purity," said Mrs. Kirk. "Why, mother, you are laughing at me. One drop, nor a dozen, nor fifty, won't do that." "No, my son; and therefore I cannot allow one drop of his evil nature to mingle with your purity."—Little Sower.

The Farm and Garden.

THE VEGETABLE GARDEN.

Good crops of early, tender vegetables can only be had by a thorough preparation and generous manuring of the soil. If the work of spading the garden and spreading manure has not been done, let no time be lost. Spade deep and close. Then spread the manure thickly over the surface; the thicker the better. Well rotted manure is the best; but if it be coarse and fresh it can yet be applied, and it will be sufficiently decomposed by early spring to be available for the food of the young vegetables. Mix it with the soil with that useful implement, the spade-fork. Do not bury it deep. Leave it near the surface, where the plants can reach it when in the early stages of their growth. If the commercial fertilizers be used, this is a good time to apply them. For vegetables we recommend the application of from three hundred to five hundred pounds to the acre. Spare the manure and spoil the vegetables. In southern latitudes Irish potatoes and early corn may be planted in the latter part of this month. English peas, beets, spinach, lettuce, cabbage, radishes, carrots, parsnips, and, indeed, all the more hardy vegetables, may be planted during the month. Sow in the cold frames seeds of all the less hardy vegetables, to transplant as early as practicable in the spring. See that air is admitted into the frames every fair day, and during very cold weather see that they are covered with mats or straw. Prepare the hot-beds now, and toward the middle of the month sow tomatoes, celery, eggplant and all the tender vegetables. To those who have not cold frames or hot-beds we renew our earnest advice to supply themselves, without delay, with these invaluable appendages if they want early vegetables. As to the mode of planting, and the best varieties of vegetables to plant, we repeat the recommendations already given in a former number of the Farm and Home.

IRISH POTATOES.—The best early Irish potatoes are the Early Goodrich and Early Rose. They have been sufficiently tested to prove their superiority. The best way to plant Irish potatoes is to open deep furrows, six or seven inches deep, and about three feet apart, then plant the slits twelve to eighteen inches apart, manure liberally with stable manure or fresh cotton seed, and cover. In from sixty to eighty days, according to the latitude, from the time of planting the Goodrich, the crop will be ready for the table. For a later crop the Peachblow and the Pinkeye are much esteemed and excellent varieties.

English peas should be sown in drills from two to four feet apart, and about two inches deep. When the plants are a few inches high draw earth to them with a hoe, and stake them when the vines begin to run. The best early varieties are the "Extra Early Daniel O'Rourke," the "Extra Early Tom Thumb" and the "Philadelphia Extra Early."

Spinach should be sown in drills a foot apart, and covered lightly. The round-headed Savoy is a good variety.

Lettuce should be sown thinly in very shallow drills, one foot apart, in very rich soil, covered lightly, and if the weather is dry should be watered occasionally. When the plants are well up they should be thinned to nine inches or a foot apart, and frequently cultivated with the hoe. We would recommend the "Early Curled Silesian" and the "Brown Silesian" for the first sowing.

Cabbage should be sown in a gentle hot-bed. When up, by gradual exposure to the weather, they become hardened, and may be set out early next month, in well-manured ground, in rows eighteen inches apart, and a foot apart in the row. The "Early York" and "Early Winningstad" are deservedly most esteemed.

Let radishes be sown in very light, rich soil, in shallow drills, eight inches apart, and covered with the rake. The "Early Long Scarlet" is the most desirable for early sowing.

Sow beets in drills one inch deep and fifteen inches apart. When the plants are up they should be thinned to a foot apart. The "Extra Early or Bassano" is the earliest variety.

Sow carrots in shallow drills fifteen inches apart, and cover lightly. Thin the plants to five or six inches distance, and keep clear of weeds. The "Early Horn" is the earliest and best for the table.

Parsnips should be sown in drills eighteen inches apart and one inch deep. Cover carefully, and thin to six or eight inches. If the seeds are soaked in liquid manure for twelve hours before sowing the germination will be much hastened. The "Sugar or Hollow-Crowned" is one of the best for table use.

Sow onions in very rich, light soil, in drills twelve inches apart. Cover lightly, keep free from weeds, and thin to three or four inches. The "Large Red Weatherfield" and the "White or Silverskin" are very large and keep well.

Sow parsley in shallow drills twelve inches apart, in rich soil. Cover lightly, and thin the plant to three inches. The seed germinates very slowly. The "Curled or Double" is the most esteemed.—Farm and Home.

THE ORCHARD.—Finish transplanting fruit trees and vines. Complete also the operations of pruning and grafting. If large limbs are to be taken off in pruning use the saw; cut close to the body of the tree, and cover the wound with a thick coating of wax or cement. A solution of gum shellac dissolved in alcohol, and made of the thickness of paste, applied with a brush, is the best possible application. It will protect the sap vessels from cold and prevent the wood from cracking in the summer. Seeds of fruit trees should be sown now. Crack peach stones before planting. Set out cuttings of quinces, vines, etc. Cut back shoots of raspberry bushes to half their length. Continue the search for the borer, and do not rely upon concussion scaring them away, even though it be as loud as that caused by the great B. F. Butler's powder ship.—Farm and Home.

The average depth of the Atlantic ocean is estimated at 25,000 feet, and of the Pacific at 20,000. The deepest water in the Atlantic is off the Island of St. Helena, which has been sounded 37,000 feet.

Dr. E. Cows writes to the American Naturalist that the occurrence of the buffalo in Virginia up to the close of the last century can be substantiated beyond question. Surgeon J. Simpson informs me that he had the fact from Daniel Boone himself, who killed buffalo in Virginia in 1793–98.

Spectra of lightning are characterized by narrow bands in the blue and green, and occasionally in the red portions, by zigzag flashes. When the light is very vivid, bands of various degrees of luminous intensity and breadth are scattered throughout the spectrum, the determination of which remains one of the most important problems of meteorological chemistry.

Gutta-percha is the product, says the American Chemist, of the Isonanda gutta, a tree belonging to the order Sapotacea. It is one of the largest trees of the forests in which it grows, attaining a diameter of from three to six feet, and a height of upward of seventy feet. It flourishes in the jungles of Singapore, Borneo and on the Malayan peninsula. In Guyana they have also discovered a species of Sapota, which yields a juice in every way equal to that of the true gutta-percha tree. A tree yielding a similar gum flourishes at the foot of the Ghauts.

The diamond has so rarely been found in place that the greatest interest is attached to whatever may be discovered to be a matrix. Prof. von Jeremejew, of St. Potersburg, has found microscopic crystals of diamond inclosed in the mineral xanthophyllite. Specimens from the Schischimskian mountains of the Urals have disclosed hexakistetrahedron forms with curved faces, accompanied by simple tetrahedrons of plane faces. Most of the crystals are transparent and colorless; a few are tinted brown. They are most abundant in greenish plates of the mineral occurring in proximity to nodular aggregates of talcose shist and serpentine.

In the American Eclipse Expedition of 1870 to Spain Prof. C. A. Young, of Dartmouth College, observed the remarkable phenomenon that at the moment of total obscuration all the dark Fraunhofer lines of the solar spectrum were reversed, i. e., were changed from dark lines or shadows of lines, absorbed by incandescent gases in the atmosphere of the sun, to bright ones on a dark ground. Now the English Eclipse Expedition to India has confirmed this brilliant observation by a dispatch from Colonel Tennant to Mr. Huggins, dated December 13, Dodabetta, Ootacamund, announcing: "Thin mist; spectroscope satisfactory; reversion of lines entirely confirmed; six good photographs."

Prof. Agassiz has already more than fulfilled his anticipations, not in finding an Ammonite or a Saurian, but in the discovery of a genuine fish-nest, floating on the open sea, with its living freight. On the way to St. Thomas, searching among masses of detached algæ for evidences of earlier rock-attachment, he observed a curious ball of gulf-weed, Sargassum, whose branches were knit together by elastic threads, beaded at intervals or in clusters, which he at once recognized as a nest, and full of eggs, not occupying the central cavity of the structure, but scattered throughout its mass. Each one of these revealed, under an ordinary lens, two large eyes on the side of the head and a tail bent over the back of the body, as the embryo uniformly appears in fishes shortly before hatching. Removed to a jar, in two or three days they began to be active, and in a short time developed the dorsal cord, with its heterocercal bent, the caudal fin with its rays and blood currents on the yolk bags. By microscopic comparison of pigment cells of the skin with living specimens of young deep-sea fishes, the little embryos proved identical with Chironectes pictus, Cuvier. As indicated in its name, this species has fins like hands, the pectoral being supported by prolonged wrist-like appendages, and the ventral resembling rude fingers; so that the question suggests itself, Are not these peculiarly constructed fins employed in building the nest? So far from requiring coast shallows for its reproduction, we have here an instance of a fish making use of living algæ, closely woven together, as a receptacle for its young, food, and shelter in the same material—a veritable fish-cradle, rocked on the bosom of old ocean!

It belongs to the true spirit of obedience to render the very service which suits the occasion.

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONchitis, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and cruelties, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to duration of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Willcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodor M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity, freshness of style which, must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George E. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The general market has been without any material change since our last issue. Sugar has been steady at previous rates; the better qualities of molasses have commanded rather fuller prices; flour has shown but little variation; corn has continued firm; pork has been in light supply and ruled at an advance of 25c. ₱ bbl.; and in bacon we notice still easier rates for shoulders, but an improvement of ¼c. in clear rib sides, and ¾c. in clear, which have been scarce and in demand.

The weather has been clear and cool. Cotton continues to come in freely, but the heavy receipts have little influence on the general opinion with regard to the yield, it being understood that, planters being satisfied with the ruling rates, have availed themselves of good roads to push their crops to the landings.

The river is 13 feet 2 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the nineteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	25,990
Lake.....	43
Arkansas.....	1,601
Mobile.....	653
Texas.....	587
Total.....	28,874

On Saturday the movement exhibited but little animation and prices were manifestly weaker, requiring a reaction of ½c. in the outside figures of good ordinary and low middling, but no other change. The sales embraced 4,400 bales. On Monday the demand was again limited, less than the usual number of brokers participating in the business, but as three buyers took 3,500 bales the business ammed up 5,700 bales. Prices exhibited a continued downward tendency, and at the close the quotations were reduced ⅛c. in the inside figures of low middling and middling, other grades barely maintaining their previous position. On Tuesday the demand improved and prices stiffened, the sales aumming up 6,900 bales, and the closing rates showing a pretty general advance of ⅛c. on Monday's figures, and a net improvement on Friday's of ⅛c. in the outside quotations of middling, on the inside of strict middling and good ordinary. The animation of the movement created a general impression that the business would reach perhaps 10,000 bales, but operations were restricted by factors generally holding a fraction above the limits of pending orders.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 550,655 bales, against 666,471 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 323,934 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 109,034 to France, and a decrease of 346,063 to Great Britain, and of 74,504 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

SUGAR.—The demand has been fair, with good supplies and firmer prices. The receipts on Saturday and Monday were mostly sold at 5½@6½c. for inferior, 6¾@7¼c. for common, 8@8¼c. for fair, 8½@8¾c. for good fair, 9c. for fully fair, 9¼@9½c. for prime, 9⅝@9¾c. for strictly prime, 10@10¼c. for choice, 7½@9¾c. for seconds, 9@10¼c. for centrifugal, 10¾@11¼c. for yellow clarified, and 11¼@12¼c. for white.

MOLASSES.—The market has been in fair supply and good demand at firm prices. The receipts on Saturday and Monday were mostly sold at 30c. for common fermenting, 35@38c. for prime fermenting, 40@45c. for strictly prime fermenting, and 25@30c. for inferior and centrifugal not fermenting.

CORN.—The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 16,000 sacks, in lots, at 70c. for white, yellow and mixed, and 71c. for choice white.

PORK.—The stock is light, and better prices have been obtained, with a good demand. On Tuesday round lots were held at $14.75 ₱ bbl. 150 and 200 bbls. new and 200 bbls. old mess sold at $14.62½. It is retailing at $15.

BACON.—Shoulders continue dull, but prices for them are firmer. On Tuesday prices for sides ruled high, and 100 casks sold, in lots, at 8¾c. for clear rib, 9⅝, 9⅛@9¾c. for clear sides, and 5 casks shoulders at 7c. ₱ lb.

HAMS.—We have again to note very little animation. Choice new canvased sugar-cured hams are quoted at 13c. ₱ lb. Uncanvased are neglected. On Saturday 6 tierces uncanvased sugar-cured hams sold at 13c. On Tuesday 25 tierces new sugar-cured sold on private terms, and 10 do. at 13c.

DRY SALT MEAT.—The market has been quiet but firm. On Tuesday 80 boxes shoulders sold at 5⅛c., and 20 do. at 5¼c., and 10 casks clear rib sides at 8⅞c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—Packers' is in demand for Europe at firm prices. Refined is quiet. On Monday there were some supplies, and 25 tierces refined sold at 9⅛c., 86 tierces kettle-rendered at 9¼c., and 78 kegs do. at 10c.

BREAKFAST BACON.—Good and fresh lots of Western would command 9½@10c. ₱ lb., but old is dull at 8½c. Northern commands 11@11½c.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request, and opened on Tuesday at 109½@109¾, (against 109 at New York,) and closed at the opening rates, (against 108⅞ at New York.)

The sales of silver include $2,000 in American half dollars on Saturday at 107½@108¼, and $4,500 on Tuesday at 107½. American half dollars are quoted at 107½@108¼, and Mexican dollars at 1¾@2¼ per cent. premium in gold.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1872. NO. 5.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—The House Committee on the Revision of the Laws this morning unanimously authorized Mr. Sloss, of Alabama, to bring in a bill allowing persons in the South having claims against the government, which accrued prior to the war, to sue for the same without being required to establish their loyalty.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 24.—Mr. Butler presented a petition, signed by thirty-five thousand women, praying for female suffrage. He said they only desired a declaratory resolution, as they claimed their right under the constitution. Mr. Butler favored an early action on the matter. It was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 25.—General R. S. Ewell died at his residence in Maury county this morning. In giving directions regarding his tombstone he laid particular stress on the fact that he did not desire any word employed in the inscription that could reflect in any way upon the government of the United States.

MEMPHIS, Jan. 26.—The University Convention of the Methodist Church South to-day appointed a board of trustees to receive the necessary charter and subscriptions for the endowment of the university. No definite steps will be taken until $500,000 has been secured.

BOSTON, Jan. 27.—The late Isaac Rich left the bulk of his property to the Methodist Collegiate Institute.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 27.—Smallpox deaths for the week, 177; a decrease of 32. Decrease of cases, 100.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Thirteen smallpox cases and five deaths occurred yesterday. The disease has broken out in a few places on the Harlem railroad.

NEW YORK, Jan. 28.—Late advices from the City of Mexico state that General Negrey is between Zacatecas and Durango with four or five thousand men. General Corona has sent forces from Guadalajara to unite with the reserves in Zacatecas.

The Legislature of Guadalajara has refused to grant Governor Varlante extraordinary facilities.

The annexation fever is increasing.

Business, especially in the interior, is almost suspended. Much alarm was caused by the resolution introduced in Congress by Mr. Bensuloz to grant the finance and war departments extraordinary power.

A railroad train at Puebla was attacked by robbers, and the engineer and fireman of the train and seven passengers, including a girl seven years of age, were killed.

The Siglo says the revolution is as imposing as ever. The journals say that many of the revolutionists were formerly imperialists, and cites a number of names.

BOSTON, Jan. 29.—A resolution passed the Massachusetts Senate to-day, asking Congress, in view of the anticipation of the effects of the treaty of Washington, to provide for the relief and indemnity to the fishing interests by bounty on tonnage or such other form as may best protect them.

The property of the late Isaac Rich amounts to $1,700,000. By the provisions of the will the whole amount, under certain restrictions, goes to the Boston University, a branch of the Theological Seminary, a Methodist institution.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 29.—Mount Hood, in Oregon, is throwing out a dense column of smoke, indicative of an active volcanic action. The bay coal mines are on fire. Fire is consuming houses, etc., outside the shaft. The sea will be turned in to extinguish the flames.

NEW YORK, Jan. 30.—Cotton opened strong, but subsequently weakened. The estimated receipts are 100,000 bales, against 152,000 corresponding period last year.

Sterling is flat, and cotton bills plenty. A telegram to Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co. reports that the delayed trains on the Pacific railroad, East and West, are in motion. Picayune.

FOREIGN.

VIENNA, Jan. 24.—Francis Grilparzer, the dramatic poet, is dead, aged eighty-one years.

ROME, Jan. 24.—The census of Rome has been completed. The total population is two hundred and forty thousand.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 24.—Cholera has disappeared from this city and suburbs, and a clean bill of health is now granted to all departing vessels.

HAVANA, Jan. 24.—Trouble is brewing between Spain and France.

The Spaniards charge that several persons, including slaves, departed from the Island of Cuba by French steamers without passports.

The Spanish government threatens to close Cuban ports against French vessels unless the fugitives are returned.

The Cubans captured and burned Guisa, killing several volunteers and regulars. The Spaniards sent for reinforcements and reoccupied the ruins.

The Cubans captured forty carts recently near Las Tunas. Several were killed on both sides. The Cubans outnumbered the Spaniards.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Lady Franklin has offered a reward of £2,000 for the recovery of the records of the Erebus and Terror, supposed to have been deposited in King William's Land.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—All places of business will be closed on the twenty-eighth instant, the anniversary of the capitulation of Paris.

Bonapartist agents are very active in the army. They are distributing pamphlets urging the restoration of the empire as a means of ending all the woes of France. Copies have been found in barracks and seized by the police.

A new national federation on the Communist basis is organizing in Paris.

A protest against the pending education bill, signed by fifty-one bishops, has been sent to the Assembly.

MADRID, Jan. 26.—A stormy scene followed the reading of the decree of dissolution in the Cortes. The House seemed to be taken by surprise, and the members were unable to conceal their indignation. Passionate speeches were made, which were answered with derisive cries by the few supporters of the ministry. One deputy exclaimed: "The time has come for barricades!" The greatest uproar and confusion followed, amid which the sitting was declared at an end.

It appears the King finally refused to accept the resignation of the ministry tendered by Sagosta, and the decree dissolving the Cortes was issued in consequence.

LONDON, Jan. 27.—The Emperor of Germany urges Earl Granville to negotiate a treaty suppressing the International Society, principally by the rendition of political refugees.

It is thought the disruption of the liberal party in England is inevitable upon the education act.

The Spanish Bourbons combined upon Asturias, with the Duke de Montpensier, during Asturia's ministry.

It is said affairs at Versailles are threatening. The factions against Thiers and the republic are becoming bolder. A report is current that Bismarck is preparing for a new invasion.

ROME, Jan. 27.—The committee of the Chamber of Deputies have agreed to report in favor of a loan of three hundred million livres.

A new religious journal has been established here in opposition to the dogma of infallibility. Father Hyacinthe is among the contributors.

ROME, Jan. 28.—The Pope yesterday granted an audience to the Grand Duke Michael, brother of the Czar of Russia. This is regarded as indicative of a reconciliation of the differences which have existed between his holiness and the Czar. It is reported that the Pope, in return for permission to refit vacant Polish episcopal sees, expressly sanctions the adoption of the Russian language in the Roman Catholic churches of those provinces with the mixed populations lying between Russia proper and Poland proper.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 29.—Intelligence was received here to-day of the total destruction by an earthquake of Schamachi, a town of Asiatic Russia, Trans-Caucassia. From the few details received of this terrible disaster it is learned that the shocks were protracted, and that many lives (the number is not stated) were lost.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The Alabama claims, to be brought before the Geneva board, is the main topic of the journals. The exorbitant demands cause uneasiness and depress American stocks.

Mr. Roberts was inaugurated president of the Republic of Liberia on New Year's day.

ON NEW YEAR'S DAY King Victor Emanuel sent a special embassador to tender his congratulations to the Pope; but Cardinal Antonelli refused him admission to the presence of the holy father.

REV. CHURCHWELL A. CROWELL, a member of the South Georgia Conference, died, after a short illness, at Magnolia Springs, Georgia, on Wednesday, January 10.

THE COMET.—Encke's comet is now again visible to astronomers, and attracting close attention. The spectroscope has been brought into service, and may give some new and valuable determinations, as comets have been few since the instrument was devised. Encke devoted much zeal and labor to prove from the comet called after his name, that there exists a resisting medium in space which retards its movement. The statement is often made that the existence of matter in space has been thus demonstrated. Prof. Asaph Hall renews the discussion in the American Journal of Science. He holds that all other astronomical evidences of a resisting medium, which have been adduced from time to time, have been successively disproved; that thus far the motions of the planets seem to be in strict accord with the law of gravitation; and that Encke's comet stands alone as a strange anomaly. He shows that the calculations heretofore made are not conclusive, and urges that they should be tested over again, with the probable result of showing that they are not correct.

PUBLIC PRINTING.—According to the report of the Auditor of Public Accounts the public printing for the State has cost in three years $1,140,881, of which the State printer has received $675,668, and the official journals in the country $465,213. Says the auditor:

"The amounts above given are so largely in excess of those annually expended for the like purposes in previous years as to call for a revision of these laws, with the view of reducing the expenses they entail. In former years the annual amount paid to the State printer averaged $37,000. The public, for instance, derives little advantage from the publication of the laws and the journals in any other paper than that of the State printer; and the cost of these items of the printing and advertising account, constituting, as they do, a large share of the whole, is the chief point of objection to the laws in question, while a retrenchment in this and other respects would, as may be seen, work an important saving."

ILLITERACY IN THE COUNTRY.—The United States Commissioner of Education, General John Eaton, Jr., in his annual report, has prepared, from advanced sheets of the census a variety of statistics of illiteracy. A table giving the nativity of illiteracy in the United States in 1870 shows that there is an aggregate of 777,864 foreign illiterates, of whom 665,985 are in the Northern States; 39,496 in the Pacific States and Territories, and 72,383 in the Southern States; that there is an aggregate of 4,882,210 native illiterates, of whom 690,117 are in the Northern States, 7,504 in the Pacific States and Territories, and 4,117,589 in the Southern States; making a grand total of 5,660,074 illiterates in the entire country.

A RAILROAD belonging to some friends of mine was generally taken out of the room when the family assembled for prayers, lest he might take it into his head to join in irreverently in the responses. One evening, however, his presence happened to be unnoticed, and he was forgotten. For some time he maintained a decorous silence; but at length, instead of "Amen," out he came with "Cheer, boys, cheer." On this the butler was directed to remove him, and he had got as far as the door with him, when the bird, perhaps thinking that he had committed himself, and had better apologize, called out: "Sorry I spoke."—Old and New.

A CURIOUS set of chessmen has been devised by a Munich sculptor. The rival kings have assumed the shape of Emperors William and Napoleon, the officers on the one side being statuettes of the Empress Augusta, Prince Fritz, Bismarck, Moltke, etc.; on the other of the Empress Eugenie, Thiers, Gambetta, and the successive leaders of the French nation, by permissible anachronism all arrayed in the same army. The pawns represent the various characteristic features of the hostile armies—Uhlans and chevaux legers being opposed to Turcos and gardes mobiles.

OF 176,970 marriages celebrated in England in 1869, 144,516 were between bachelors and widows, and 15,722 between widowers and spinsters; and 9,108 between widowers and widows. These proportions nearly correspond with the proportions of the previous year, except in the case of the marriages of bachelors and widows, which increased 2.7 per cent.

THAT GOOD OLD MAN.—We are gratified to learn, says the New York Christian Advocate, that the venerable Henry Boehm, often mentioned as the oldest living Methodist itinerant minister, is still enjoying good health and almost delightful evening-time of life. He is spending the winter carefully housed with his granddaughter on Staten Island, and often receiving the visits of his kind daughter, Mrs. S. C. Emley, of this city. The latter was with him on Thursday, and found him, as usual, with a most cheerful frame of mind. He is looking forward with great satisfaction to the forthcoming General Conference, which he hopes to attend. He was a member of the General Conference in 1808, which provided for the first delegated General Conference, and was also present as the traveling companion of Bishop Asbury at the session of the latter, held in 1812.

Father Boehm does not feel that he has yet left the itinerant field; though he cannot go out in person as a pastor, he goes everywhere in spirit. In a private conversation with Mrs. Emley he mentioned his great and increasing enjoyment in prayer for the prosperity of the whole church. He said that he daily invoked the divine benedictions upon each department of our widespread church, calling down upon each mission field, home and foreign, by name, the richest blessings of grace. His enjoyment in these prayers was so great, he said, that they were often greatly prolonged. Father Boehm will be ninety-seven in June next, and has been an itinerant minister seventy-two years.

A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION.—The preacher who speaks from the heart and utters the truth with earnestness, will ordinarily need all the vitality which he can command on any given Sabbath for that day's services. Any needless expenditure of strength, whether by physical or mental effort, in conversation or study, is one which he cannot afford to make. He ought not to make it. We throw out this suggestion for the benefit of those families, in parishes destitute of pastors, who have to entertain pulpit supplies. Attentions which are meant in kindness are oftentimes anything but kindness in fact. To invite him out to tea or to dinner, or to insist upon keeping up a lively conversation in which he must take part, is to deprive him of rest which nearly every minister greatly needs. The best entertainment you can give him on the Sabbath is, to let him entertain himself.—Congregationalist.

STRAUSS, the German, and Renan, the Frenchman, says the Independent, who have so stoutly assailed, each in his own way, the supernatural claims of Christianity, are just now engaged in fighting each other with pamphlets. The neatest hit in the controversy thus far is by Renan. He refers to the fact that Strauss had published the letters of the two in a brochure for the benefit of a hospital for wounded German soldiers, and says:

"The work to which you have caused me to contribute is, indeed, a work of humanity; and, if my wretched prose has been able to procure a few cigars for those who pillaged my little house at Sevres, I thank you for having given me an opportunity to conform my conduct to some of the best authenticated precepts of Jesus."

CANNOT STAND IT.—Rev. Dr. Leacock, of New York, has resigned the rectorship of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Epiphany, in that city, because he believes that, notwithstanding the late disclaimer of the bishops in the convention at Baltimore, the Prayer Book teaches the baptismal regeneration and other doubtful and unscriptural things. He does not feel at liberty to use the Prayer Book which sets these things forth, and therefore he withdraws from the active exercise of the ministry in that church.

MR. DARWIN, the well-known scientist, in a published letter, declares himself a disbeliever in that system of religion called Christianity, and an adherent to rationalism in its broadest and fullest sense. On the other hand, Prof. Huxley, also as eminent in the scientific world, professes himself a conscientious and hearty believer in the Christian life and the Christian system.

THE world is the sphere of the church's toil and danger, not of its supplies or its employment.

THE ALL-SEEING.

Popular astronomy has made us familiar with the fact that the ray of light sent forth from each star in the firmament does not reach our eye at the same instant, but after an interval longer or shorter, according to the distance of the star; and that, as a consequence of this, we do not see the star as it actually is, but as it was at the moment when the ray of light was transmitted. Thus we see the moon as it was a second and a quarter before; the sun as it was about eight minutes before; Jupiter as it was fifty-two minutes previously; the principal star in the constellation of the Centaur as it was three years ago; Vega, as it was twelve years ago; Arcturus as it was twenty-six years ago; the Pole star as it was forty-eight years ago; Capella as it was seventy-one years ago; and so on to a star of the twelfth magnitude, which appears to us as it looked four thousand years ago. Any one of these orbs may have been extinguished during the interval, and yet we continue to see it shining still.

It follows from these wonderful facts that an observer, gifted with the necessary optical and other powers, might place himself at distances in the starry firmament so graduated as to recall all the past history of the world, and see it actually going on before his eyes. From a star of the twelfth magnitude he would see the earth as it appeared in the time of Abraham, and in Vega as it existed twelve years ago. Passing swiftly from one to the other, the whole history of the world from the time of Abraham to the present day would glance in rapid succession before him. Indeed, it is conceivable that the transition might be made so swiftly that the whole wonderful panorama would pass before him in an instant of time.

Thus we see how the universe still retains the pictures of the past, which spread out farther and farther into space by the vibration of light, and might be made visible to eyes endowed with the necessary powers and placed at the proper points of observation. By means of these actual suppositions we are able to conceive of the omniscience of God regarding the past as an all-surveying view, and can comprehend in some measure how time and space are identical, how the beginning and the end meet and inclose everything into eternity.—Mohr.

WE ARE TOLD says the Christian Intelligencer, on what ground is the statement based that Prof. Huxley, the scientist, has embraced Christianity? On no ground that we know, except that of a paragraph in a letter from London, by Justin McCarthy, which says that in a recent session of the London School Board, of which Prof. Huxley is a member, he remarked that education was in need of an infusion of more of the religious element in order to public safety. Prof. Huxley has published nothing under his own signature respecting his religious or theological views, and, like Darwin and some others of the modern school of science, he has not made any allusions in his works to Deity that indicate that he is even a monotheist, in the accepted sense of that term. Nevertheless, we have hope that he is in the path that leads to light and perfection. He is a gentleman who not only recognizes the necessity of candor in literary and scientific matters, but also in the domain of religious thought and life.

BISHOP VANDERHORST, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, says the Southern Christian Advocate, favored us with a call last week, and by his familiar face revived reminiscences of former days, when we knew him as an earnest Christian worker among his people in the city of Charleston. The Bishop seems to thrive on hard work, looking, as he does, remarkably well, notwithstanding the incessant labor he undergoes in giving form and stability to the organization of which he is one of the chief pastors. He reports gratifying progress, and is greatly encouraged in his work.

AMHERST COLLEGE issues her fiftieth catalogue. The faculty numbers seventeen, the students two hundred and forty-four. Twenty-five new scholarships have been established since last year. The college distributes annually about $1,000 in prizes and about $12,000 in beneficiary funds—a considerable part of the latter for the American Educational Society. Of the one hundred and sixty-one beneficiaries of that society last year, fifty-eight were at Amherst.

HYMN OF REST.

Come, all ye weary, worn and sin-defiled,
The day of whose deliverance hath not smiled;
Who toil on, sorrow-laden, sore distressed:
Come unto Me, and I will give you rest!

Come, ye who seek through all the world of sin,
The precious treasure only found within;
Clasp your eternal jewel of the breast,
Come unto Me, and I will give you rest!

Come, ye for whom the human love hath proved
A longing to be infinitely loved;
Whose hearts yet hover round some empty nest—
Come unto Me, and I will give you rest!

Come, ye who suffer through the lone, long night,
And grope for day with sad, tear-blinded sight;
I am the Sun that sets not in the West;
I bring you healing, and will give you rest!

Come, all who bear the cross where I have trod;
Who climb the same ascent to get to God,
Bowed down to see the prints my feet have pressed,
Come unto Me, and I will give you rest!

When storms arise and seas of trouble roll,
I will be near to save the sinking soul;
Each wave that breaks shall lift, dilate your breast,
And in their motion I will give you rest!

Regeneration and Entire Sanctification.

A correspondent wants to know the difference between regeneration and entire sanctification. He says there are some in his region who say they are one and the same thing. Then they ought not to retain their connection with the Methodist Church, which teaches the contrary doctrines in its catechisms, sermons, institutes, hymns and polemical literature.

Mr. Editor: The above is taken from a late number of the Christian Advocate at Nashville. I copy it for the purpose of asking your advice in the premises. The point is an important one. As you are our organ, and as we preachers now, it seems, get our theology, rules of administration, etc., from the editors, and as Dr. Summers is the only one into whose opinions I could afford to inquire, and as I can afford to inquire about his, I turn to you.

I have in my circuit several persons precisely in this category, and I want to know what to do with them. Must I follow Dr. Summers' advice? He says they ought not to stay in the church.

Now, first, I know of but two ways to get them out. One would be to ask them to leave the church, and they might or might not do so. The other is to arraign them before legal tribunals and expel them, if I could. Would the former be expedient and proper? And is there law for the latter?

And secondly, if they could be got out in any way, would such persons be likely to be benefited thereby? Would such persons be more likely to get right out of the church than in it? If out of our church, such a person would either remain out in the "world" or join some other church. In either case would he be likely to be better taught on this subject than in our church?

Again: if I turn such persons out, what advice shall I give them? Of course I must counsel them to go where they will find better teaching than among us. Please tell me what counsel I shall give them as they go out.

Again: I have a number of persons in my charge, among them some of the very best and most hopeful members on the circuit, who know nothing about "regeneration" or "sanctification." Some have never heard the words, or if they have, they know little or nothing of their meaning. And as to "the difference between them," you could not explain it to them. To such persons these two things, however they may be to Dr. Summers and you men of larger growth, to them they are necessarily, if anything, "one and the same thing." There are persons from about three to seven or eight, or perhaps ten years old. Please tell me what I must do with them. Must I follow Dr. Summers' advice and apply the rule: "They ought not to retain their connection with the Methodist Church?" And if so, how?

Now, Mr. Editor, as I said, this is a matter of importance. Some of us preachers out this way have been for some time talking, thinking, reading and preaching about the church—its nature, uses, design, etc. We have been in the habit of taking in persons, old or young, without any reference to what they would "say" about "the difference between regeneration and entire sanctification," or however slight the reasons might be for their saying so, and of then trying, in the church, to cure any errors in theology we might discover. We have thought that all errors, moral or religious, could be better cured in the church than out. I remember to have heard some say that to turn a man out of the church, or suffer him to go out, because of theological error, looked like putting a man out of a hospital because he was sick. Indeed it has been suggested that it might be as well, if not better, for those well and solidly grounded in the faith to go out than those more or less in error, because there would be less likelihood of danger in the former case.

I am aware that the right teaching of theology to the masses—children and those poorly read, or who cannot read at all—is a slow business and requires no little patience, and I have thought it could be better done in the church than out.

Quite a number of us are interested in this subject, and we hope you will set us right.

Yours truly, etc., R. Abney.

[Editor's Note.—We presume Dr. Summers had in his mind the following rule of our Discipline: "If a member of our church endeavor to sow dissension in any of our societies, by inveighing against either our doctrines or discipline, such person so offending shall be first reproved by the senior minister or preacher of his circuit; and if he persist in such pernicious practices he shall be expelled from the church;" or his meaning may have been that persons who do not believe the doctrines of our church are bound by consistency and a good conscience voluntarily to withdraw. However, we shall not presume to decide a matter about which two such venerable doctors of divinity are not agreed.]

Its Agricultural and Mineral Resources—Stock-Raising—Climate—Society—Timber—Water—Our Church, Etc.

BY REV. JULIUS T. CURTISS, M. D.

Mr. Editor: It is true I have not been here long enough to be able to give a statement of the superior advantages of this most remarkable country from my own personal knowledge, yet I am satisfied, from the peculiar advantages I have had, since I came here, of statistics, reports and conversations with the oldest and best citizens, as well as from what I have seen, that this country possesses superior advantages for the farmer over that of any other I have ever seen. But I can only give in a letter a general idea of the agricultural resources of the country. More can be produced here, and of better quality, of wheat, oats, barley, potatoes, onions, cabbages, turnips, beets, carrots, tomatoes, strawberries, etc., than I have ever seen in any country. I will add here that all these can be produced with less labor and expense than in the States. There is always such a demand here for this produce that farmers have no trouble about disposing of it, and at very high prices. To make money here at farming only requires a little energy and management. It has been the case here that one hand has made from $2,000 to $3,000 in a favorable season. This is the result of only a few months' labor. Two men, in sight of this city, last year produced and sold about $10,000 worth of grain, potatoes, vegetables and hay, with comparatively very little expense. I could mention others who have been alike successful in their agricultural enterprises.

The mineral resources are inexhaustible. We have tin, lead, copper, iron, coal, silver and gold; and the general opinion here is that there is no country on the globe that possesses so rich and so extensive a deposit of the precious metals as Montana. There are now over five hundred miles of continuous gold diggings already opened, and in a high state of development. In the spring there will be thousands of the sons of toil eagerly searching for the golden treasures that lie hidden in every gulch, canyon and hill in the Territory. The next spring is looked to as a "lively time" in the mines. The mining interest is the controlling, governing power in these mountains, and gives life and activity to all other pursuits.

The advantages of this Territory for stock-raising are superior to those of any of the States. It costs usually nothing to keep and feed stock. There has been no winter previous to this that the stock could not subsist, and come out in the spring in fine condition. There are vast sections of the finest grazing lands in the world. There are large herds now on the range which will doubtless come through the winter without any feed, except what they can dig out of the snow. Now take the mineral, agricultural and stock-raising advantages of Montana, and it presents a rare and superior source of wealth.

The climate and scenery of Montana is a remarkable and strange feature of this Territory. It is a mountainous country interspersed with extensive plains, grand, beautiful and picturesque. These valleys or plains vary in extent from five to twenty-five miles in width, and from twenty-five to one hundred and fifty miles in length. These valleys are rich and fertile. It is true there is some worthless soil in all of them. These valleys have streams, large and small, running through them, sufficient for irrigating purposes. All the farms have to be irrigated, as we have but little rain in this country. But it costs but little to raise a crop by irrigation.

There is no valuable timber on these plains or valleys, but there is an abundance for all practical purposes on the "foot hills" and mountains. Lumber is plentiful and cheap for building purposes.

The scenery is varied, grand and beautiful, charming the eye at every turn with its "romance" and wonders.

As to health, I judge from the robust, rugged appearance of the men, women and children I see, and believe it to be unequaled. I see no cause for disease whatever, but exposure, which is altogether unnecessary. There are a few chronic organic cases, and a few rheumatic cases, caused by exposure in the mines and in the mountains. Although we have cold weather here—often twenty to thirty degrees below zero—yet we do not feel it and suffer by it like we do in the States. I am constantly amazed at the peculiarity of this delightful, health-inspiring climate. The more I see and enjoy it the more I am pleased and delighted with it. The state of society here is fully equal to that of the States, and in the very best centers of your most refined society. The great majority of the people are irreligious; yet they have, in other days, enjoyed the advantages of good training and in good society; hence there is less of profanity and drunkenness, by far, than prevails in the States. The people are generous and more liberal than any people I have ever met. This Territory is not filled up with the surf of creation, as some suppose, and is generally believed by some in the States, and as is the case in some new countries. But a large portion of our population is of that class who were forced to flee their own native land and their homes in the South and West to escape oppression and death, as did the Puritans from British oppression and proscription, in whom was found a full embodiment of the highest and grandest type of human character, with which they impressed and molded the destiny of the New World; so Montana has an open asylum and a safe refuge for the oppressed sons of the South. And she is ready, with open arms, to welcome all such. There are many valuable, good citizens from the North and West in the Territory. We need good people to come here, let them come from where they may; but we want, above all, good Southern families—Methodist families—to come here, and if they will they will never regret it.

Our church is weak, but the prospect is good for a grand and glorious success. I am satisfied that ours is the church for this country. The Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) with their large missionary appropriations, have accomplished but very little. They have three preachers employed in the Territory, and with an appropriation of $7,000 they are making very little, if any, headway. The Protestant Episcopal Church is doing nothing. The Baptist Church has one missionary in the Territory. He is here in Helena. We have twelve preachers at work, and two promising young men preparing for the work. We will soon have the finest church completed here in Helena that is to be found in the Territory. But I must close this letter, with the promise of more anon.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Mr. Editor: It does seem to me that there is a lame place somewhere in our economy as respects domestic or home missions; and yet how to correct all errors, and so modify our system as to make everything work well and give general satisfaction to all, is a question not easily answered. I, with many of my ministerial brethren, have suffered in consequence of this lameness.

A brother is sent to a mission of perhaps seven or eight appointments, with the promise of receiving, in addition to what he can collect on his work, $150 or $200. The brother goes to work in good faith, labors hard, does a good year's work, gives general satisfaction, receives $250 or $300, goes off to Conference, congratulating himself with the idea of having done the best he could as a missionary. He promises his merchant, who has been kind enough to let him have supplies on time, that on his return from Conference he will settle with him. He expects to be amply compensated in purse, as well as in other respects, for all his labors. He has well earned the last dollar promised him, and he ought to receive it. Nobody doubts that. He presents his draft to the treasurer of the Board of Missions, and, alas! is told that there is no money in the treasury, or, if any, not enough to pay more than one-third or one-fourth of the amount the draft calls for. The poor man goes home with a sad heart, informs his faithful wife of these things, and then sits down to lament his sad condition—sad indeed, very sad. His merchant is also disappointed, and is reluctant to furnish supplies for the ensuing year. The preacher, his wife and children all suffer. Can you give us some light on the above subject?

Missionary.

[Note by Editor.—The only remedy we know of is: 1. Larger missionary collections. 2. Instead of anticipating the collections of the coming year, let the drafts be determined by and drawn only for the money in hand.]

GONE BEFORE.

In Memory of Mrs. A. H. Ryland.

From the homes of the rich and the poor, from the brown-stone front and the lowly shanty, the Wise One, who fashioned, and appointed unto all a time to die, is calling his people to himself; and as the silver lines steal into prominent places about our brows and temples, how rapidly to us these calls seem coming! Our church papers (Ingleside feasts) bring weekly notices of loved ones departing, bearing to the living last messages from pale lips and clinging souls that, in the final struggle, are still hanging with "unwavering trust on Christ." A little more than three years ago Philip P. Neely passed out of pain into bliss. A few weeks since, from the same spacious parlor where he lay like a prince in his coffin, they bore away his treasured friend—the dear little woman who, for long years in this hospitable home, was so attractive. To-day they lie side by side, in the same hallowed inclosure, in Magnolia cemetery—softly sleeping till "Jesus bids them rise." Thus are they going, our dear ones, wading through the chilling waters of the last river, but wafting us back some blessed signal that we hold to our hearts with a dumb feeling of passive sorrow. These cups seem bitter, but our Father's hand prepares them; the strokes seem heavy, but a merciful arm holds the rod; the wounds cut deep, but the great Healer is in reach, and laying our hands in his, we are strengthened in all trial. Mrs. Lucy T. Ryland was a lovely woman—lovely in person, lovely in demeanor, and exceedingly lovely in spirit. She did not mingle with the general world, and was most loved where best known. A trusting Christian, a faithful wife, a loving mother, a model keeper-at-home, a safe friend. She has gone before us, leaving on our hearts the odor of a sweet memory. A tender watcher, who was by through her long and painful illness, writes of her thus: "Her patience was wonderful, and during the whole ten weeks of suffering I did not hear one murmur or complaint—always gentle, patient and sweet—never speaking one cross word to servant, nurse or friend, and giving answers to her pastor always expressive of submission and resignation to God's will. You know she was a meek and quiet and unpretending Christian." The lonely ones she has left are bereft indeed, as they sit in the places where her affectionate sprightliness was peculiarly charming. The wife and mother is taken away; the husband and sons are left for a season. May God deal tenderly with them, and at the end of life's pilgrimage reunite them to this broken link—this cherished one who has only gone before. Soft lie the turf on this new-made grave, and lovingly let me lay this lowly wreath of simple flowers, with song of birds and light of overhanging heavens. Leaning on our Savior, may we all

"Humbly take what God bestows,
And, like his own fair flowers,
Accept the sunshine with a smile,
And meekly bend in showers."

Julia Westwood.

[The following notice of this estimable lady is from her old friend and pastor, Dr. A. S. Andrews.]

Mrs. Lucy T. Ryland, wife of Major A. H. Ryland, of Mobile, Alabama, departed this life on the tenth day of December, 1871, in the sixty-fifth year of her age. Sister Ryland was a native of Portsmouth, Virginia, where she was born and educated. Her parents appear to have reared her "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," for at the early age of fifteen she was happily converted to God, and united herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In the year 1839 she removed to Mobile, Alabama, where, in 1848, she was married to A. H. Ryland. Our departed mother and sister in Israel was a kind friend, ever true to those whom she honored with her friendship, and always careful not to wound the feelings of those with whom she was thrown in social life. She was liberal to the poor in her vicinity, and did much to relieve the distress and sufferings of the afflicted in her neighborhood. She has many a time relieved the anguish of the widow's heart and dried the tears of helpless orphans. She was a true and faithful wife, assiduously devoted to the welfare and happiness of her husband. In her love for him she felt it no hardship to live up to the apostolic injunction: "Wives, submit yourselves to your own husbands, as unto the Lord, for the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the Head of the Church." She was a kind and affectionate mother, never forgetting the claims of her children, and doing all in her power to add to their comfort and happiness, and to develop and prepare them for the duties of life and the worship of God. Long will our bereaved friend and his sons, now merging into manhood, mourn and miss the devoted wife and mother. They will never in this world find so true and kind a friend! The aching void in their hearts can never be filled! Our departed sister was a sincere Christian. She did nothing for show and appearance in the church of which she was a member, but she showed by her life that her heart was consecrated to God in his Son Jesus Christ. She was ever consistent and true to him whose vows she had taken upon her. When her last sickness came she was firmly trusting in our Lord Jesus Christ for salvation. She suffered long, but bore her afflictions with patience and Christian resignation until the end came, and the great Master called her home. The St. Francis Street congregation has lost a good member, and the community a true Christian woman.

CHANGES IN INDIA.

Rev. P. Rajah-gopaul, a native pastor a Msdras, in connection with the Scotch Presbyterian Church, has written to a friend of missions in Scotland, dated November 9, 1871, in which he expresses the following hopeful news in regard to the changes which are coming over India:

"Since the commencement of our work one generation has well-nigh passed away, and we have now the second generation under the action of God's eternal truth. It is beautiful to observe the marked change that has come over them. They are different from their fathers; they are eager to throw away their idols; they show a manifest readiness to accept the truth that God is one, and that he is the creator and preserver of mankind; and also that Christianity is the undoubted revelation from heaven is fast gaining ground among them. This is not all. The educated young men are impatient to cast away the shackles of caste and every superstitious rite. The most important and critical part of Indian transition state, for which the early missionaries prayed and longed, has now at last come; and it depends upon us, whose duty it is to propagate the truth, whether this country shall be won to Christ, or be lost forever. I have now been working for upwards of a quarter of a century, and am beginning to get old. It is my firm conviction that the time is not far distant (may God hasten it in his own time) when the countless races and castes that teem in this land will sit under the shadow of Christ. The changes that take place in nature are often very rapid with us. For instance, during our summer season all things appear dry and parched, and the very earth under our feet cracks on account of excessive heat. But no sooner does one shower of rain descend than the whole face of the earth is changed—in one night it is clothed with fresh, living green. Shall we not believe that the moral change also will be equally rapid and striking among us? What we require in our mission work is a good shower, the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Then, in a day, our weeping will be turned into joy, and we shall see souls floating into the church as doves to their windows."

Welcome to the Japanese embassy! It is a thousand times more significant of good than the visit of the Russian Grand Duke. It is headed by the prime minister of Japan, the chief minister of finance and three other princes of the highest official rank. The fervor with which the empire receives new ideas and searches for the better ways is unparalleled since the revival of learning in the fifteenth century. Imagine a feudal empire instantly consolidated under a single strong central government, the great barons relinquishing their independence. Imagine the habits and traditions of thousand of years suddenly given up, and those of another civilization adopted. Imagine a proud nation humbly seeking instruction from an utterly diverse culture. Behold the Buddhist polytheism abolished by edict, that the old Sintoo God-worship may take its place. Behold princes sending their sons and daughters to foreign lands for Christian education. Behold women raised in a moment from their degradation to a sphere of social equality and respect. Listen to the confession from the Mikado, in an edict just published, that that honey kingdom is but in its childhood, and must learn as children do. He says:

"My country is now undergoing a complete change from old to new ideas, which I sincerely desire; therefore I call upon all the wise and strong-minded to appear and become good guides to the government. During youth-time it is positively necessary to view foreign countries, so as to become enlightened as to the ideas of the world, and boys, as well as girls, who will themselves become men and women should be allowed to go abroad, and my country will be benefited by their knowledge so acquired. Women heretofore have had no position socially, because it was considered they were without understanding; but, if educated and intelligent, they should have due respect. Six young Japanese women of rank will be sent to America, in care of Mrs. Delong, to be placed in some seminary of learning, at the expense of the Japanese government."

Here verily is a nation born in a day, and we may thank God that America has been the instrument in such a wonderful movement.—Independent.

Our Lord Christ is amply sufficient, in spite of all our failure in grace, our sin and unfaithfulness. He has not left us, and he never will. Only let us trust him; let us use him; let us give him room to do.

"Equality" means, says a French writer, "a desire to be equal to your superiors, and superior to your equals."

ON THE THRESHOLD.

We are standing on the threshold
Of a brighter world than this,
And through all our earth-born striving
Come deep sounds of far-off bliss;
Some stray note from harp of seraph
Falls upon our careless ear,
And we start and wonder listen,
Though we know not what we hear.

Now and then the portals open
And we see our loved ones go,
And we lose them in the brightness
While we weeping watch below;
But we know they're only folded
Closer to that Heart above,
Which is tenderer than a mother's,
For we know our "God is Love."

What doth matter though we weary
Standing on the threshold dim,
If we catch some heavenly cadence
From the great celestial hymn?
If our Savior's hand we're clasping
In this world of blight and sin,
Gladness we when ope the portals,
Then to hear his "Enter in."

The Testimony of Josephus in Relation to Christ.

BY ROBERT W. LANDIS.

I have often been inquired of, both by letter and in conversation, whether the passage in Josephus, wherein he speaks of Christ, is genuine, and have found existing in the public mind not only doubt on the subject, but a strong disposition to regard it as a forgery. The assertion that it is such is constantly reiterated by infidels in our day, and they claim to regard the man as little short of a simpleton who can think otherwise. Their representations have not been without effect; and I purpose, therefore, to devote an essay to a brief consideration of the matter.

The passage, which may be found in Antiquities, Book xviii, chapter iii, section 3, reads as follows: "Now there was about this time Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man; for he was a doer of wonderful works, a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure. He drew over to him both many of the Jews and many of the Gentiles. He was the Christ, and when Pilate, at the suggestion of the principal men among us," etc.

It is not possible to do full justice to the subject in a brief essay; but still sufficient may be said to demonstrate the perfect fatuity of the charge of forgery. And in the first place let it be noted that the intelligent Jews themselves do not deny the genuineness of the passage, nor was it ever questioned until comparatively a recent date. What first gave occasion and currency to the doubt respecting it was an article by Abbe de Longuerue in the Bibliotheque Ancienne et Moderne, on the authority of which Gibbon, after his fashion, has pronounced it spurious. (Decline and Fall, chapter xvi.) And through him the doubt has been disseminated in English literature. But Bretschneider, the German Rationalist, in a little essay published in 1812, has thoroughly discussed the question, and has so completely demolished cavil and closed the mouth of reply, that no really intelligent man has since then ventured to call its genuineness in question. Let our readers observe:

1. All the Greek manuscripts and printed copies have the passage, word for word, as we find it in the translation. There is no varying, but the same uniformity is observable in the unsuspected parts of the history. Now to attempt to associate this fact with the idea of forgery is folly. All the copies certainly could not have been forged, and some would have assuredly come down to us without the passage, if it be not genuine.

2. Then further: How could such a passage have been foisted into the text? Josephus, by order of the Emperor Titus, (with whom he was a great favorite,) deposited in the imperial library at Rome the best and most carefully written copies of his works, and from these, as a matter of course, the accuracy of the later editions was tested. Who, then, could have inserted the forgery? The Jews certainly would not have done it if the thing had been even practicable. The pagans would not have done it, for they had no inducement, and took no interest in the matter, except—like the Jews—in that which was hostile to Christianity. The Christians could not have done it, being in an oppressed and persecuted state until the time of Constantine. They could not, of course, corrupt the copies in the imperial library; and had they corrupted others, those standard copies were always at hand to detect the forgery. The infidel here needs a vast amount of credulity to sustain him.

3. There is not in all ancient history any account of a variation in the copies here.

4. Before the copies deposited by Josephus could have been destroyed, and those which had been immediately made from them, we find the passage quoted by the Greek fathers, who give it word for word as it is given in Josephus. Eusebius, in the third century, thus cites it; and in the fourth century Jerome, of the Latin Church, not to mention other writers, as Suidas, etc. Thus all antiquity unites in pronouncing the passages genuine.

5. Then there was no conceivable motive for such a forgery. Had any one undertaken it, it must have been with the view of favoring the gospel. But can any man seriously suppose that one poor little passage like this could have satisfied the forger? or that while his hand was in he would not have attempted a far more extensive operation?

6. And then, further, Josephus in another passage, which no one has ever pretended to suspect, refers to this very passage. In Antiquities, Book xx, chapter x, section 50, he says: "Festus was now dead, and Albinus was put upon the road; so he assembled the sanhedrim of judges, and brought before them James, the brother of Jesus, who was called Christ, and some others," etc. Now Josephus nowhere refers to Christ except in this passage and in the one given above, and he here, therefore, directs the reader's attention to the reference already made to him—that is, in the former passage, although he had said "that James was the brother of Christ, of whom I have already spoken."

The grounds on which the surmise of forgery is attempted to be sustained are very trivial. Let us consider them:

1. Some ancient writers, as Tertullian and Origen, do not quote it against the Jews. But why should they quote it against the Jews? The Jews—as their Talmuds show—denied nothing which this passage would prove. Why, then, quote it against them? Our infidels ought not to suppose that because they are in the habit of citing passages which have no bearing on the point they are discussing, therefore Origen and Tertullian would do the same.

2. The assertion that the passage "interrupts the narrative" is simply ridiculous, and needs no refutation.

3. The only thing which has the appearance of an objection to the genuineness of the passage is the fact that Josephus is here made to confess that Jesus is the Christ, and yet did not become a Christian, but remained a Jew.

It must be remembered, however, that Josephus was writing not to the Jews, but Greeks or Gentiles, who knew nothing of the doctrinal meaning of Christ among the Jews, and therefore meant merely to say that the person of whom he spake was he of whom they had heard under that name, the one from whom the name Christian was derived. The objection is therefore based upon a misunderstanding of the name of Christ. Josephus does not employ it as a doctrinal appellation, but merely as a proper name, as it is used by Tacitus and Suetonius, and frequently in the New Testament. It is not to be translated the Christ or Messiah, but simply Christ; as the other passage above cited has it, "this is he who was called or was known by the name Christ."

Josephus did not adopt the notions so current among the Jews respecting the Messiah, (as his application of the prophecies to Vespasian evinces,) and therefore he could speak of Jesus as "a wise man," etc., and not change his religion. In his work he aims to state whatever was memorable in the history of his nation; and how, then, could he omit to say something in relation to the origin of the Christians, already so famous at Rome, and so numerous among the Greeks? He has spoken particularly of John the Baptist, of his life, ministry and death, (see Antiquities xviii, chapter v, section 2,) and how should he pass over in silence one so remarkable as Jesus! And yet the aforesaid passage is his only description of the life and character of Christ.

There is, therefore, not only no reason for calling the genuineness of this passage in question, but there is not in all ancient literature a passage whose genuineness can be more fully and satisfactorily demonstrated.—Independent.

CARLYLE'S OPINION.—It is said that Thomas Carlyle, while on a journey to the far north, nonplussed his aristocratic traveling companions. The railway carriage was comfortably seated with many ladies, anxious to record their having been the road-and-rail companions of the great man. The subject started was Dr. Darwin and his theory. The ladies argued the pros and cons in a womanly manner, looking to Mr. Carlyle for approval. He gave every fair lady the same kindly nod and smile. One of the party, after she had spoken, said: "What do you think, Mr. Carlyle?" His cool reply was: "Ladies, you have left nothing to be said." "Oh, yes! but what is your opinion! You have not given us that yet." Carlyle made the following pithy reply: "For myself, I am disposed to take the words of the Psalmist, 'Man was made a little lower than the angels.'"

LEARN EVERYTHING.—By no mathematical calculation of chances can a human being foretell what knowledge he may have need of, or what quality of mind may be called into requisition in the affairs of his own life.—Venable.

Conversion of Alexander I, of Russia.

For many years Alexander the First, uncle of the present Czar of Russia, was an unbeliever in the doctrines of Christianity. His efforts to resist religious truth led finally to his conversion. From being a bitter opposer he became a zealous promoter of religion among his subjects.

There being a vacancy in the office of minister of religion, the Emperor inclined at first to appoint a gentleman he highly esteemed; but on learning that he was a devout believer in the Bible he changed his determination and offered the position to Prince Galitzin, a warm personal friend, and like himself an unbeliever. The prince, sensible of his entire unfitness for the office, felt himself in an awkward position, yet, owing to his strong attachment to the person of the Emperor he was over-persuaded to accept it. Realizing his need of instruction as to his new duties he sought the advice of the bishop of the diocese, who referred him to a certain book which, studied diligently and faithfully, he said would furnish him all needed instruction, and he would experience no difficulty in his new position. But this was the hated book, and he could not now consult its pages. But he secretly obtained a copy soon after and carefully studied it. The more he read the more his interest increased till the light gradually broke in upon his mind. This was just before the exciting scenes incident to the entry of the French troops into Russia.

When the news reached the court of St. Petersburg, all was consternation, and every face was blanched with fear. Prince Galitzin alone seemed calm and unruffled. This was noticed by every one, for his attachment to the Emperor was well known.

The Emperor himself noticed the calmness of his demeanor, and was unable to explain it. That he alone should be undisturbed where every one else apprehended ruin to the Russian empire was inexplicable, yet he could not harbor the thought that his cherished friend was a traitor.

The Emperor one day called on the prince and asked him "how he could be so composed when every one else was in dismay." In reply the prince told him that of late he had been reading the Scriptures, and that they had given him such confidence in God that he felt secure in his care, though surrounded by danger. The Bible was then lying on the table, and he urged his majesty to study it also, assuring him that it would give him the same calmness and trust. But this only roused the anger of the Emperor that he should offer for his perusal the book he hated above all others, and he threw it violently upon the floor. The prince picked it up, asking the privilege of reading to him the portion then open, to which he reluctantly consented. This was the ninety-first Psalm, and it was so appropriate to the occasion that he was struck with the sentiments.

As the Russian army were about leaving St. Petersburg to meet Napoleon, the Emperor and his officers repaired to the church, as is the custom, to listen to the service. What was his surprise to hear again the ninety-first Psalm read! He apprehended that it had been suggested to the officiating minister by Prince Galitzen himself, but upon mentioning it to him, he denied having spoken of the circumstance to any one. This remarkable coincidence made a strong impression on the mind of the Emperor, and he began to have more reverence for the truths of sacred writ.

While in camp with his army he sent one day for one of the chaplains to come and read to him, when to his still greater astonishment he too read the same Psalm. "Who told you to read that?" he inquired. "No one but God," replied the chaplain. "When informed that you wanted me to read the Bible to you, I fell on my knees and besought guidance from above, and was then impelled to select this Psalm." This circumstance, in connection with the preceding, so strongly impressed the Emperor's mind that he made the Scriptures his daily study till his eyes were enlightened "to behold wondrous things," and from that time he became an earnest Christian. His future conduct proved the sincerity of his conversion.

Having been so strongly impressed with the salutary influence of the Scriptures, he resolved to secure the same for his people by distributing the holy volume throughout his empire. Accordingly, in January, 1813, he formed a Bible society, called first the St. Petersburg, and afterward the Russian Bible Society, of which Prince Galitzin was the president. It had two hundred and eighty-nine auxiliaries, from all of which was raised $3,711,376. They translated the Scriptures into forty-one idioms. They distributed four hundred and forty-eight thousand one hundred and nine volumes, invaluable in themselves, and in many districts the only books possessed by the people. The society continued its glorious work for several years, and as late as twelve years after its organization it distributed seventy thousand copies, so that by the wise efforts of Alexander the Scriptures were secured by the Russian people.—*E. THE HYMN OF CLEANTHES.

There are many reasons for a peculiar interest in this hymn. It is regarded by all competent judges as the noblest hymn of all antiquity, excepting those of the Bible. It has, moreover, great intrinsic excellence, judged by an absolute standard. It presents the religious convictions and emotions of the more intelligent pagans in a very interesting and instructive light. It excites additional interest in view of the fact that it was read by the Apostle Paul, and was deemed worthy of being quoted in his argument addressed to the Athenians on Mars' Hill. In that argument he sets forth God, the Creator of all things, as a personal God, and thereby exposes the folly of idol worship. Addressing an audience of Greeks, he appeals to certain of their own poets who had said, "We are his offspring," and reasons from the conscious personality of man, the offspring, to the corresponding personality of God, the Father of man; and thus condemns the representation and worship of the divine Spirit by "images of gold or silver or stone, graven by art or man's device." What argument can be more profound or fundamental? Does not a rational curiosity lead us to inquire who were these poets? Does their language as they understood it, sustain the argument of Paul? What is the context from which these words were taken? What light, if any, does this quotation throw on Paul's acquaintance with the Greek poets and with classical literature?

There is no field of thought more intensely interesting than is opened by an attempt to answer these questions.—Old and New.

PALMYRA-IN-THE-DESERT, the ancient half-way station between the Mediterranean and the valley of the Euphrates, the city of Zenobia, was lost sight of up to the eighteenth century, and still remains wholly inaccessible to modern travelers. A temporary occupation of the site, however, by the Ottoman government, not long since, furnished an opportunity for several official gentlemen to visit and explore its ruins. They made a careful survey of the Tower Tombs, resembling the pyramids of Egypt, and by their excavations brought to light the first known specimens of Palmyrene mummies. Captain Burton, formerly British consul at Damascus, in giving an account of his researches, before the Anthropological Institute of London, presented a number of crania, mummy bones, cloths of cotton as well as linen, tessera, with inscriptions in the Palmyrene character, mortuary lamps also inscribed, coins, seals, etc. In these articles he detected two distinct styles of art—one native and barbarous, the other late-classical, dating from the Roman period of the second or third century. He found the water supply of the place to be sufficient for a city of nine miles circumference. Dr. C. Blake believes the crania, after a comparison with modern Syrian and Jewish skulls, to be truly Phœnician, most of them belonging to a race larger and taller than any modern type in Syria. The leg-bones proved their owners to have had a stature of not less than six feet four inches high. Mummied hands, with tapering fingers and filbert-shaped nails, revealed a beauty of form unknown among Egyptian females. M. Peretie, dragoman of the British consul-general at Beirut, and a well-known collector, has in his possession a statue supposed to be that of Queen Zenobia.

AN EPISCOPALIAN HORSE.—In one of his tours Elder John Leland came up at night to a public house, where he was acquainted and where he proposed to pass the night. The landlord met him with a smiling countenance, and told him that, having built a new barn, he was nicely prepared to accommodate the clergy. "I have," said he, "a very good stable, with all the improvements, for Episcopal horses; a comfortable sort of a stable for Presbyterian horses, while I keep the old barn for Baptist horses; the feed is according to the style of the stable." "Well," he replied, "everybody knows that I am a Baptist, but my horse is an Episcopalian."—Baptist Quarterly.

IF GOD cannot make me understand what he says, if he cannot give me the assurance that it is he himself who speaks, I am in nowise better off than if he had not spoken at all. That which is insufficient is not God's word. We must admit either of two things, namely, that God has not spoken at all, or if he has spoken, his word is perfect.

THE root of church troubles is pride.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Rajah of Mysore has applied for an accomplished lady teacher to educate the ladies of his palace, and his example will be widely followed. This is a hopeful sign.

A RECENT letter-writer says that in Berlin, out of a population of nearly a million, only about twelve thousand persons attend church on a Sunday. The story sounds incredible.

THE Univers, of Paris, announces that the Gallican liturgy is to be replaced by the Roman liturgy in the French Roman Catholic churches. This passes away the last vestige of the Gallican Church.

STATE AID TO PROTESTANTS.—The city corporation of Rosario, South America, although composed entirely of Roman Catholics, has voted a monthly allowance to Rev. Thomas B. Wood, Methodist missionary, to aid him in sustaining his school.

A METHODIST missionary in India offers $20,000 in gold to establish a college in that Conference, on condition that the native Methodist Episcopal Church of India, and the Missionary Society in this country, shall raise an equal amount. The latter society has already contributed $10,000 for this purpose.

THERE are but two or three Unitarian churches in Pennsylvania. One of these is in Northumberland, a town of about two thousand inhabitants, near the center of the State. It was founded in the last century, by the famous Priestly, who sought a refuge there from persecution in England on account of his religious opinions.

VENERABLE BUT NOT DECREPIT.—The First Presbyterian church of Elizabeth, New Jersey, was organized in 1664, and during these two hundred and seven years had the ministry of excellent pastors and has not missed a service. Within the last ten years three hundred and ninety-five persons have been added to its membership.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.—It is stated that the Congregationalists, Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists each have a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society in this country, which, together with the Woman's Union Society, have now in the field 98 missionaries, 200 native helpers, 2,904 scholars in the Sunday schools, and expended $110,714 during the last year.

SEVEN Spanish priests have issued a manifesto urging the formation of a Spanish national church. They claim that in co-operation with them are "two priests who have frankly given their adhesion, and eighty-seven others who from different quarters second our efforts, although they cannot always manifest themselves, owing to human apprehension deserving of a certain measure of respect." Not much is to be expected from such faint-hearted reformers.

FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF ITALY.—At the third General Assembly of the Free Christian Churches of Italy, held at Florence, in November, twenty-three churches, including the one newly formed in Rome, were represented by twenty-two members. The churches are organized on the congregational principle as to their internal arrangements. The Assembly has general charge of the work of evangelization. The next meeting is to be held in Rome.

MORE LIGHT NEEDED.—The "Portuguese Reformation Society," originated by English lovers of gospel liberty, who are familiar with the spiritual condition and need of Portugal, have issued an appeal for aid in introducing the principles and teachings of the Bible into that country, where it has long been a closed book. The legality of holding evangelical meetings has been tested and established. Native evangelists are to be secured and trained and assisted, places of Protestant worship to be supported, and all other means employed for the evangelization of Portugal and its colonial possessions, where the language is spoken.

THE JEWS IN EASTERN EUROPE.—A Jew named Heinrich has been appointed a teacher in one of the public schools in Vienna, in Austria. The majority of a military commission at Odessa, after long deliberation, decided in favor of admitting Jews to the rank of commissioned officers in the Russian army, but the minister of war does not agree with them. The Russian government has forbidden preaching in Polish in the synagogues of Russia-Poland, and intends to require the priests to offer their prayers in the Russian language instead of Hebrew. A society has been formed at Bucharest, with auxiliaries through the country, for the education and culture of the Jews of Roumania.

WESLEYAN JUVENILE SOCIETIES.—The juvenile collectors for the missions are, in some districts, doing increasing service to the funds. The "juvenile Christmas offerings" have, in many places, been superseded by the "Juvenile Home and Foreign Missionary Associations," the object of the latter being to collect small weekly contributions all the year round; while the "offerings" are solicited only at the end of the year. Besides these sources of income, there are places where missionary boxes are also kept by the various classes in the Sunday school. A very successful meeting was recently held at St. Ives, the collection being taken by the female teachers.

MADAGASCAR.—Christianity is advancing rapidly in Madagascar; it has already achieved one of its greatest triumphs here. The report of the mission for 1870 presents the following encouraging statistics: Number of missionary stations, 13; number of out-stations, 621; number of English missionaries, 19; native pastors, 25; native preachers, 1,986; church members, 20,951; native adherents, 231,759; schools, 359, with 7,919 boys, and 7,918 girls as scholars; local contributions to the mission, £3,611, 16s. 6d. Increase for the year of native preachers, 1,051; increase of church members, 10,405; in native adherents, 78,752; in schools, 217; and in scholars, 10,567.

ORGANIZED PARTIES IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—These are three: The English Church Union, the Church Defense and Reform Association, the Prayer Book Revision Society. The first is High Church, Sacramental, Ritualistic, Romish. The second is Evangelical, and aims first to ~~defend the~~ established church and then to reform it. The third is radically Protestant, and is aiming at the complete elimination of every Romish element from the Prayer Book. Each of these societies is powerful, being patronized and aided pecuniarily by noblemen, clergymen and laymen. Of the first and third there are many and powerful sympathizers in this nation. At the last general Episcopal convention the effort to obtain a change in the Prayer Book was defeated, and the ground was taken by many that no change should be made without the consent and co-operation of all Anglican churchmen in the world.

NEW GUINEA, a tropical island, fifteen hundred miles long and from three to five hundred wide, containing probably a million of inhabitants, has, until very lately, been shunned alike by traders and missionaries, because of its supposed inhospitable character and ferocity of the natives. Missionaries of an exploring party were recently surprised to find that the Papuans, instead of being a savage, degenerate race, are far superior to the majority of the Australasian aborigines in form and stature, often possessing the light copper-colored skin of Malays, and are disposed in every way to be friendly. They left their eight native teachers on the small islands near the coast to make their way among the people and acquire their language, with instructions for two of their number to cross over to the main island as soon as practicable, to engage in the evangelization of the Papuans themselves, and returned to Sydney full of hope for the new land, so unexpectedly favorable for missionary effort.

DR. DOLLINGER recently delivered his rectoral address to the students of the University of Munich. It was largely occupied with political discussions, but touched upon the religious issues of the day. We quote: "The eighteenth of July, 1870, brought to Germany a second war, through the Roman declaration of war against German science. The decrees of the Vatican were launched only against German science, and had been prepared for twenty years by a systematic falsification of the theological text books. Once before Rome carried on war against science. It was against the natural sciences, and she succumbed. Now she combats against historical science. As to the question which of the sciences received advancement or impulse by recent events, it is to be answered that these sciences are, above all, history, besides her philosophy, and notable theology. The task of theology has to be conceived in quite a new spirit. As it formerly had been polemical, it must now become eirenical, (peace-making,) and work with the object that, as Germany created the separation of the churches, she may now bring about the reunion, or, at the least, the reconciliation of confessions, for which the best minds of all cultivated nations (cultur-stolker) are longing.

FEW are sufficiently sensible of the importance of that economy in reading which selects, almost exclusively, the very first order of books. Why, except for some special reason, read an inferior book at the very time you might be reading one of the highest order.—John Foster.

GOD is in the midst of his people in all the fullness of his grace and mercy, in his perfect knowledge of his people's wants, and of the difficulties of their path, in his Almighty power and boundless resources, to meet these difficulties and supply these wants.

PARTAKER OF OTHER MEN'S SINS.

That Paul should admonish Timothy against partaking of other men's sins is in itself calculated to arrest our attention. The warning has reference to the discharge of official duty, and the danger of ordaining ungodly men to preach the gospel. By laying hands suddenly on such men the evangelist became a partaker in their sins, and in all the mischief which they might cause. John, in guarding against giving countenance to teachers of false doctrine, declares: "For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds." A serious responsibility rests upon the church in its authorization of men to preach, or to discharge any other official duties, and also in the treatment of those who profess and teach erroneous doctrines. The minister is not only false to his ordination vows, but he is a partaker in grievous sins if he be not "ready with all faithful diligence to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to the word of God." When Paul avers that "evil communications corrupt good manners," his immediate reference is to false doctrine concerning the resurrection of the body. It is the business of the church to teach the truth and to clear itself from any possible or apparent responsibility for strange and damaging errors.

Sins of practice lie at the door of those who are the administrators of discipline. They are partakers if vice and immorality are allowed to go without rebuke, and if the persistent offender be not cut off. Open sin and disorderly walking are popularly laid to the account of the church in which they are tolerated. Circumspect action and the most careful searching are required that the church authorities may clear themselves of all complicity. The case of Achan is instructive in this connection. Disaster and defeat attended the armies of Israel until this covetous sinner was revealed and punished. The people and their leaders were held accountable until the Babylonish garment and the wedge of gold were produced, and the offender was made an example of. There are troublers of Israel now, perhaps, and the whole congregation may be visited for their guilt. "There is an accursed thing in the midst of thee, O Israel; thou canst not stand before thine enemies until ye take away the accursed thing from among you." The pastor or officiary who wink at worldly revelings, and who permit drunkards, Sabbath-breakers, whisky-traffickers and dishonest traders to remain in the church, are most offensively partakers in other men's sins. It is a form of participation which brings God's displeasure upon the entire congregation, and grievously wounds the Redeemer in the house of his friends. It is not enough that these sins are denounced from the pulpit and rebuked by the press. This old leaven must be purged out by a firm and timely discipline before they can be clear whose duty it is to administer it.

Concerning "them that are without," it is easy to see how the pulpit may be a partaker in the vice and corruption of the times if it fails to lift its voice against them. "The bondage of the pulpit" is not so great as some imagine; but there is need of courage and plainness in exposing "the hidden things of dishonesty" and "the mystery of iniquity" in all their shameless and subtle ramifications. Whatever garb sin assumes, and in whatever way the sluices of iniquity are opened, Zion's watchmen fail at their own peril to expose and denounce the covert invader. Whether political, social or commercial, it is their duty to "take forth the precious from the vile," and thus to be as the mouth of God. The greatest defect of the ministry of the day is in its lack of the conviction and assertion of authority. Says the apostle to Titus: "These things speak and exhort and rebuke with all authority. Let no man despise thee." The older race of preachers in Methodism spoke as if the Lord had touched their mouth, and they were as "a defenced city and an iron pillar and brazen walls against the whole land." Moving within the limits of their consciously divine commission, their tones were scarcely less authoritative than those of Elijah and Jeremiah, and they were feared and reverenced as "sons of thunder" and a terror to evil-doers.

Christians are ever in danger of complicity with sin. If society makes its criminals, they may unconsciously share in the general guilt. So far as they are of the world, and enter into its godless practices, they are partakers of its crimes. By many indirect methods immorality may be countenanced, as, for example, in giving the social entrance and welcome to rich libertines, and to men who are known to have amassed riches by political subserviency or commercial fraud. One particular in David's Citizen of Zion is especially worthy of notice: "In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoreth them that fear the Lord." By lack of care and forethought we may contribute largely to the general desecration of the Sabbath, supposing the ox to be in the ditch, when, if he is there at all, it is owing to our own negligence. How much of the wreck and misery of intemperance may not be owing to the example and conduct of those who profess to be on the Lord's side? Moderate drinkers, wholesale dealers, commission merchants, grocers, and whoever touch or handle or make the "accursed thing," may not be drunkards, but they are partakers of this wide and dismal sin. In their political responsibility as citizens Christians may incur the guilt of partakers of other men's sins. Prostitution, drunkenness and lotteries, as subjects of legislation and license, the stock jobbing of rings, and the swindles and robbery of legislatures, reflect upon those who have put incapable and dishonest men into office.

Thus in a thousand directions the subject opens—partaker of other men's sins. Where, as the principals and instigators of sin, we shrink from the very thought, as partakers, there is no sense of condemnation and no consciousness of guilt. And this is the peculiar aspect of responsibility that Christians are called to look most squarely in the face. They are to search Jerusalem as with a lighted candle, and to examine their own conduct with a fearless and exhaustive candor. They are to avoid all appearance of evil, and to clear themselves of the remotest complicity with sin, lest at last they be condemned with the world.

RESPONSE NO. 2.

NEW ORLEANS, January 29, 1872.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad to report again favorably; and this time from an "elect lady" of this city. The sympathy which she expresses in the enterprise by word, she enforces by deed with the gift of $100. As St. Paul exhorts the Corinthians, (viii, 24,) so has she done: "Wherefore show ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love, and of our boasting on your behalf." I give a part of the good things in her note to me:

BISHOP J. C. KEENER—My Dear Friend: I read your very stirring appeal for Centenary College, as also the "Response" from Carondelet Street of $4,000. My heart and good wishes are with you in this noble work. Oh, what a blessing to Mississippi and Louisiana if your views and wishes can be realized! I respond to your last call for fifty persons to give $100 each, and inclose you the amount. * * *

I send this small sum ($100) the more cheerfully after having read your address at St. Louis on the "Macedonian Grace," which teaches us the duty of giving what we can. I pray and believe that you will get all that is necessary. It is all God's money, and the work is for the Lord. Affectionately yours,

CARONDELET CHURCH.

"WHAT ARE YOU DOING?"

"We are trying to make money." "Very well; what for?" "For various purposes. Some of us have families, and families cannot be raised without money. Housekeeping bills, clothing bills, doctor's bills, schooling bills and traveling bills require money, and a good deal of it. Some of us want to buy land, and some of us want to build a house, and it will take money. Some of us are going to be married soon; we shall have various extra expenses. Some of us are going to set up in a new business, and we shall have need of money to buy stocks and supplies. Some of us intend soon to remove to a new country, and shall have imperative need of considerable money." We must admit that these appear to be legitimate reasons for your diligence and determination to make money. But it seems to me that you act and answer as if you had nothing else to do—as if in making money for these worthy objects you felt you were doing your whole duty. And, indeed, if your being is confined to earth, and death concludes existence, I don't see that you can do much better. But if it is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die, then it strikes me that, diligent as you are, prudent and careful as you are, you are leaving out of sight a much greater interest than any of the matters mentioned above. I imagine that our busy doing must look most wonderful to the inhabitants of the spiritual world, if, indeed, they see what mortals are doing at all. When they look on us, with immortal souls within us, the grave near and just beneath us, and heaven above us, and yet see us busy, oh! so busy, hurrying along a thousand paths searching for gold, but never giving a serious hour's thought or an earnest day's work to the grand interest of the soul, it must amaze them. Had we not better stop, and as we blow a moment, consider whether we are doing our whole duty in this gold-getting business? Whether there is not a greater and more important business than any that has hitherto occupied heart and hand? Is it wise, for fear of a thorn, to rush on a sword? to spend our time and strength to provide for the least need, and leave the greatest unprovided for? I don't think that people so sensible and forecasting as you seem to be, can think your course in this business is wise. I don't like to say you are foolish; but don't it seem so? And if it does, what excuse will you make when your great necessity comes upon you? I think—indeed I am quite sure—it would be the wisest and safest thing you could do to work, while it is called to-day, for your soul and for heaven. W.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE, SUMMERFIELD, ALABAMA.—Attention is directed to the advertisement of this flourishing school. We are glad to learn that its prospects are better than at any time since the war. This is a regularly chartered institution, and there is a fine class of young ladies preparing for graduation. Bro. McVoy is an excellent administrator, an experienced teacher, and has the entire confidence of the church. The spring term commences February 15, and as there are accommodations for only a few more students, applications should be made at once.

THE CENTRAL UNIVERSITY.

A communication from Rev. J. Lane Borden, who was in attendance at the convention in Memphis, January 24, comes too late for insertion this week. We gather that the action of the convention was, substantially: 1. That immediate steps be taken to establish a University of high grade. 2. That $500,000 be raised before the University be put into operation as a whole. 3. That it should consist of literary and scientific, theological, normal, law and medical departments. 4. That when the sum of $200,000 be raised either for the first or second departments, they be put into immediate operation. 5. A board of trustees and financial agents were appointed to raise endowment and have charge of the financial interests. 6. The location to be determined by the College of Bishops, and not to be fixed until the requisite funds are secured for the commencement of the buildings. 7. To be called the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

EAST ALABAMA COLLEGE.

A brief note from Rev. B. B. Ross brings the good tidings that this institution has received an accession of fifteen students since the Christmas holidays. Bro. Ross is doing more than double work this year, having the pastorate of two churches on his hands, besides a laborious professorship in the college. The report of the treasurer of the Board of Missions of the Alabama Conference, forwarded by Bro. Ross, and published in our columns, should be carefully read and studied by our readers in Alabama.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE are requested to meet at the ADVOCATE office, 112 Camp street, on Wednesday, February 14, at ten o'clock A. M. A full attendance is desired.

OUR MONTANA LETTER, on the second page, will be read with interest. We shall be glad to hear from Bros Curtiss and the brethren in that region often.

THE annual report of the attorney general of the State of Mississippi is an able and interesting document. We are indebted to the author, J. S. Morris, for a copy.

TAKING NOTES.

W. V. T. writes a fresh and graphic letter to the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist about the Louisiana Conference. There were more lay members present than he supposed, but by no means a full representation. We quote as follows:

Enterprise for Christ is as rife here as anywhere. The information and statistics of this Conference which might be given in this letter would have an absorbing interest for every Methodist reader who desires to know how and what our beloved church is doing far and near. If other Conferences can present examples of aggressive pioneering, indefatigable toil and heroic self-sacrifice, this also. Just now Parvin is on the floor, reporting his work, and pleading for an adequate force to be sent beyond the wide-spreading prairies, to the Calcasieu region, the scene of his labors. He gives us an incident. He had heard of Calcasieu, and was pressing forward to find it. He knew only the direction, but not the road, for road there was none, nor even a path, through the prairies. A gentleman offered to send his servant as guide to him, as far as he knew. The man traveled with him a day's journey, and toward evening, coming to a hut, startled Parvin with the announcement: "Massa, dis is as fur as I know." The next minute Parvin was alone with night and God. Go back he would not; press on he did, and, with bee-line instinct, took a straight line for Calcasieu, which he reached in time for safety and lodging, and where the people heard with gladness the word of the Lord. Similar examples of resolute, evangelizing labor abound in this Conference.

Louisiana is a State of bayous, swamps, prairies, fertile cotton lands, rivers now high, now low, Catholics, Protestants, vast unpeopled tracts, and, in all, is a vineyard inviting laborers. This Conference, for its numbers and ability, fully sustains its responsibility to the population of the State, and to the church of which it is an integral part. Be it known that the only purely literary institutions of a high order, chartered and incorporated as colleges, which the State can boast, are Centenary College, at Jackson, and Homer College, at Homer, and both owned and conducted by the Louisiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. This Conference, although of not more than one-third the size, contributes as much to missions as the Virginia Conference. Their full allowance will be paid the claimants on the superannuated fund. The business of the Conference is being rapidly dispatched, and we shall probably adjourn on Monday next. There is preaching every night in Nolly chapel, so named after one of the heroes of early Methodism in these parts, who lost his life in the high waters on his way to his appointment after Conference. Last night Manly, a blind man, a traveling preacher, delivered a well-arranged sermon, which would have been eloquent and effective for a man that could see, but which his gift of blindness invested with peculiar power.

Among the ablest preachers of the body are Parker, imperturbable, original, weighty; Cravens, quick-witted, easy, impassioned; Goodwyn, sprightly, theological, eloquent; Trippett, florid, fervent, faithful; White, rhetorical, zealous, copious; Mathews, popular, pathetic, powerful; Wilkinson, elegant, logical, spiritual; Ahrens, the German editor, the good preacher in German or English, the excellent and amiable character.

Brigham, a lawyer, a lay delegate, has just finished his second eloquent speech on the floor. Only two or three laymen are present, but, for their efficiency and important usefulness among us, I shall set them down as equal to all the rest put together that have stayed away.

Rev. J. E. Cobb, president of Homer College, and one of our closest thinkers, is now speaking.

AN EXAMPLE.

"W.," writing in the Galveston Christian Advocate, tells the following good and instructive story:

In middle Tennessee, long so famous for the "Feast of Tabernacles," modernly called "camp meetings," there was held, once upon a time, a camp-meeting, presided over by the Rev. Dr. G——. One day, toward the close of the meeting, which had been most successful, the weather being a little cool, the doctor went behind the tent to the fire to warm. He found there an elderly colored woman busy with the cooking, preparing the ample meal for many guests. The doctor noticed that she was reticent and grum. He felt kindly toward the faithful cook, and said to her in his pleasant way:

"Aunty, how are you enjoying the meeting?"

Said she, scarcely looking at him, "I ain't 'joying it at all!"

"Why, what's the matter?" said the doctor.

"I don't have no pleasure. I thought I was gwine to have a good time."

"Why don't you have a good time?"

"'Cause I don't git to meetin' hardly any at all. I hears de singin' out dare, but I'se no time to go. I am all time here wid pots and ovens and things cooking. I wish I hadn't come, no how—I ain't a gittin any good, and I'se doing no good."

The doctor's Christian sympathies were quite touched with this simple recital of the old servant's disappointment. So he felt he must comfort her if he could. He said:

"Why, aunty, you don't look at it right. You are doing a great deal of good—much more than you think."

Hearing this, she straightened up, and looked with interest to hear what the doctor could say.

"Why," said the doctor, "we could not get on without you. We preachers and cooks are the most important and useful people here. I would like to know what all these people here would do without us? Why, if it was not for us the meeting would not last a day. So you see, aunty, you are doing a great work here; and be sure the Lord will remember and reward you."

As the doctor proceeded the old woman's grim countenance relaxed into a smile, her eye glistened with a tear of grateful joy, and she burst into an exclamation:

"Dat's so! I never thought of it before. Bless de Lord! I b'lieve I am doing some good."

All her grief was gone—'twas morning with her soul.

"If done I obey thy laws,
E'en servile labors shine,
Hallowed is toil; if this the cause,
The meanest work divine."

A DEPUTATION of French Protestants had an interview with President Thiers, who promised them that religious equality should be maintained. It would, indeed, be a great pity if, with all the liberty the French demand, they were unwilling to accord it to one another. But so overpowering is the influence of Romanism in France that religious equality before the law stands a poor chance.—Observer.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

WATER AND LAND. By Jacob Abbott. New York: Harper & Bros., publishers, 1872.

This is another volume in that charming series of "Science for the Young." It contains 330 pages, and is beautifully illustrated. A vast amount of scientific information is furnished by the author in a form and style to interest the young. It is a work which readers of mature years will find instructive, and at the same time exceedingly attractive and entertaining. Mr. Abbott has availed himself of the results of the most recent writers and savants, and of the discoveries of modern science and exploration. For sale by George Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

BORDER REMINISCENCES. By Randolph B. Marcy, United States Army. New York: Harper & Bros., publishers, 1872.

General Marcy is the author of "Army Life on the Border" and "The Prairie Traveler." He tells a story very well, and the present volume abounds in humorous anecdotes, adventures and scenes of border life. He assures us that what he relates is from real life, and that it can be relied on as truthfully exhibiting actual occurrences which, for the most part, happened under his personal observation. The comical and ludicrous are uppermost throughout, and the book will be read for these qualities alone. From Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

ROUND THE WORLD: Including a Residence in Victoria, and a Journey by Rail Across North America. By a Boy. Edited by Samuel Smiles. New York: Harper & Bros., 1872.

This work may have been written by a youth of sixteen, but he is a rare observer and a good traveler, and the book has been most naturely and judiciously edited. The part devoted to Australia is to us the most entertaining; but the volume is readable throughout, and altogether worth having. The woodcuts and maps add considerably to the value of the work. From Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

PHYSIOLOGY OF THE SOUL AND INSTINCT, AS DISTINGUISHED FROM MATERIALISM. With supplementary demonstrations of the divine communication of the narratives of the creation and the flood. By Martyn Paine, A. M., M. D., LL. D. New York: Harper & Bros., publishers, 1872.

An octavo of 707 pages. Dr. Paine has reached the highest eminence in medicine, and has been recognized and honored by nearly all of the learned societies of the world. This work embraces the discussion of almost every science in its bearings upon divine revelation, and it aims especially to overthrow materialism and to establish the existence of the soul as an immaterial and immortal essence. It is the more valuable as coming from one perfectly familiar with physiology and anatomy, and whose long and studious life has been chiefly devoted to observing the phenomena of man's physical organism. Every form of modern skepticism, as built upon the discoveries of science, is closely examined, and its grounds rigorously but candidly sifted. Dr. Paine stands up stoutly for the old-fashioned and literal interpretation of Genesis, and rebukes the disposition of our modern theologians to compromise in the slightest particular with the claims of science. His aim is to show that the plain scriptural view of man, of creation and the deluge is perfectly consistent with all that science has as yet clearly discovered. We may not agree with him in all of his conclusions; but the work is wholesomely conservative, loyal alike to science and revelation, and abundantly learned. Its style is plain, and adapted to the general reader. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

WE ARE INDEBTED to George W. Childs, Philadelphia, for a copy of the Public Ledger Almanac.

REV. GEORGE O. HILTON, of the Western Conference, died December 23, from injuries received by the falling of a tree. The circumstances are given us follows by the St. Louis Christian Advocate, in a letter from the presiding elder:

Dear Brother: It becomes my painful duty to inform you of the death of one of the Montana missionaries, Rev. George O. Hilton, who was appointed to the Bitter Root mission. Mr. Wright says to me, in a letter received this morning: "It becomes my painful duty to communicate to you the death of your brother and fellow-laborer, the Rev. Mr. Hilton, who died on Saturday morning, at five o'clock, December 23. He, in company with Mr. J. Hull and several other neighbors, went into the timber for the purpose of procuring some firewood. While there a tree, which Mr. Hilton had cut and lodged the day before, slipped from its fastenings and fell to the ground with great force, striking Mr. Hilton on the back part of the head, crushing the skull and injuring him severely in other parts of the body. He was immediately carried to the residence of Mr. J. Hull, where everything that sympathizing friends could do was done to relieve and save him, but without success, and he gradually grew worse from the time of the accident—one o'clock P. M.—until five in the morning, when he ended all earthly suffering. During his short sojourn among us he had won his way into the hearts of all the people, and the universal sentiment here is, that he was a good man, and that he has gone to reap the rewards of a life well spent in his Master's vineyard."

REV. R. ALEXANDER, D. D.—Bro. Ayres, who has spent some days with Bro. Alexander at his home, has just called in. He reports Bro Alexander somewhat improved, but very feeble. He has been for many days very near the gates of the other world. His sufferings have been intense; but in the midst of all, his soul is very happy in the Lord. The prayers of the church in Texas and abroad will go up to the throne of grace in behalf of this faithful servant, who has spent the strength of a long and vigorous life in spreading the Redeemer's kingdom through these ends of the earth.—Galveston Christian Advocate.

WORDS FOR ALL.—Go, talk to Jesus! I cannot tell you where the opportunity will be, but I know that if in the morning you sow your seed, and in the evening withhold not your hand, God will prosper you. I know that as the rain and snow come down from heaven and return not thither, so God has promised that his word shall accomplish that whereunto it is sent. We want workers for Christ. Go on working; do not be anxious about large congregations. Contend not for honors. Let there be no jealousies. Work, work; souls are perishing. Go glean, if need be, in the corners of the field. You may bring the ripest wheat and the best grain to the Master.

SAID POPE in a letter to Swift: "I am rich enough and can afford to give away £100 a year. I would not crawl upon the earth without doing a little for truth. I will enjoy the pleasure of what I give by giving it alive, and seeing another enjoy it. When I die I should be ashamed to leave enough for a monument, if there was a wanting friend above ground."

Obituaries.

MOSES T. G. BENBOW was born in Pike county, Alabama, October 3, 1818, and died in Crenshaw (formerly Pike) county, Alabama, October 5, 1871.

Mr. Benbow was a young man of good intellectual endowments, and possessed many noble and endearing traits of character. Although modest and unassuming in his manners, yet he was courteous and affable in his intercourse with his fellow-men, and was very justly held in the highest esteem by them.

He had been reared by pious parents, and had maintained an unexceptional moral character. His attendance on the preaching of the word was regular, and his deportment in the house of God fully in keeping with the sanctity of the sacred place.

As a son and brother he was anxious to make him almost an idol in the family.

He was taken ill in September last, and it was soon apparent that his sickness was unto death. His pastor, Rev. W. W. Graham, visited him, and talked and prayed with him. He assured Bro. Graham that he loved God, and that if he was raised up he would cheerfully devote himself to his holy service. During his sickness, he was delighted to have Gods people talk, sing and pray with him. As his dissolution drew nigh his prospect of heaven seemed to grow brighter. With entire self-possession and perfect composure he called the family to his bed-side and bid them farewell, and requested them to meet him in heaven. When the last moment came he exclaimed: "It is enough. Let me go home and be at rest." J. W. SHORES.

DEPARTED this life, at Pine Hill, Wilcox county, Alabama, on the fourteenth of October, JOHN W. TURBEVILLE, aged twenty-seven years, seven months and nineteen days. The disease which terminated his earthly existence was of short duration, but very distressing. The writer, being intimately acquainted with the deceased, can testify in these humble and imperfect lines to his many virtues. He was a member of the Methodist Church, a faithful and zealous Christian, punctual to his duties, and unobtrusive in his piety.

Notwithstanding we are familiar with such visitations daily, and almost hourly, there is still an aspect in which death strikes us more deeply, and impresses us with increased solemnity of feeling. The old die, and a gleam of slight consolation may light up the severity of grief in the thought that their race was nearly run, and that their lives had not been spent without extended usefulness; but the tender child or young lover, fresh from the hand of their God who gave them to earthly parents, may be snatched from yearning affection by the rude force of disease, and sorrow is not wholly unmingled by the consciousness that the young bud had been called to bloom in Heaven ere it had been blighted by sin or faded by earthly contact. But it is when the heart of the wife and mother is assaulted by the appearance of death, in the bloom of manhood and the prime of life, that grief comes unaccompanied by any palliation, save that which may be gathered from communion with that holy Being who rules alike heaven and earth.

Such is the case in this instance. Scarcely had the subject of these lines reached the years of maturity, scarcely had the wife's bosom been opened to the joys of a loving husband, brightened by the warmest love of him to whom she had early plighted her young troth, and surrendered her deepest affections, ere death called to demand the awful tribute, and conjugal love left to find comfort only in the promises of a Savior.

Passed as he has from the threshold of life, he leaves his friends a happy consolation in the remembrance of his moral excellence. The promises of the gospel had been received with a truthful, trusting spirit, and hence his undisturbed composure in the last sad scene of earth. Calmly resigned to the will of God, quietly and peacefully as sinks the setting sun, he sank into eternal slumber, while on the wings of a pure and perfect faith his immortal spirit winds its way into the celestial heaven above, where "angels never die."

Fond companion, though the death of your loved one has left an aching void in your heart, yet still look upward to that haven of eternal bliss; and cling joyfully to the hope of meeting him forever, when the dim light of our short and struggling life shall burst into everlasting splendors of unutterable glory. A FRIEND.

Agt's & Publisher's Department

ALABAMA LIME.—We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. S. Jamison, No. 69 Carondelet street, who is engaged in the sale of Alabama lime.

LADIES' HAIR STORE.—Attention is called to the card of Mr. Chandler, who proposes to sell everything in his line at lower prices than any similar house in the city. See his card.

NEW ORLEANS MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY. We regard the above company as one of the best in the city. In our dealings with them for several years we have found no cause of complaint or dissatisfaction.

T. W. HOUSE, BANKER, HOUSTON, TEXAS.—Mr. House, as a banker and business man, stands very high in financial circles, and we take pleasure in calling attention to his advertisement in our columns.

PLANTS.—Mr. Magne, No. 46 Camp street, has just received a large selection of choice plants, fruit trees, etc., which he is offering at very reasonable prices. They are direct from Europe, having come per steamship last week.

T. H. MCMAHAN & CO., BANKERS, GALVESTON, TEXAS. The above banking house has been known to us for years as one of the most prompt and reliable houses in any country. We feel that we risk nothing in saying that they are in every way worthy of confidence. See advertisement in our columns.

NOBLE & WOODS.—We call attention to the advertisement of the above firm, and take pleasure in recommending them as gentlemen who may be confidently relied upon not only to give prompt attention to business, but to fill orders sent to them as fairly and honestly as if the purchaser were present.

GALVESTON, HOUSTON AND HENDERSON RAILROAD.—The card of this road appears on the fifth page. In repeated trips to the interior of Texas, via Galveston, we have found the above road more reliable than the boats, both for comfort and certainty of making connection with other roads. The latter require all night, and take the risk of low tides and sandbars.

J. W. PLATT & CO.—Housekeepers will find an unlimited assortment of family groceries at the above house, 102 Camp street. Those who desire to obtain choice teas, good coffee or pure wines will not find, as we believe, a place where they can obtain articles more satisfactory. We refer our readers to their advertisement in our columns.

EXCHANGE HOTEL, GALVESTON, TEXAS. We were agreeably surprised, on our first visit to the city of Galveston, to find the Exchange Hotel one of the very best, and could scarcely realize, when we sat down to the table, that we were in the far West. We have never, in any of our visits thither, gone to any other; and when our friends going there ask, "Which hotel shall I go to?" we have uniformly replied, "Go to the Exchange." The courtesy and assiduous attention of the proprietor, Mr. Summers, in the comfort of his guests have made him a multitude of friends. See advertisement in our columns.

MURFEE'S CELEBRATED SUBSOIL PLOW.—W. E. Kelly, 11 Union street, is the general agent for the above-named plow. This plow has been in use for several years, and the large and increasing number annually sold is the strongest evidence of its practical advantages to the farmer. If farmers have never examined it, they should seek an opportunity to do so. We refer our readers to the advertisement of Mr. Kelly in our columns.

HENRY OTIS.—It will be seen by the advertisement of the above gentleman that he has facilities for delivering tax sheets at very low rates throughout the Southwestern States. Mr. Otis is also agent for Harrison's Safety Boiler, which is believed to be an improvement on the boilers in general use, from the fact that it cannot be exploded, and consumes less fuel. We refer you to his advertisement.

SOUTHERN ORNAMENTAL IRON WORKS.—Mr. Cronan, the proprietor of the large establishment under the above name, which is the oldest of the kind in the city, is prepared to furnish fronts for fire-places, as well as grates, fenders, etc., at reasonable rates. Call and see him before sending your orders North, and see if you do not find it economy to purchase here. See his advertisement on the fifth page.

UPPER CITY HOTEL.—This hotel is located in the upper portion of the city, within a few minutes' ride of Canal street, in Dr. Wurde's new building, which is fitted up in a style regardless of expense. Much taste is displayed in the upholstery, and many modern improvements for the comfort of guests will be found in this hotel. Its manager is Mr. Murray, whose name is familiar to most of our old citizens, he having been for many years connected with the St. Charles Hotel. This house has only been open a week, and, judging from the number of boarders already there, it is very evident Mr. Murray will achieve a decided success in his new undertaking.

ST. LOUIS HOTEL.—It will be highly gratifying to the public to learn that the St. Louis Hotel, so long a favorite with visitors to the Crescent City, has been thoroughly repaired and greatly improved in its exterior and interior arrangements, under the supervision of the St. Louis Hotel Association, of which our well-known fellow-citizen, E. F. Hilton, Esq., is president. It will be opened about the first instant, under the management of Mr. Cranston, who was at one time connected with the New York Hotel. We direct special attention to their advertisement in our columns, and would only add that we have several times visited this hotel, recently for the pleasure of inspecting the admirable arrangements of the noble structure, an object of our city's pride in other days, as we believe it will be again. The many friends made by Mr. Cranston while connected with the New York Hotel will be glad to learn that he takes charge of the St. Louis.

WE COPY from the Clarion (Jackson, Mississippi) of the sixteenth instant the following handsome tribute to one of the oldest educational institutions in the South. All our citizens will be glad to see justice done to home institutions.

Dalbear Union Oriental College.—This old and widely-known institution is at present enjoying a very large patronage, and its distinguished president very kindly desires to have it known that ornamental penmanship and book-keeping of the professors and students of the college distanced all competition at the fairs of 1871. The display at the Mississippi State Fair was not only extensive, but highly meritorious. Prof. Dolbear advertised in the Clarion when it was first established at Pandling, in 1847, and he adheres faithfully to the old and good habit then formed. We call special attention to his notice in to-day's paper. We have often visited Dalbear College, and feel free to commend it to all young men who are ambitious to achieve a thorough commercial education. A graduating diploma from Prof. Dolbear is a most valuable document toward securing a good position in business.

FEMALE BOARDING SCHOOL.

THE SPRING SESSION of this school, located in the pleasant town of Athens, East Tennessee, on the East Tennessee and Georgia railroad, midway between Knoxville and Chattanooga, will begin on MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 1872.

The school is in charge of Mrs. M. W. Sullins, assisted by competent teachers. The boarding department is in the care of Rev. T. and Mrs. Sullins.

Athens is an eligible location for schools, noted for health, and was the resort of visitors from the South, last summer, in quest of health and pleasure.

Young ladies educated in this fine climate will live longer and enjoy more of life than if educated in the South; and the difference in expense would more than pay the passage to and from this place, so that parents in the South can educate their children here cheaper than at home.

The school-rooms are in the same building as the family residence, and pupils can attend school at all times without exposure. Thoroughness in studies promoting health-developing mental and moral faculties is the constant aim of the principal.

Terms.

Tuition in Literary Department, per term of five months, from $10 to $18, according to studies, payable half in advance, the other half at the middle of the session.

THE CHILDREN'S PUZZLE.

Around a table, littered with books and toys,
There sat a merry group of noisy boys,
Half battling to display, with fingers swift,
A puzzle in a box—their father's gift.
With eager haste the lid is pulled aside;
Delighted with the game as yet untried,
The box is searched, and busy hands begin
To seize upon the pieces packed within;
Each youngster confident of being able
To range the fragmen s scattered on the table
Into a pattern perfectly combined,
Such as the wise artificer designed.

But soon impatience deems the process slow;
Tempers are chafed, and difficulties grow;
"I'm sure," shouts Tom, "that piece should fit in there."
"It won't, then," Dick retorts with snappish air.
"This bit's too short," pouts Jack, "and that's too long."
"I'm certain," grumbles Bill, "the puzzle's wrong!"
Then Jack seeks help from Tom—Dick strives with Bill—
Bedtime is near—the puzzle puzzling still.
At length, when concord and content have fled,
"Let's ask our father, boys," cries little Ned.
The others yield to the suggestion bright—
Papa, consulted, puts the puzzle right.

Life's puzzle is as difficult to man:
And he who cannot solve, arraigns its plan.
Each tries his own solution, vaunts his wit;
While others find the theory won't fit,
And substitute their own—all failures still—
But none believe the cause their lack of skill?
The puzzle must be wrong—they talk, they write,
Consult some fellow-child, grow cross and fight,
Pronounce the Maker but a poor designer,
And think they could have made a game much finer!
The "Little Neds," as wiser Christians do,
To solve life's puzzle—ask their Father too!

The Rock.

THE MOON CRADLE.

Mamma, how pretty the moon looks to-night;
She was never so cunning before,
Her two little horns are so sharp and so bright—
I hope they'll not grow any more.

If I was up there with you and my friends,
I'd rock in't so nicely, you'd see;
I'd sit in the middle and hold to both ends,
O, what a bright cradle 'twould be!

I'd call to the stars to keep out of my way,
Else I'd rock over their toes,
And there I would rock till the dawn of the day,
And see where the pretty moon goes.

TOM CARTER'S GARDEN.

I don't think anybody in the village of Frogfield liked Grundy Archer. He was a surly fellow at the best, and sometimes he was downright quarrelsome. He had his good points too. He was sober and industrious. He prided himself particularly upon his own cottage garden, in which, every evening, after he had left working for his master, he worked for himself. Grundy's next neighbor was a good-tempered man, as industrious as himself; and, as their gardens joined, there was a kind of rivalry kept up as to which—Tom Carter or Grundy Archer—should have the earliest peas, the biggest cabbages, and so forth. On the part of Carter, this rivalry was carried on with pleasant good humor; but when he happened to get the upper hand, Grundy was as savage as a bear.

One morning in March Grundy looked out of his chamber window as he was dressing and saw a sight which might have made a better-tempered man than he cross. A number of fowls had got into his garden, and were as busy as bees scratching up a row of peas which were just appearing above ground, and devouring them by wholesale. He did not wait to put on the rest of his clothes, but, rushing down stairs in a fury, he made a sudden onslaught into the thick of the offenders, and soon dispersed them; but not till two fine hens were gasping their last on the unlucky row of peas.

The fowls were Tom Carter's. They had made a breach in their place of confinement, and, trying to make the best of their short liberty, had unfortunately strayed into Grundy's garden, after having done mischief enough in their owner's.

Archer was rather ashamed of himself when the deed was done, and managed matters so that the dead fowls were found in a field at the back of the two gardens, while he repaired the damages they had done in his own. And when they were found he pretended to know nothing about the matter. But Tom had his suspicions, nevertheless; and from that time the two neighbors and their wives were as cool as cucumbers toward each other.

A few months later Archer's garden began to wear a neglected look. After the autumn crops were gathered in it became more and more of a wilderness. Weeds overran the empty beds, and there was no attempt to eradicate them—no turning up the ground to prepare it for fresh crops. Winter came; and the gooseberry bushes and currant bushes and apple trees were left unent. Spring was coming on; and the garden looked more desolate than ever.

Grundy Archer had fallen from the top of a wagon, while carrying corn at harvest time, had broken his leg and two or three of his ribs, and for months was lying in bed helpless.

He was pretty well cared for by his master and the parish together; but his garden, the pride of his life, nobody cared for that.

"I can't bear to see it so," said Tom Carter one day to his wife. "'Tisn't doing as we would be done by. I'll take a spell at poor Grundy's garden myself."

"He doesn't deserve it, though," said Mrs. Carter, who was thinking of her two dead hens.

"The Bible tells us to bear one another's burdens," said Tom.

"Grundy wouldn't have put out his little finger to bear one of ours," said Mrs. Carter.

"'If ye do good only to them that do good to you, what thank have ye?'" answered Tom, quoting a text we should all do well to study more, and to follow as well as study.

"I believe you are right, Tom," returned Mrs. Carter; "but there's our own garden wants as much work as you can give it."

"'Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others,'" rejoined Tom, who seems to have studied the Bible to some purpose.

Grundy Archer was sitting in an easy chair one evening in no pleasant frame of mind, for he was getting better; and they say that when a sick man gets extra cross it is one sign that he is mending.

The door opened and in came his neighbor Carter.

"How d'ye do, mate?" said Tom kindly.

"None the better for seeing you," Grundy would have said, perhaps, if he had spoken his mind, but he growled out a half civil reply instead.

"About your garden, neighbor," Tom began to say.

"What about it?" asked Grundy quickly.

"'Tis in a terrible mess."

"Could have told you that," said the sick man.

"I want to put it to rights a bit, if you'd let me."

"You!"

"Yes, I; why not? There's them gooseberry trees, now; they want cutting."

"I know they do," growled Archer.

"'Tis time to think of putting in seeds."

"Of course it is," replied Archer testily.

"And a good many other things want seeing to," continued Tom Carter.

"You needn't tell me that," said the man with the fractured leg and ribs.

"May I do it?" asked Tom.

"What for?" said Grundy: "I can't pay you for it, if you do."

"I don't want you to; may I do it?"

"If you like," replied Archer.

A month later, and Grundy was in his garden, hobbling on with a stick, looking with a curious expression of countenance at Tom, who was raking over the onion-bed. Everything was neat and tidy as ever. Trees and bushes had been trimmed, weeds burned, ground dug in, seeds sown and planted. Grundy looked over the fence into his neighbor's garden.

"Why, Tom, you are backward with your own work!"

"Rather, neighbor, but I'll soon fetch up. There, I think that puts the finishing stroke," he added, shouldering the rake.

"But, Tom—stop a bit, Tom—I have got something to say. I say, Tom, this is very kind of you. I could not have thought it. And, Tom—I say, Tom, I can't bear it;" and Grundy Archer drew his brown, bony hand across his face, and took it away moist. "I can't bear it, Tom; to think how crooked I've always been with you. Them hens of yours, Tom."

"Never mind about them, Grundy."

"'Twas I that killed 'em, Tom."

"Never mind," answered Tom Carter, "they shouldn't have got into your garden."

"Did you know I did it, then?"

"Well, I gave a pretty close guess; but what matters?"

"You've beat me," sobbed Grundy Archer; "you've beat me out and out. God bless you for it, Tom!" and he held out his hand to Carter, who shook it with a hearty grip of good will.

Tom Carter had found out one way of doing good.

"Be not overcome of evil."

The Farm and Garden.

WHITE MUSTARD.

So far, I am delighted with my white-mustard experiment. We had an oat stubble on which the clover and grass seed had failed. The field is back of the deacon's farm, and for want of a good outlet through his land I am unable to drain it properly. Until this is done, it is throwing time and money away to try to raise grain crops. How to get it into grass was the problem I had to solve this spring. My English friend, Mr. Medcalf, suggested mustard. It was a new idea to me. We plowed the field three times—in other words, summer-fallowed it. Then, in July, we sowed it to white mustard, and at the same time seeded it down with clover and timothy. The clover is a good catch, and if it stands the winter the experiment will be a decided success. The mustard proves a far more valuable crop than I expected. It has given me more food than I know what to do with. I am feeding it out ad libitum to all my stock except horses. The Merino sheep at first did not seem to like it, but after a few days ate it with avidity. The Cotswolds seemed to know what it was, and fully appreciated their privileges. The pigs literally devour it. Even the little, growing ones, that I feed as high as I know how, eat considerable of it, and it seems to enable them to digest their other food more perfectly. I have not seen any voided grain since we commenced to feed the green mustard. My breeding sows get little else than mustard, and thrive well on it. Of course it would not fatten a pig alone, but it is unquestionably a useful auxiliary food. I have over ninety pigs, little and big, and find the mustard a great saving to the corn crib. We have been feeding the mustard (October 21) to the cows for a few days, and so far it has not affected the taste of the milk. The cows eat it greedily, and if it does not affect the milk I shall certainly try mustard as a soiling crop next year.

You can sow the mustard at any time in the spring after all danger of frost is past, and in two months it will be ready to feed off or mow for soiling. The land may then be sown again, and a second crop obtained in September, October, and as late into November as severe frosts keep off.

It seems to me that in sections where wheat is not grown, and where land has to be seeded with oats, mustard might be grown with great advantage. Two crops might be grown in a season. The first crop might be plowed under for manure, or fed off on the land, as thought best. The second crop should be seeded down with timothy and clover. I am assured that the few English farmers who have tried it find it one of the very best crops to seed with, say in July—getting a large crop of hay the next season. A little artificial manure, such as superphosphate, or even plaster, has a wonderful effect on mustard, and in such a case it is just the crop for poor land that is in good mechanical condition.—Walks and Talks on the Farm, in American Agriculturist.

TURNIPS.

Keeping Through the Winter.—Turnips, like potatoes, can be kept all the winter. Before the ground freezes pull them up, cut off the tops, put them in a pile in a cellar or in a house; put pine or other straw round them, and they will keep all winter. Rutabagas will remain sweet and good if left in the ground. Take a turn-plow and throw dirt to them, which protects them from the cold and rabbits. I prefer rutabagas and yellow Aberdeen for feeding purposes. The yellow Aberdeen is a sweet turnip, can be sown a month later than the rutabagas, and grows to a good size. The flat Dutch and purple top mature earlier than any of the other varieties.

Cost.—Turnips can be raised cheaper than almost any of our field crops. One, or two plowings at most, will make the crop.

Yield Per Acre, Value for Food, Etc. From five hundred to one thousand bushels have been made upon an acre. Six hundred bushels were made in Bibb county last year on one acre. Dr. George B. Loring, of Salem, Massachusetts, raised on one acre seven hundred and fifty bushels, at a cost of seven and five-sixths cents per bushel, equal to fourteen thousand pounds of hay.

Turnips are good for both men and animals. I need not mention their value as food for men, but give some account of their value as food for stock.

So highly are they esteemed in England as food for stock that an eminent English writer said that England could better stand a failure of her bank than a two years' failure of her turnip crop. While turnips are not to be compared to grain or hay as a feeding crop, yet they form a valuable aid in feeding cattle.

I heard a Georgia farmer say he saved twenty per cent. of his corn in fattening a lot of hogs by using turnips. Another Georgia farmer tried turnips alone to fatten his hogs and failed; perhaps if he had used corn with his turnips he would have been successful.

For producing milk nothing we raise during winter or fall will compare with turnips. If the cows are salted regularly no disagreeable taste will be found in the milk; a small piece of saltpeter put in the milk is a sure preventive. For milch cows pull the turnips, knock the dirt from them, and mash in a trough with a pestle. For hogs cook with meal. If, as we see, five hundred to one thousand bushels can be grown upon an acre, and three hundred pounds of turnips are equal to one hundred pounds of hay, this would be equal to five or seven tons of hay per acre; and at a cost of eight to ten cents per bushel for the turnips, would make hay much cheaper than the Northern article at $1.00 to $2 per hundred weight.—Southern Farm and Home.

M. L. Dunlap's idea of planting forest trees is that they must be closely planted, in order to make proper upward growth, and will need to be thinned out, year after year, according to the rapidity of growth. About three thousand trees to the acre will answer a good purpose. This will make them about four feet each way. Some planters prefer three feet, and begin to thin out in five or six years. The wood that is obtained in thinning will more than pay for the extra plants and labor.

Weeds are undoubtedly the most expensive crop a farmer can grow. Some farmers are aware of this, and will not allow them to grow in their fields. They are subject, however, every year to the cost of destroying those which have been sown by other persons upon their lands. Every farmer who allows burdocks and thistles to grow and perfect their seeds on the roadsides against his fields virtually sows their seeds upon his neighbor's land.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

Cracker Mince Pies.—Roll three crackers and soak them in one-half cup sugar filled with water, add three spoonfuls of boiled cider, (or two of good vinegar,) one-half cup of molasses, salt, pepper, spice and raisins as for mince pie.

Mother will be interested to know that turpentine is a sovereign remedy for croup. Saturate a piece of flannel with it, and place the flannel on the throat and chest. In very severe cases, from three to five drops may be taken inwardly.

Fricasseed Chicken.—Cut up the chicken and boil with a slice or two of pork, in sufficient water to cover, till quite tender. Fry some pork, and, when cooked a little, drain the chicken and fry with the pork till quite brown. Then take out, and pour the broth into the frying pan with the pork fat, and make a gravy, thickened with brown flour; season well with butter, and put the chicken into the gravy. Be sure and have the fat quite hot when the chicken is put in, so it will brown readily.

Turtle Bean Soup.—Take a quart of black beans; wash them and put in a pot with the usual quantity of water, and boil until thoroughly soft. Dip them out and rub the pulp through the colander, and return it to the liquid in the pot. Add some thyme in a clean cloth, put it into the pot and let it boil a few minutes for flavor. Slice some hard-boiled eggs and drop them into the soup. Add a little butter and pepper and salt. Some people like a little wine and a slice or two of ham at the bottom of the tureen.

Mince Pies.—Take four pounds of boiled meat, (a boiled beef's heart is very good,) one-half pound of suet, four ounces of cinnamon, two ounces of mace or nutmeg, one ounce of cloves, four pounds of raisins, one pint of molasses, one quart of cider, and sugar enough to make quite sweet. To all the above add an equal weight (nearly twelve pounds) of tart apples chopped fine. It will keep five or six months. As used for pies from time to time, add, just before baking, a tablespoonful of vinegar or old cider to each pie.

Scientific.

AMONG the plants of Guinea, one of the most curious is a cannon-ball tree. It grows to the height of sixty feet, and its flowers are remarkable for beauty and fragrance, being of a beautiful crimson, appearing in large bunches, and exhuling a rich perfume. The fruit resembles large cannon-balls; hence the name. However, some say it has been so called because of the noise which the ball makes in bursting.

WATER.—It is very commonly understood that water expands in freezing. The law that heat expands and that cold contracts meets an exception in the case of ice. M. Boussingault has been trying experiments to determine whether freezing will be prevented under conditions that forbid expansion. He constructed a stout cylinder, which was filled with water, and upon which a cap was screwed down. This was then reduced to a temperature of eleven degrees below zero without freezing, as evidenced by an iron ball within the apparatus, which still moved freely, as it could not have done if there had been ice. Immediately on removing the cap the water turned into ice.

PERHAPS the fullest account of the formation of the Mammoth Cave and its inhabitants is to be found in the December number of the American Naturalist, the article to be concluded in the January number, the second part having been delayed by the preparation of the necessary plates. The various questions bearing on the mode of evolution of the blind fish and insects and crawfish so familiar to visitors to the cave are discussed, and all the known species figured. The cave was quite thoroughly explored last summer by a few members of the American Scientific Association, and quite a number of the lower animals hitherto unknown to science were discovered. Similar forms, together with others quite unlike those of the caves of this country, inhabit the Cave of Adelsberg, and others in Southern Austria.

SEASICKNESS CURABLE.—An authority on this subject says: "I am much surprised at the opinion which is so prevalent of the utter incurability of seasickness. I believe the opinion to exist among the non-medical part of the community from sheer ignorance, and among sea-going surgeons from a supineness in applying remedies—a fault to which they are rather too subject. In the greater number of instances I allow the stomach to discharge its contents once or twice, and then, if there is no organic disease, I give him five drops of chloroform in a little water, and, if necessary, repeat the dose in five or six hours. The almost instant effect of this treatment, if coupled with a few simple precautions, is to cause an immediate sensation, as it were, of warmth in the stomach, accompanied by almost total relief of the nausea and sickness, likewise curing the distressing headache, and usually causing a quiet sleep, from which the passenger awakes quite well."

THE EARTH'S ROTATION.—There are few, if any, schools or institutions of learning in the land where the course of instruction comprises astronomy, in which the students of that science are not taught that there is no evidence whatever that the earth's motion around its axis was ever faster or slower than it is at the present time. In a very interesting and instructive article, entitled "Our Chief Timepiece Losing Time," Mr. Proctor combats this proposition. "It is no idle dream," he says, "but a matter of absolute certainty, that, though slowly, still very surely, our terrestrial globe is losing its rotation movement." This fact has been ascertained by a comparison of the times when ancient eclipses actually occurred with the times when they ought to have occurred, if in former ages the moon moved at the same rate as it does now. "The length of a day," says Mr. Proctor, "is now more by about one eighty-fourth part of a second than it was two thousand years ago. At this rate of change our day would merge into a lunar month in the course of thirty-six thousand million years. But, after a while, the change will take place more slowly, and some trillions or so of years will elapse before the full change is effected.

A LONG SERMON.—A lady took her son, of some five years, to church. After the minister had been preaching about half an hour the little fellow grew sleepy and began to nod. The mother roused him into attention several times by pinching, but as it seemed a hopeless case, she concluded to let him sleep undisturbed. After the little fellow had his nap out, he awoke, and saw the minister still holding forth. He looked up in his mother's face and innocently asked: "Mother, is it this Sunday night or is it next Sunday night?"

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONchitis, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable principle of the Sumach tree, and put up prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered inestimable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact, that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical,

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of truly non-sectional, unpartisan, and strictly unobjective to the people—which should present only the facts of history and science—have now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. "A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, an epoch in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher," are characterized by a novelty of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled, in cheapness, excellence and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of South ern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being wonderfully adapted for mental drill as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and explanations are clear, philosophical and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The general market has exhibited a fair degree of animation, with a tendency to higher prices in nearly every important article. Sugar has met a light supply and good request, most descriptions showing an irregular advance of ⅛@¼c. ₱ lb. Molasses has been quite active, and the medium and better qualities have advanced 1@3c. ₱ gallon. Flour has continued firm, especially the higher grades, which have advanced 12½@25c. ₱ bbl. Corn has ruled at higher prices, especially on Tuesday, when it closed at a net advance of 2@3c. in mixed, 5c. in yellow, and 1@2c. in white. Pork has advanced 37½@50c. ₱ bbl., and bacon ¼c. in shoulders and ½c. in sides.

The accounts from the country indicate that the bulk of the cotton crop has been delivered, and that we may soon look for a heavy falling off in the receipts, of which those of the past four days may be regarded as the precursor.

The river is 13 feet below high water mark.

CORTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-sixth ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales. 16,683
Lake	33
Arkansas	2,685
Mobile	318
Florida	62
Texas	182
Total	19,363

On Saturday, notwithstanding rainy and inclement weather, the demand was fair and 5,500 bales changed hands, partly at previous rates, but mostly at an advance of ⅛c. in good ordinary and a partial advance to the same extent in middling. On Monday, under the stimulus of the news and the course of gold and exchange, buyers came forward with still more spirit and took 10,500 bales at an irregular advance of ⅛@⅜(@½c., the closing quotations showing a net improvement of ⅜c. in good ordinary and low middling, and ¼(@⅜c. in the higher grades, good ordinary being quoted at 20¼@20¾c., low middling at 20⅞@21¼c., middling at 21¾c., strict middling at 22c., and good middling at 22⅝@22½c. On Tuesday the market opened with an active demand, and although the movement was checked by the stringent pretensions of factors, yet a fair business was done during the morning at an irregular advance of ⅛@⅛c. and even ⅜c., but prices subsequently were less buoyant, and our closing quotations presented a net advance of only ⅛ to ¼c. The movement was quite animated and the sales summed up 10,200 bales. Strict good ordinary sold at 20¾ to 20⅞c., low middling at 21 to 21⅛c., strict low middling at 21⅜c. and middling at 22c. Some brokers reported that a moderate amount had changed hands at Monday's figures.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 608,758 bales, against 730,815 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 364,265 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 109,620 to France, and a decrease of 363,301 to Great Britain, and of 73,817 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	19½ @ 20
Good ordinary	20½ @ 20⅞
Low middling	21 @ 21½
Middling	— @ 22
Strict middling	22½ @ 22¾

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

CHICAGO, Jan. 31.—There were nineteen deaths from smallpox during the past week. The disease is increasing. There are now thirty-four patients in the hospital. Seven physicians have been prosecuted for not properly reporting cases.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 31.—The National Convention to secure a religious amendment to the constitution met to-day. About two hundred and fifty delegates were present from the different States. Judge M. B. Hagans, of Cincinnati, was chosen president, together with a number of vice presidents and a secretary. Letters were read from a number of gentlemen, including Judge Strong, of the United States Supreme Court, regretting inability to attend.

SALT LAKE, Jan. 31.—In pursuance of instructions from Attorney General Williams, Attorney Bates moved that all prisoners in the custody of the United States be admitted to bail. The chief justice would not entertain the motion. He said some of the murders were committed under circumstances of great mystery and atrocity, and some openly and in the face of mankind. Were these prisoners turned loose before their trial the action would be without precedent; besides, there are reasons which cannot be made public why they should not be admitted to bail—reasons which District Attorney Bates cannot have submitted to Attorney General Williams. I am placed here to decide under the law all judicial questions that shall arise in this district court. Were I now to shirk or swerve from plain duty, it is not improbable that the irresponsible magistrate, called Judge Lynch, would assume the seat which I would thereby have proved myself unworthy to hold. I refuse to admit the prisoners to bail.

CHICAGO, Feb. 2.—A committee appointed by the presbyters of this city to receive donations for the sufferers by the fire, have now on deposit $31,116.32, which is to be devoted to rebuilding the Presbyterian church.

The Relief and Aid Society announces its resources will meet the wants of the present winter, and make temporary provision for charitable institutions, whose support was cut off by the fire.

Societies and committees elsewhere are requested to send a full list of donations they have received, and should they still remain unacknowledged, to have them embodied in the final statement.

SALT LAKE CITY, Feb. 5.—The Japanese embassy has arrived here. Mr. Delong is disappointed by inability to proceed East. The Japanese themselves are discontented by delay. The snow-blockade will divert millions of dollars in travel and trade from the trans-continental route during the winter to ocean routes.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 5.—A heavy earthquake visited Banah, Hawaii Island, on the fifth of January, and the volcano of Kilauea was in active eruption.

Mrs. Fair has been granted a new trial by the Supreme Court, on the ground that the court erred in not allowing counsel for defense the closing argument, and in permitting evidence to be taken of the former bad character for chastity of the accused.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Feb. 5.—The Miami powder mills exploded today, blowing five men to atoms. The shock was felt at a distance of thirty miles. The citizens were greatly excited and ran into the street.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—Cotton is steady. Sales for February delivery are reported at 22 11-16, for April at 23½, and for June at 23 13-16.

It is reported from Washington that the President says that the recent agitation in England on the subject of the submission of the question of the liability of Great Britain in respect to the Alabama claims to the Geneva conference has been raised for political effect. The treaty will not be changed, no matter what England may demand.—Picayune.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Feb. 1.—The German authorities have prohibited the sale of French journals in the streets of Strasburg.

MADRID, Feb. 1.—No immediate changes will be made in the ministry. All parts of the kingdom are tranquil.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 1.—Baron von Offenburg, late consul general at Bucharest, has been appointed minister to the United States. M. Catacazy is attached to the foreign office in this city.

HAVANA, Feb. 1.—Arcosa, the chief of staff of General Salome Hernandez, has been executed at Sancti Espiritu.

It is officially announced that President Cespedez is still in Cuba.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—The discussion on the Alabama claims becomes more vehement as the assembling of Parliament approaches. All the organs of public opinion teem with hostile comment. The Advertiser says: "Chief Justice Cockburn will withdraw from the board, and the government will repudiate the treaty." It is assumed that the repudiation of the treaty of Ghent by the United States will be cited as a precedent.

MADRID, Feb. 2.—The electoral committee of the governmental party to-day issued a manifesto to the people of Spain urging adherence to King Amadeus as the course most favorable for the future welfare of the country.

LONDON, Feb. 3.—Chief Justice Cockburn has officially counseled the cabinet that England must recede immediately from the treaty of Washington, leaving America to decide between a new treaty or war.

The council is now discussing the terms in which this resolution shall appear in the Queen's speech at the opening of Parliament.

LONDON, Feb. 4.—The Observer to-day states that the British government has sent a dispatch to Washington, withdrawing from its agreement to submit the Alabama claims to arbitration before the Geneva board, if the liability of England for indirect damages remains an open question. The dispatch is couched in friendly terms, and gives expression to an earnest desire on the part of her majesty's government to carry out all the provisions of the treaty of Washington.

MADRID, Feb. 5.—Investigation has led to the discovery that the late disturbances at Barcelona and elsewhere have been fomented by the International Society, and many members of that organization are now under arrest.

Subscriptions have been opened here to aid the people of France in the payment of the war indemnity to Germany.

The Captain General of Cuba sends reassuring dispatches to the government here. He says he has just made a journey through the disaffected districts of the island, and declares that from personal observation he is certain that the insurrection will be ended by March or April. He makes requisition for only two thousand fresh troops from Spain, with which he promises to bring the war to a triumphant conclusion.

CALCUTTA, Feb. 5.—Deputy Commissioner Cowan has ordered fifty of the Rooka muntineers to be blown from the mouths of cannon.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—The session of Parliament was opened shortly after noon to-day.

The following reference is made with regard to the Alabama claims: The arbitrators appointed pursuant to the treaty of Washington, for the purpose of amicably settling the Alabama claims, held their first meeting at Geneva. Cases were laid before the arbitrators on behalf of each party to the treaty. To this case submitted by America large claims were included, which were understood on my part not to be within the province of the arbitrators. On this subject I have caused a friendly communication to be made to the government of the United States.

PARIS, Feb. 6.—A schism has broken out among the clergy of Paris on account of the extreme ultramontanism of the new archbishop.

Railroad Connection with Texas Secured.

The following dispatches, just received, will prove highly satisfactory to the friends of progress and improvement, in New Orleans and Attakapas particularly, and gratifying to the public everywhere:

"NEW YORK, Jan. 31.—Messrs. Charles A. Whitney & Co.: Contract signed to complete the railroad from Brashear to the Sabine by the first of March, 1873. Hope to get away this week. G. W. R. BAYLEY."

"NEW YORK, Jan. 31.—Charles A. Whitney & Co.: Contract signed today. Work to commence at Brashear within fifteen days, and completed in a year.

JOHN A. GRISWOLD."

A still further telegram from Mr. J. A. Griswold, president of the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad, was received yesterday, in these words:

"Contract signed for completion of road via Brashear, with Bushnell, Boynton Brothers and other undoubted parties."

The above dispatches, and especially the one from Mr. G. W. R. Bayley, chief engineer of the road, and from Mr. Griswold, president of the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad Company, settle the question as to when this enterprise will be completed. The road is already graded from Berwick's Bay to Vermilionville, a distance of sixty-three miles. From Vermilionville to the Sabine the distance is about a hundred miles, and from the Sabine to Houston, Texas, one hundred and eight miles.

From Vermilionville to Opelousas the railroad distance is about twenty-two miles—road graded. From Opelousas to Washington, on the Courtableau, six miles—road not graded.

The road from Vermilionville to the Sabine is across an open, level prairie country—no large streams to cross, and no heavy bridging.—Picayune, February 1.

TAX ON WORDS.

What a pity there is not a tax upon words! What an income the Queen would get from it! But, alas! talking pays no toll. And if lies paid double, the government might pay off the national debt; but who could collect the money? Common fame is a common liar. Hearsay is half lies. A tale never loses in telling. As a snow-ball grows by rolling, so does a story. They who talk much lie much. If men only said what was true, what a peaceful world we should see! Silence seldom makes mischief, but talking is a plague to the parish. Silence is wisdom, and, by this rule, wise men and women are scarce. Still waters are the deepest; but the shallowest brooks brawl the most; this shows how plentiful fools must be. An open mouth shows an empty head. If the chest had gold or silver in it, it would not always stand wide open. Talking comes by nature, but it needs a good deal of training to learn to be quiet; yet regard for truth should put a bit in every honest man's mouth, and a bridle upon every good woman's tongue.

If we must talk, at least let us be free from slander, let us not blister our tongues with backbiting.—Slander may be sport to tale-bearers, but it is death to those whom they abuse. We can commit murder with the tongue as well as with the hand. The worst evil you can do a man is to injure his character; as a Quaker said to his dog: "I'll not beat thee nor abuse thee, but I'll give thee an ill name." All are not thieves that dogs bark at, but they are generally treated as if they were; for the most part believe that where there is smoke there is fire, and what everybody says must be true. Let us then be careful that we do not hurt our neighbor in so tender a point as his character, for it is hard to get dirt off if it is once thrown on; and when a man is once in people's bad books, he is hardly ever quite out of them. If we would be sure not to speak amiss, it might be as well to speak as little as possible; for if all men's sins were divided into two bundles, half of them would be sins of the tongue. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body."

Gossips of both genders, give up the shameful trade of tale-bearing; don't be the devil's bellows any longer, to blow up the fire of strife. Leave off setting people by the ears. If you do not cut a bit off your tongues, at least season them with the salt of grace. Praise God more and blame neighbors less. Any goose can cackle, any fly can find out a sore place, any empty barrel can give forth sound, any brier can tear a man's flesh. No flies go down your throat if you keep your mouth shut, and no evil speaking will come up. Think much, but say little; be quick at work and slow at talk; and, above all, ask the great Lord to set a watch over your lips.—John Ploughman.

MR. RUSKIN calls upon workmen to promise these three things: "1. To do their own work well, whether it be for life or death. 2. To help other people to do theirs when they can, and seek to avenge no injury. 3. To be sure they can obey good laws before they seek to alter bad ones."

TO LAWYERS: Can you make a blind man liable for his bill if it is payable at sight.

THE quickest way for a man to forget all common miseries is to wear tight boots.

CURIOSITIES OF MEMORY.

John Kemble used to say that he could learn a whole number of the Morning Post in four days, and General Christie made a similar assertion; but it is not known how far either of them verified this statement. Robert Dillon could repeat in the morning six columns of a newspaper he had read over night. During the repeal debates in the House of Commons, thirty-seven years ago, one of the members wrote out his speech, sent it to the newspaper, and repeated it to the House in the evening; it was found to be the same verbatim as that which he had written out. John Fuller, a land agent in Norfolk, could remember every word of a sermon, and wrote it out correctly after going home; this was tested by comparing his written account with the clergyman's manuscript. Scaliger could repeat a hundred verses or more after having read them a single time. Seneca could repeat two thousand words on hearing them once. Magliabecchi, who had a prodigious memory, was once put to a severe test. A gentleman lent him a manuscript which was read and returned. The owner, some time afterward, pretending he had lost it, begged Magliabecchi to write out as much as he could remember; whereupon the latter, appealing to his memory, wrote out the whole essay. Cyrus, if some of the old historians are to be credited, could remember the name of every soldier in his immense army. There was a Corsican boy who could rehearse forty thousand words, whether sense or nonsense, as they were dictated, and then repeat them in the reversed order, without making a single mistake. A physician of Massachusetts, about half a century ago, could repeat the whole of "Paradise Lost," without mistake, although he had not read it for twenty years. Fuller, the great mathematician, when he became blind, could repeat the whole of Virgil's "Æneid," and could remember the first line and the last line on every page of the particular edition which he had been accustomed to read before he became blind.

One kind of retentive memory may be considered as the result of sheer hard work, a determination toward one particular achievement, without reference either to cultivation or to memory on other subjects. This is frequently shown by persons in humble life in regard to the Bible. An old beggarman at Stirling, known some forty years as Blind Aleck, afforded an instance of this. He knew the whole of the Bible by heart, insomuch that, if a sentence were read to him, he could name the book, chapter and verses; or, if the book, chapter and verses were named, he could remember the exact words. A gentleman, to test him, repeated a verse, purposely making one verbal inaccuracy; Aleck hesitated, named the place where the passage is to be found, but at the same time pointed out the verbal error. The same gentleman asked him to repeat the ninetieth verse of the seventh chapter of Numbers. Aleck almost instantly replied: "There is no such verse; that chapter has only eighty-nine verses."

AN OBSTINATE MAN does not hold opinions, but they hold him; for when he is once possessed with an evil error, it is like a devil, only cast out with great difficulty. Whatsoever he lays hold on, like a drowning man, he never loses, though it do but help to sink him the sooner. His ignorance is abrupt and inaccessible, impregnable both by art and nature, and will hold out to the last, though it has nothing but rubbish to defend. It is as dark as pitch, and sticks fast to anything it lays hold on. His skull is so thick that it is proof against any reason, and never cracks but on the wrong side, just opposite to that against which the impression is made, which surgeons say does happen very frequently. The slighter and more inconsistent his opinions are, the faster he holds them, otherwise they would fall asunder of themselves; for opinions that are false ought to be held with more strictness and assurance than those that are true, otherwise they will be apt to betray their owners before they are aware. He delights most of all to differ in things indifferent; no matter how frivolous they are, they are weighty enough in proportion to his weak judgment; and he will rather suffer self-martyrdom than part with the least scruple of his freehold; for it is impossible to dye his dark ignorance into a lighter color. He is resolved to understand no man's reason but his own, because he finds no man can understand his but himself. His wits are like a sack, which the French proverb says is tied faster before it is full than when it is; and his opinions are like plants that grow upon rocks, that stick fast, though they have no rooting.—Butler.

TO CONFERENCE AND BACK.

MR. EDITOR: We got home from Monroe, Louisiana, the site of our Annual Conference, on the twelfth instant, which makes the twenty-eighth session that we have attended, less one, since we were admitted on trial. On one occasion the Conference was to meet on the eleventh, but it was changed to the eighteenth. The time was again changed to the eleventh; but when we learned the fact it was too late for us to get there, and we have ever regretted it. To us the time of an Annual Conference is a time of peculiar interest, of which we cannot afford to be deprived. Leaving home, the first day's travel brought us to a place where an entertainment was being given to the young people of the village, and where we met four other preachers on their way to the scene of peculiar suspense. Here we enjoyed the most wedding-like supper we have ever seen where there was no marriage. The deputy grand worthy archdeacon of the temperance reform in the State of Louisiana was one of our company, and he availed himself of the occasion to form a temperance council. After securing the names of some twenty persons, he invited them into a separate room, requested all others to retire, and then administered to them the usual obligation, raised money to purchase books necessary, and left them prepared to go to work in the cause of temperance.

The next incident which occurred on our way was in meeting with a brother preacher whom we had long known. Though he had the pastoral charge of a circuit, he was engaged in merchandising—furnishing his flock with calico and tin cups as a means of making a living. Doubtless, in proportion as his time was thus occupied, his flock suffered leanness of soul, and were perishing for the bread of life. He said that he could not go to Conference. Our pity and sympathy were excited. Why should a man called of God to preach, and capable of doing so much good, be thus mutilated? Is it for want of a support, or is it a want of faith in God? We are not disposed to blame any one; but when we remember that God has said, "The world is mine, and the fulness thereof," we do believe that if we had more faith in God we would be better fed.

We got to Monroe in good time for Conference, and found that we were consigned, for the time being, to the hospitalities of Judge W. R. Richardson, in company with Bishop Kavanaugh and Rev. J. D. Adams. Now we were fully occupied for five days and nights with the usual business of an Annual Conference. The Bishop and his council distributed us to our various fields of labor, which was no easy task. The interests of the preachers and their families, and the church with all its various interests, were to be considered; and the responsibility of deciding upon the fate of men, women and children, even for one year, is a very unenviable task. On Monday night we received our appointments, and early on Tuesday we were on our way home.

Before reaching home we met a tradesman by the way who had a fine horse for sale. At the suggestion of Bro. McKee, and by the kindness of the preachers on the district, we had been presented with money to buy a horse, but did not have enough to buy this one without putting our old Charlie into the bargain, which we reluctantly consented to do. Poor old fellow! He had carried us faithfully for five years, and we were mutually attached to each other. We devoutly hope that he may be well cared for. We now have a fine bay, and his name is McKee.

We are again at home, and preparing to enter upon the labors of another year; and our daily prayer is that the work of the Lord may be abundantly revived.

THE PROPOSED UNIVERSITY.

MR. EDITOR: Much has been written of late on the proposed University, and I hope the subject will be fully ventilated by all the Conferences.

My brethren of the Mississippi Conference will remember that I am in favor of such an institution of learning, and believe it will be a great blessing to the church. But I fear that many of my brethren will oppose the University. They seem to think that as soon as we get our University going we will henceforth license no more uneducated men to preach. But I think there is no danger of any calamity of this kind. I think the law on that subject will remain as it is; but it is certainly our duty to have as many educated ministers as possible; in fact we are in great need of them. There is another thought in connection with the proposed University: there will certainly be provision made for the education of itinerant preachers' sons. If board and tuition cannot be given to all, such aid can be given as to enable itinerant preachers to educate their sons.

There is money enough in the church, and people out of the church are ready to aid in such an institution of learning as this. All ministers who are not able to give their sons a first-class education should join heart and hand in this great work.

It is likely that some of our brethren in charge of our Conference schools will oppose the University, thinking that it may injure their schools, or the schools they are in charge of; but I do not see why it should. In case it does, we had better give up some of our small schools, and concentrate on a central university. I am not certain but that we have more Conference schools than we need any way. Our strength should not be too much divided. If we had but few they might be better.

One more thought on this subject: we have too many preachers teaching school. I hope the day is not far off when this will be changed, and these school teachers will enter the itinerant field, and with their brethren bear the burden and heat of the day.

F. M. FEATHERSTON.

VICKSBURG, MISS., Jan. 27, 1872.

IN MOST Sunday schools the rule prevails of averaging classes by getting about the same number of scholars under each teacher, without any regard to the relative teaching capacity of the several teachers. Here is a great mistake. Prof. Hart says on this point:

"Class-teaching consists in making a unit of all the scholars, no matter how many, who are under one teacher. The ability of teachers differs in this. One teacher can make a unit of twenty, another of ten, another of five, another of three, while some (and their number is larger than is generally supposed) can teach but one, or at the most two at a time. Nothing is gained by assigning to a teacher more scholars than he can keep occupied all the time. The school may have a prettier appearance, perhaps, when the scholars are evenly distributed by sevens or eights all over the room. But for the real benefit of the scholars it is better to assign to some teachers but one or two scholars apiece, and to others twenty or thirty, if thereby all the scholars are fully occupied all the time. A teacher is overloaded the moment he has a single scholar more than he can keep fully occupied."

THE sufficiency of my merit is to know that my merit is not sufficient.—St. Augustine.

T[illegible] name [illegible] "the spirits of evil"
Wa[illegible] nam[illegible] [illegible] friend of virtue [illegible] arrived.
Fi[illegible] [illegible] named, did it come from [illegible] devil?

Be [illegible] may, 'tis a capital name,
[illegible] easily said, and of meaning most [illegible] cruel;
An[illegible] other suspect from the devil it came;
[illegible] to his friends, he is aptly named.

But what is its meaning? Why call it a bar?
Because, pright Turk, it bars from the liquor;
But [illegible] not its full, honest meaning, by far;
[illegible] mingle the money, the rum follows quicker!

I'll tell what it means: 'tis a bar to all good,
And a constant promoter of everything evil;
'Tis a bar to all virtue—that is well understood—
A bar to the right, and a fort for the devil.

'Tis a bar to all industry, prudence and wealth,
A bar to reflection, a bar to sobriety;
A bar to clear thought, and a bar to sound health,
A bar to good conscience, to prayer and to piety.

A bar to the sending of children to school;
To clothing, and giving them good education;
A bar to the observance of every good rule,
A bar to the welfare of family and nation!

A bar to the hallowed enjoyments of home,
A bar to the holiest earthly fruition;
A bar that forbids its frequenters to come
To the goal and rewards of a virtuous ambition.

Unity and Indefectibility of the Church.

Upon this rock will I build my church: and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Matt. xvi. 18.

1. The word ekklēsia, which we translate church, denotes an assembly met for the transaction of business, whether spiritual or temporal.

2. It denotes a particular church, or an assembly of Christians united together, and meeting in one place for the solemn worship of God.

3. It denotes the collective body of Christians, or of all in every nation of the earth who believe in Christ and acknowledge him to be the Savior of mankind. This collective body constitutes the visible church.

4. It denotes also the whole body of God's people in every period of time, the church militant and the church triumphant; and this may be denominated the invisible or spiritual church.

The question arises, then: When was this church instituted? It was in the Garden of Eden, when the promise was made to Adam that "the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." It was at that time that the foundation was laid, deep and wide, and upon which patriarchs, prophets and apostles have built, and upon which all who do truly believe in Christ are still building.

It is often the case, in speaking of the church, to do it in such a manner as to convey the idea that it had no existence prior to the days of Christ; and there are many who believe that Christ and his disciples really instituted the church, together with all its ordinances, and that, too, without any reference to types and other usages among the Jews; and consequently deny that the Old Testament scriptures have any voice whatever in the determination of the mode of any of the ordinances or sacraments of the church.

It is evident that when the promise was first made to Adam, that he understood it as containing something of the nature of a covenant, including the grace which God designed to show to sinners in the Messiah, and the obedience which he required of them; and consequently, from its first promulgation, that promise became the sole foundation of the church, and of the whole worship of God therein. That such was the case is evident from the offerings that Abel made of the firstlings of his flock—typical of him who was to come and offer himself for the sins of the world.

Through the long period of time between Adam and Abraham we have no account of any other revelation being made relative to the church or its ordinances. To Abraham, however, the original promise was renewed, and a covenant, not simply understood, but expressed, and of which circumcision was the seal. In this covenant Abraham was constituted the father of the faithful, or of all them that believe, and are circumcised with the circumcision of Christ. Hence then wheresoever this covenant made with Abraham—as to its spirituality—is, and with whomsoever it is established, with them is the church of God, and to them all the promises and privileges of the church actually belong. We are not to conclude, then, that when Christ came he abolished the church that had been in existence from the days of Adam, and instituted a new one.

Nothing is more common than to hear people speak of the Jewish Church and the Christian Church as if they were two distinct and entirely different things; but that is not a correct view of the matter. The Christian Church is not a new building, but may be represented as a third story on that sure foundation laid in the Garden of Eden: consequently the whole building, or spiritual temple, is not only a unit, but at the same time indefectible.

The indefectibility of the church may be seen by what it passed through prior to the time when Christ said: "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." When the church was but an infant of days the deism of Cain could not produce any decay in its structure, nor in after ages, when miscegenation became a common sin, and so very common that Noah and his family were all of the then inhabitants of the earth who were perfect in their generation or regular descendants of Seth. Still, in the midst of all the wickedness of the human family at that time, the church showed no marks of decay. True, many of the sons of God departed from the church, involved themselves in great wickedness, and were finally overthrown by the flood; yet Noah and his family, eight souls, constituting the entire visible church, were safely housed in the ark, and the invisible church transmitted from the antediluvian to the post-diluvian world.

Again, when Christ, in accordance with the promise made to Abraham, came to open the door of the church to all the nations of the earth, and found that those to whom the keeping of the church militant had been committed had become like a "whitened sepulcher, full of dead men's bones and stench"—still it was sound in all its parts; and now, with its transfer to the Gentile nations of the earth, we have the assurance of him to whom "all power is given in heaven and earth" that it shall remain indefectible to the termination of time—until

"Every star and every fire Shall languish and expire."

LETTER FROM CHINA.

Written to the Superintendent of the Felicity Street Sunday School.

Shanghai, China, Nov. 7, 1871.

My Dear Brother Foster: Your letter of September 5 is at hand. By last mail I acknowledged receipt from California of the order which you inclosed on the second, and promised to send you by this mail a longer letter, with some account of the school; but really I have not time to write, nor have I as yet realized fully the items I wished to write. Several of the pupils that were received on probation some time since are now awaiting baptism, and I hope soon to announce their reception into the church.

The school-house, which I mentioned as being desirable, is now quite completed, and they will soon get possession and have very comfortable quarters. I hope also to increase for 1872 the number of pupils. Much good can be done in this way, and I am encouraged, so far, to augment our numbers. I am glad to hear that your example is contagious, and hope the church at home will appreciate our efforts to prosecute the work in China, which, at its best estate, is difficult and trying. We shall reap if we faint not. Our besetting sin is impatience. Sow to-day, reap to-morrow—such cannot be in China. Pray for us; hold up our hands. Love to the dear children of Felicity and Moreau.

Your brother in Christ,

Y. J. Allen.

A TALENT CONSECRATED.

Between forty and fifty years ago Isaac Rich, then a young man, was supporting his widowed mother and younger brother and sisters as a street seller of fish in the city of Boston. The well-known proprietor of the Tremont hotel in those days, interested in the enterprising and honest young man, one day asked him why he did not provide salmon for his customers. His answer was that these were all sold by the cargo as soon as they reached the dock, and he had no capital to enable him to make such a purchase. Mr. Stetson offered to provide the money for him, and the next vessel load that entered the harbor was promptly purchased by the young merchant. On this wholesale movement, involving the limited amount of $600, he realized $100 of profit. This was the first step on the ladder to his large fortune. By the same process, with his well-known promptness of action, his keen insight as to the character and extent of the demand of the markets, his unswerving honesty, his magnanimity and generosity, he became a leading merchant in the commodity which at first gave him and those dependent upon him an honorable living. Providence directed him where to cast his net during his life for the fish that had the money in its mouth, and, what is more rare in instances of mercantile success, grace, voluntarily sought, enabled him to render unto Cæsar the things that belong unto Cæsar, and unto God the things that belong unto God.

As was suggested by Dr. Porter recently, he was, from his early manhood, a very warm and intelligent supporter of his chosen form of Christian faith, while entirely catholic in his feelings, and enjoying through his life the fellowship and respect of the sister denominations. We well recollect his cheerful, always open, but what would now be considered quite humble, home, thirty years ago, when Mr. Rich was a faithful member of old Bennett Street church, the lineal successor of the first Methodist Episcopal Church, in "Methodist alley," in Boston. It was situated upon what he and his friend of the same church had named "Wesley Place." The same love for his church and her honored names was shown in the title given to one of his ships. Her flag and beautifully modeled form bore to many ports the beloved name of "Wilbur Fisk."

Mr. Rich early discovered the special talent with which God had intrusted him for his own glory. He had not opened the way for him to become a scholar. He was not gifted with readiness of speech or with marked persuasive powers as a public speaker; but God had given him a signal ability for business, and wonderful success in gathering mere money than his conscience and moderate taste permitted or demanded him to use for the personal comfort of himself and his family. He could send out Christian scholars and gifted speakers to affect the well-being of society, while he diligently and conscientiously improved his one great talent to the last. And, indeed, he developed it to the last. As a minister might desire to die in his pulpit, and a scholar among his books, so he fell in sight of his ledgers, and was borne by his business associate from his counting-room to his dying bed.

The Captain of our salvation was made perfect by suffering, and often the same form of discipline becomes the severe but effectual process through which the highest stages of Christian service are reached. Three beautiful children—Robert, Anna and Sarah—with whom he is now happily united—were taken from him in the very glory of their young life and promise—one nineteen years of age, the second eighteen, and the latter just happily married. Lovely in personal appearance, amiable in temper, intelligent and cultivated, they wore the additional and transcendent attraction of sincere piety. All that knew them loved them, and wept with the stricken parents when the Lord took them. Walking along Commercial street, Boston, with the writer after the last blow had fallen upon him, Mr. Rich remarked, without attempting to suppress his deep emotions: "I have known the time when I desired to accumulate money, but did not see the way opening for me to do it; now I see no limit to my success in this direction. I can make as much money, and as rapidly, as I desire, but the ambition to gather it is gone. Why should I labor? God has taken those for whom I have been working." The response to this confidential utterance was: "God has taken your children to heaven, where they are safe, and where you will meet them again, that you may be the father and savior of hundreds of other children for whom no means in Providence seems to be provided." It evidently was not a new thought to him, and as evidently the thought never left him until his dying hour. During his last weeks he was in consultation with a trusted friend as to still further benefactions to an institution whose his name will never be forgotten—a plan that perhaps failed of consummation through the suddenness of his call to his eternal reward and to higher services.

The incisive wisdom which enabled him early to discover that unity in business was one prime element of success, and that God did not usually adapt one man to every form of affairs, led him to see the importance of choosing one leading field of benevolence for his own cultivation. Nothing that was friendly to the kingdom of Christ was foreign to him; but he believed God called men to the cultivation of different provinces in the great field. He gave liberally to all Christian charities; but he felt himself to be specially called to aid in the establishment of schools of learning under Christian influences. It was this that caused about fifty thousand dollars to flow from his treasury to Wilbraham Academy, nearly a hundred and fifty to Middletown, a hundred thousand to the Boston Theological Seminary, and also the large endowment which is supposed to be in his will for the University of which this is to be one of the departments.

Few merchants die more respected or beloved than he. The competitions and frictions of business often break up fraternal and social relations. Mr. Rich was a sharp dealer, but was always noble and generous in his business modes and in his social connections.—New York Christian Advocate.

RELIGIOUS REVOLUTION IN JAPAN

Buddhism Prostrated—The Priests to be Made into Soldiers.

The news from Japan by the last steamer is of the most interesting nature. The great moral revolution which is quietly taking place among the higher powers almost passes comprehension. Our readers are familiar with the remarkable movements, under the authority of the present government, to promote education and a thorough acquaintance with Western science in all its departments; the establishment of a department of education with a minister of public instruction ranking with the highest officers of government; the employment of American missionaries in the imperial universities; the sending of so many youths to this country to be educated; the sending of repeated deputations to study our institutions, and the application for men of experience and standing in this country to come and aid the government in reorganizing their system; all these and other movements have been full of promise.

The recent abolition of the power and position of the Daimios was another bold stroke that took the world by surprise. The sudden destruction of an ancient feudal aristocracy by imperial authority was a measure almost without precedent, and seemed to be too revolutionary to stand, especially as the military force of the country was dependent mainly upon the Daimios. The Yakonins are their retainers, and look to them for a living. But this measure has not thus far awakened the opposition which was anticipated. It seems quietly to have gone into effect.

When the Tycoon was overthrown and the Mikado came into power, a change took place in the established religion of the country. For three hundred years Buddhism has been the favored religion. The Buddhist temples were liberally endowed by the government, and the priests were liberally supported. This was said to be owing to the aid which had been rendered by the Buddhist priests in establishing the Tycoonate three centuries ago. The Mikado was regarded as the spiritual head of the country, and was also the representative of the ancient religion, Shinteoism. When he came into political power in 1838, without any special orders or demonstration the Shintoo religion became again the acknowledged religion of the empire, and a quiet crusade against Buddhism was commenced. The Shintoo temples that had become dilapidated and deserted were restored; many of the Buddhist temples that occupied sites of ancient Shintoo worship were suppressed; the Buddhist gods were dethroned, and the religion of the country was restored by the Mikado, as near as was practicable, to its ancient standing.

We have now the intelligence from Japan that "the Buddhist priests in the country have been notified that their temples will be closed, and that they must enter the army as soldiers or earn their living in mechanical occupations." This is one of the boldest measures ever undertaken by any government in regard to matters of religion. It is on a par with the abolition of the office and power of the Daimios. The Buddhist priests have been very numerous, their temples and monasteries have been the seats of wealth, and they have had great influence, especially with the higher classes of society. But as the Daimios submitted, the Buddhist priests will probably also submit, and so the religious revolution will be completed.

Another fact is also stated in the intelligence from Japan, which is very significant of the change which is coming over the empire. The government is said to be considering the policy of sending over a large number of young ladies, daughters of Daimios, to this country to be educated. No greater innovation could be made upon Oriental customs and habits than this; and, taken in connection with the important events already alluded to, it indicates a complete social revolution, and one which is to bring Japan into close sympathy with our own institutions and people.

No less striking is the additional statement that "twenty officers of the United States frigate Colorado, and many other foreigners, have been presented to the Mikado, who will visit the Colorado and witness a naval review. The Mikado has already visited a number of foreign residents, and enjoyed his visits greatly." This may not appear strange to those who are familiar with the court of Japan, but the person of the Mikado has been surrounded with an air of deep mystery. It has even been regarded as a matter of doubt whether he was ever seen by a foreigner; whether in audiences given to ambassadors he was not represented by some inferior officer of State. He was never seen in public, even by the natives. But he is now making his appearance, like the monarchs of Europe, in utter defiance of established custom.

There is one important change yet to take place, and we cannot but hope, from these numerous indications of a revolutionary character, that it will speedily come. It is a change in the attitude of the government toward Christianity. The old edicts forbidding the people to embrace Christianity are still in force, and they are renewedly issued; but a government that is pursuing such an enlightened and liberal policy in regard to other matters, and that is breaking down so many old institutions, we trust will not long continue a policy that is so opposed to its own ideas of progress. The movements which have taken place in Japan must be regarded as belonging to that great providential work which God is carrying on in the world, in which he is so marvelously turning the hearts of kings, and overturning the old barriers which have opposed the progress of his kingdom. The church should not cease to pray that the heart of the Mikado may be moved to abolish the laws against Christians. This would require no greater stretch of power, nor would it be any more remarkable in its character, than the numerous orders that he has already issued, and which the nobles and people accept without opposition. We hope soon to hear that religious toleration and freedom has been established in Japan.—New York Observer.

Some Are Elect to Save the Non-Elect.

In the midst of the doubt and difficulty with which this subject is surrounded, we saw that some light might be gathered from Scripture history. The life of an elect people might help us to understand what the doctrine means. We found that God had called a particular people, and set them forth as an example of what he means by election. All the conditions of an election are realized in their history. Called and separated by sovereign choice, endowed with high and peculiar privileges, they were placed in a position of distinguished eminence as compared with the rest of mankind. For no virtue of their own, but for the glory of Jehovah's name, they were elected and sustained against the pressure of otherwise overwhelming foes. It was the sovereign will of God which from first to last was busy about their national life. And now what were the broad features of that life? Very stern discipline, very sharp chastisements, a high standard of national living, which they were to be trained to aim at and realize by a far more severe method of education than was applied to the culture of any other people in the world. But there was something in the purpose of their calling deeper than this. Not only that they might be trained by that discipline to a very high form of national life were they elected, but also that their culture might be the national inheritance of mankind. I affirm that from first to last Israel's calling contemplated something outside the sphere of Israel's life. The honor bestowed on them, and the pains lavished on their culture, were God's ministry, or a very important feature of God's ministry, not to them only, but to the whole human world. Abraham was blessed that he might be made a blessing; and this remained the characteristic purpose of Israel's elect national life. Not at all for their own comfort and pride, not for heaven's pride and comfort in them, but for the sake of the life they were to quicken, and the light they were to show to other peoples. God made them what they were, and placed them where they stood, and made them the religious aristocracy of the world. Their election, if I may so express it, was like a great electric jar, in which converging streams of electric force were stored, not that they might remain there a private national possession, but that they might flash forth through a thousand conductors and quicken mankind.

In the earlier portion of the Old Testament there are hints of this, though, as one might expect, but dim. The first work of their Divine Ruler was to separate them, to disentangle them from the habits and influences of the pagans—to isolate them, in fact, as men isolate the vessel with which I have compared them, that they might be the more fully continent of the divine light and fire. But when, at length, their nationality was consolidated, and their national consciousness was developed so that they began to reflect on their own calling and destiny, then prophets interpreted to them more fully the meaning of their election. They were bidden to let their light and fire stream forth to the Gentiles; and in words of matchless force and splendor their career was pictured, as God's chief missionaries to the world. (Isaiah lx.) They failed to grasp the significance of their position; they tried to "bring forth fruit unto themselves." Then God shattered the vessel which so selfishly guarded its treasure; and, despite themselves, the healing, quickening streams flowed forth—flowed round the world. But shattered as they were, their very fragments, as we learn from St. Paul, were full of promise to the Gentiles: "For if the casting of them away be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from dead?" (Rom. xi. 11-15.)

But what of the Gentile world which was abandoned while Israel was called and saved? A true reading of the Bible will, I think, convince us that it was distinctly not abandoned; that while the elect people were separated to their special culture, their high and noble life, the nations not elect were not forsaken. God, we are taught, had purposes of mercy to the whole world, the whole sum of the human, in this calling of the Jews to the knowledge of his name, and this leaving of the Gentiles "to feel after God, if haply they might find him." The Gentile experiment of life was quite as much in the track of the divine education of humanity as the lesson of life which God taught the Jews. The Grecian and the Roman culture, nay that of the great world-empires which are pictured in the human image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, are very essential elements in the life of Christendom at this moment. And these results were wrought out by peoples not included in the visible election, but equally, we are bound to believe, nay, we are distinctly taught to believe, under the guidance of the Divine hand. God had his eye on the great human mass when he selected and separated a people to be called by his name and live to his praise; and his chief interest in that elect people, we gather from prophetic Scriptures, was the hope of which they were the children, that through them the great human world would be blessed, and gathered into the everlasting kingdom of the Lord.—Mispeah Passages.

Pets in Brazil.—A correspondent in Brazil describes the kind of pets they have in that country. He says: "It is quite convenient to have anacondas in the cellars to destroy rats and mice. People do not generally have the largest sized snakes for that purpose; they are only from ten to twelve feet long, and are seldom seen, as they live in the walls of the cellar, which is very little used. They are carried about the streets, and sold to those who have lost their pet reptile, or whoever may chance to need them. Monkeys, generally of small size, are kept as pets in the houses, but to prevent their mischief they are necessarily chained. During the prevalence of yellow fever, the summer past, the contagion was more fatal to them than to the families in which they were kept.—N. Y. Tribune.

A sect of Mohammedans has arisen in Persia, now numbering two hundred thousand, which recognizes the Bible as the word of God, and attempts to reconcile the creed of Islam and Christianity. The sect is under powerful oppression, and a considerable number of its adherents have been slain; but in its strength of numbers and influence, and in its persistence, it is of peculiar significance and hopefulness.

How to Kill the Critics.—The Rev. T. L. Cuyler speaks of a hearer who gave him this practical hint: "If a minister can only convince his congregation during the first ten minutes that he cares for nothing but to save their souls, he will kill all the critics in the house."

SINGING IN THE RAIN.

The day dawned leaden and chilly,
And the wind rolled at the pane;
While fog veiled the leafless chestnut,
Where a robin sang in the rain.

Sang in the rain his sweetest—
"Cheer-up, O cheer-up, cheer;"
The eye could not catch the warbler,
But his voice rang silvery clear.

Blasts shook the tree by the shoulder,
The tree cried out with pain;
But somewhere, high in the leafage,
A robin sang to the rain.

He might have sung to the angels,
But I think he sang to us here;
The sinless need not the counsel—
"Cheer-up, O cheer-up, cheer."

He looked as the blind may look;
Nature-notes guided the singer,
Closed fingers had shut the book;

Yet well he had learned the caged,
And he sang it out of his heart;
Nor once was it worth his hearing
When the rain would fall apart.

"Cheer up, cheer-up, O cheer-up,"
Still the sad leaves among;
His beautiful breast was bobbing
A fountain of ruptured song.

It never can flow so welcome
Under a sky all blue;
What is the lesson he teaches?
I learned it, and so may you.

JOHN WESLEY.

Wesley's mind was eminently administrative. It has often been said that he had in him much that combined the genius of Richelieu and Loyola—the calm, iron will and the acute eye of the one, the inventive genius and habitual devotion of the other. He would compare better with Washington, or the illustrious member of the Wesley family of our own age, Wellington. His mind was eminently healthy, and may be said to have been always awake, ceaseless in activity, sleepless in vigilance. He intermeddled with all knowledge in many languages, and he compiled and published libraries. He appears to have been almost wholly indifferent to food; in sleep he was sparing; his frame was very small, and if this appeared to be a reason against his popular impressiveness as a preacher it was a means of his amazing agility. Look at the remarkable likeness of the man prefixed to the work of Isaac Taylor; it has been likened to a shriveled monk of the order of La Trappe, a face in which sharpness and serenity strive for the dominion of the features, the dark hawk-eyed intelligence with the bland smile. The principles which illustrate Wesley's character, and testify, not merely his greatness, but how it happened that he achieved so much, may be well presented in some of those brief axioms which do in fact, as we read the multitudinous events of his long career, exhibit the pivots upon which his life turned. "I dare no more fret than curse or swear." "I reverence the young because they may be useful when I am dead." "You have no need to be in a hurry," said a friend. "Harry?" he replied; "I have no time to be in a hurry." "The soul and the body," he writes, in a characteristic letter insisting on the observance of discipline in his society—"the soul and the body make a man; the spirit and the discipline make a Christian." "Let us work now; we shall rest by and by." Such sentences exhibit the secret of his ubiquitous activity and his power; and such characters are usually cheerful. A glow of quiet, kindly humor often lightened his speech, sometimes sharpening into quiet satire. Many anecdotes illustrate both these attributes.

At eighty he appeared to have the sprightliness of youth, and moved about like a flying evangelist. Although so clear-sighted a man, he was too great by far for the epithet "shrewd." If people who make mistakes in judging of character, because of their own want of judgment become suspicious, the fault is chiefly theirs. Wesley was seldom mistaken in his judgment of particular persons; Charles was often mistaken. Wesley himself says: "My brother suspects everybody, and he is continually imposed upon; but I suspect nobody, and I am never imposed upon." Again and again we are reminded how much he lived in an atmosphere of continual quiet. "I do not remember," said the happy old man, when at the age of seventy-seven, "I do not remember to have felt lowness of spirits for one quarter of an hour since I was born." Of course it is to be presumed he means that causeless depression which is usually the result of indolence. At the age of eighty-six he writes: "Saturday, March 21, I had a day of rest, only preaching morning and evening." We have seen that in his first days he was not a radiant and cheerful man; but through his long sunset we know not where to find such another instance of active spiritual brightness. He was a serenely happy old man. Sometimes he seems to us as if incapable of the feeling either of blame or praise, contempt or homage. There was great strength, as there ever is, in his clearness and stillness of spirit. Genius is so vague an epithet and quality that we know not how either to apply it to him or to deny it; but so far as it represents soul and imagination, great breadth and depth and height of soul or feeling, it was certainly denied him. On the other hand, he had a judgment most clear, an apprehension most quick and vivid, and an enthusiasm as little tainted by fanaticism as any great Christian leader since the days of the Apostle Paul. Reformer as he was, he was essentially conservative.

As is usual in most religious orders, popish or Protestant, his spirit has survived in his society, and the shadow of Wesley falls wide and far. He lived through amazing changes of opinion with reference to himself, and before he died, from being one of the most abused and execrated of men, he certainly was one of the most revered. No foe had been more rancorous and unjust than Lavington, Bishop of Exeter; Wesley lived to unite with him in the ordinance of the Lord's Supper in his own cathedral. He writes, with no bitterness of the man who had with such bitter ribaldry abused him: "I was well pleased to partake of the Lord's Supper with my old opponent, Bishop Lavington. O, may we sit together in the kingdom of our Father!". At Lewisham he dined with the eminent Dr. Lowth, Bishop of London. On proceeding to dinner the Bishop refused to sit above Wesley at the table, saying: "Mr. Wesley, may I be found at your feet in another world!" Wesley objected to take the seat of precedence; but the learned prelate obviated the difficulty by requesting as a favor that Wesley would sit above him because his hearing was defective, and he desired not to lose a sentence of Wesley's conversation. It is known that the King had a great respect for him; and it is to this most probably Wesley refers when, writing to one of his preachers, advising him to stand his ground against the vehement opposition of the Bishop of the Isle of Man, he says: "I know pretty well the mind of Lord Mansfield, and of one that is greater than he." In his latter days his movements to and fro in the country became ovations; not merely did thousands gather to hear him preach—the streets of towns were lined to look upon him, and the windows were thronged as he passed along. While in Yorkshire we read of cavalcades of horses and carriages formed to receive and escort him on the way. At Redruth, as he preached in the marketplace, the congregation not only filled the windows, but sat on the tops of the houses. Assuredly, as often as he had been "persecuted he was not forsaken;" he did not die of crucifixion, but he felt no elation of spirit, and we see him still the same man that he had been in the widely different circumstances of cruel and unjust misrepresentation.

It is wonderful to think that, at nearly ninety years of age he could continue to make any effort to preach, but he did so, and he continued as a tower of strength to the companies he had formed and called together. But he outlived most of his early cotemporaries, friends and foes. He stood in the pulpit of St. Giles', in London; he had preached there fifty years before, prior to his departure for America. "Are they not passed as a watch in the night?" he writes. Old families that used to entertain him had passed away. "Their houses," says he, "know neither me nor them any more." His later letters show that fervid sentiment for woman known only to loftiest minds and hearts; this again is entwined with beautiful simple regards for children. When he ascended the pulpit of Raithby church, where he was often allowed to preach, a child sat in his way on the stairs; he took it in his arms and kissed it, and placed it tenderly on the same spot. Crabb Robinson heard him at Colchester; he was then eighty-seven; on each side of him stood a minister supporting him; his feeble voice was barely audible. Robinson, then a boy, destined to enter into his ninety-second year, says: "It formed a picture never to be forgotten." He goes on to say: "It went to the heart, and I never saw anything like it in after life."

The story of the old man's approach toward the gates of the celestial city is very beautiful, and has often been told. His last sermons are certainly among his best; the last sermon he printed, on "Faith the evidence of things not seen," was the last he ever wrote, and was finished only six weeks before his death. It shows how his mind sustained the altitude of highest power when bordering upon ninety years of age; it shows also how the dear old man was preening his wings for a speedy flight. We suppose the last letter he wrote was to William Wilberforce on the abolition of slavery—short, but full of strength—giving to the apostle of freedom his benediction. "If God be for you," he writes, "who can be against you? O, be not weary in well doing!. Go on, in the name of God, and in the power of his might!"

It was in the City road that exhausted nature gave way, unable to bear any more. And what a death it was! He was, indeed, several days in dying, but there was no pain, only exhaustion; in his wanderings he was preaching or attending classes, and singing snatches from some of his brother's and from Watts' hymns; but he was half in heaven before he left the earth. His last strain of song was:

> To Father, Son and Holy Ghost,
> Who sweetly all agree;

but his voice failed, and, gasping for breath, he said: "Now we have done, let us go!" Friends crowded around his bed, and amid their words of comfort and love he was passing away. There was no conflict; only once he rose, and in a tone almost supernatural, exclaimed: "The best of all is, God is with us!" His brother's widow tenderly ministered to him; he tried to kiss her, saying: "He giveth his servants rest!" Then he repeated his thanksgiving: "We thank thee, O God, for these and all thy mercies; bless the church and King, and grant us truth and peace through Jesus Christ our Lord, for ever and ever." He paused a little; then he cried: "The clouds drop fatness!" Then another pause: "The Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge!" Eleven persons were standing round his bed as he said, "Farewell," his last word, at ten o'clock, Wednesday, March 2, 1791. "Children," said John Wesley's mother, "as soon as I am dead sing a song of praise!" As soon as Wesley died, his friends round his dead body raised their voices in a hymn, then knelt down and prayed. He was buried behind the chapel in the City road on the ninth of March.—New York Christian Advocate.

SELF-DECORATION.

If I were called upon to point out the most alarming sins in this city to-day, those which are most widespread in their ravages, most deceitful in their influences, and most soul-destroying in their ultimate effects, I would not mention drunkenness, with all its fearful havoc, nor gambling, with its crazed victims, nor harlotry, with its hellish orgies, but the love of money, on the part of men, and the love of display, on the part of women. While open vice sends its thousands, these fashionable and favored indulgences send their ten thousands to perdition. They sear the conscience, encrust the soul with an impenetrable shell of worldliness, debauch the affections from every high and heavenly object, and make the man or woman a worshiper of self. And, while doing all this, the poor victim is allowed by public opinion to think himself or herself a Christian; while the drunkard, the gambler and the prostitute is not deceived by such a thought for a moment.

The three glories of a woman—her triple crown, which makes her power more efficient than that of the Vatican, and constitutes her, in her true and normal life, the minister of grace and health to the race—are modesty, truth and sympathy. All three of these are tarnished by the self-decorator. For modesty, we have the brazen face with which young misses, even, stare unblushingly at all they meet; for truth, we have the perpetual lie of fashionable society; and for sympathy, the headlong plunge after selfish indulgence. I do not speak as a cynic, as one who would morosely deny the proper recreations and light enjoyments that our natures need, as they do air and food, nor do I ignore the fact that some noble spirits are faithfully resisting this spreading evil; but, with all these allowances, I see the Christian church violently invaded by this fatal iniquity; I see Christian mothers justifying it on every hand, and Christian daughters dragged into the vortex by the very hands that ought to have been thrown around them for protection; see the influence of this self-decoration by the force of example extending itself over classes and conditions of society, like a subtle poison, eating out the life of Christianity and leaving the mere name. And, seeing this, I cannot, as a minister of Jesus Christ, keep silent without becoming a partaker of the sin. It is my duty to warn Christian women of this foe to piety that they are more or less nursing in their hearts and in their families, and to urge them to that simplicity of apparel which is alone consistent with a Christian heart, and which will ever help them to be separated from a vain and godless world.—Consecrated Looking Glasses, by Dr. Crosby.

The Future Life.—An Old Testament Doctrine.

If immortality were not taught in the Old Testament scriptures, neither was sin in its exceeding sinfulness, nor the ruin of the soul in consequence of sin, nor the wrath of God against it; nor the soul's need of a Redeemer, nor God's provision of redemption, nor the method of it, nor the necessity of the soul's laying hold upon it. All these things were kept from the knowledge of men, if immortality and future retribution were concealed. If the Scriptures prophesied mere temporal blessings and punishments, then, also, a merely temporal Messiah, and gave no intimation of sin in the soul, or a Savior from it. Such a Savior could not have been promised without a knowledge of the soul's immortality, guilt and threatened ruin. But our Lord Jesus declared that he came to save from eternal death and provide eternal life, according to the Scriptures; and appeals to the Old Testament as thus testifying of him, that he was to save his people from their sins. And if the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, as Paul affirms, it could only be by teaching human guilt, and the need of forgiveness; and if these were taught in the Old Testament, it could only be on the known basis of the immortality of the soul and a future judgment; which, if Moses and the prophets attempted to conceal, and to shut the people up to mere temporal sanctions, they would have been greater villains than those who take away the gold out of a king's treasury, and put instead thereof a pile of paper currency of their own, or chests of pewter coin washed with gold. But there never has been known on earth a race of men so degraded as to accept for a divine revelation, or obey as such, a forgery that had in it not a single intimation of any other existence, or longer continued, than this of the body. All religions among men have had a future state.

ANECDOTE OF HANDEL.

Handel was one of the most humorous of mortals, and at the same time one of the most irritable. His best jokes were perpetrated frequently during his most violent bursts of passion. Having occasion to bring out one of his oratories in a provincial town in England, he began to look about for such material to complete his orchestra and chorus as the place might afford. One and another was recommended, as usual, as being a splendid singer, a great player, and so on. After a while such as were collectable were gathered together in a room, and, after preliminaries, Handel made his appearance, puffing, both arms full of manuscripts.

"Gentlemen," quoth he, "you all read manuscripts."

"Yes, yes," responded from all parts of the room. "We play in church," responded an old man behind a violoncello.

"Very well, play dis," said Handel, distributing the parts. This done, and a few explanations delivered, Handel retired to a distant part of the room to enjoy the effect. The stumbling, fumbling and blundering that ensued is said to have been indescribable. Handel's sensitive ear and impetuous spirit could not long brook the insult, and, clapping his hands to his ears, he ran to the old gentleman of the violoncello, and, shaking his fist furiously at the terrified man and the instrument, said: "You play in de church! Very well, you may play in de church, for we read, De Lord is long-suffering, of great kindness, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin; you shall play in de church, but you shall not play for me!" and snatching together his manuscript, he rushed out of the room, leaving his astonished performers to their own conclusions.

VALUE OF THE BIBLE.—He was conversing one day with a prison chaplain, and asked him whether his ministry had been attended with success. Very little, was the reply, and then the chaplain told him that he had had great hopes of one man who had been condemned to death, and who was most assiduous in the study of a Bible he had given him. The chaplain, after great exertion, obtained a commutation of the sentence. "I called to inform him of my success. His gratitude knew no bounds; he said I was his preserver, his deliverer. 'And here,' he added as he grasped my hand in parting, 'here is your Bible. I may as well return it to you, for I hope that I shall never want it again.'"—Life of Rev. William Harness.

WHEN Rowland Hill was paying his first visit to Scotland he was carefully warned that his loose and random style of talking would not do among the hardheaded natives of that country, and that he must try and be a little more connected. Accordingly when he first stood in a Scotch pulpit he said he was to obey the warning, and that he would be very logical and very connected indeed. Having announced his text, he said: "First, I shall come up to the text; secondly, I shall go round about the text; thirdly, I shall go right through the text; and fourthly, I shall go quite away from the text." And if the story-teller be veracious, Rowland was most at home under the last head.

DARWIN is said to be at work on a new book, to be entitled "Facial Expression of Animals," which will be freely illustrated, and will endeavor to prove that dogs and monkeys can laugh, smile, sneer, look cross, or throw a deep pathos into their speaking countenances.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

PROGRESS OF CHRISTIANITY.—Mr. T. Waldmeir, of Damascus, Syria, one of the Basle missionaries, and one of the Abyssinian captives, for whose liberty England took its war against that people, writes from Damascus, July 24, 1871, to a friend in Great Britain, that in Damascus there is, of late, a wonderful religious movement among Mohammedans, so that no less than three thousand are found who desire to become Christians. They have regular prayer meeting, and they pray to our Christ that he may reveal himself to them as their Savior, and lead them out from darkness into the light and truth. There is also, he says, a movement toward Christianity among the Jews, and the Druses are anxiously expecting their Savior's coming from China. A great spiritual awakening seems also imminent in Persia.

A NEW MAGAZINE in England is to begin and be issued quarterly, entitled the Indian Female Evangelist, undenominational in character, and devoted, as its name would indicate, to the interests of woman in the far East. It is to furnish information of their personal, social and domestic condition, as also of the work going on, under all varieties, in their behalf. It is intended, also, to bring out articles in every number fitted to throw light on their past as well as present state, the peculiarities of their mind, manners and character, etc. Such a magazine will fill a gap, and be eagerly sought by the multitude of Zenana bands at work in our own country, whose greatest drawback thus far has been the want of just such information—minute, picturesque, fresh and constant. Subscriptions (one shilling each) may be sent to Messrs. Suter & Co., 32 Cheapside, London.

FRENCH EVANGELICAL SYNOD.—The Rev. Dr. Burt, of Nice, France, writes to the Presbyterian that a decree has been issued by President Thiers, providing for a meeting of the Reformed Church of France in national synod. This action has deeply stirred the whole French Protestant world, as well it might, in view of the fact that such a meeting has not been permitted for more than two hundred years. The last synod was held in 1659, and adjourned to meet, "with the good pleasure of his majesty," in three years. For one reason and another that "good pleasure" has never been given. Dr. Burt hopes that the meeting will be productive of happy results, particularly in purifying the church of its rationalistic elements, which, he believes, will be outvoted; he predicts also that the synod will adopt an orthodox confession, and organize the national church on an evangelical basis. The synod will not, however, be held for some months to come.

POWERFUL WORK OF GRACE.—A great revival meeting has been held by the Wesleyans in Bedford, England. During two weeks not less than two hundred and fifty professed conversion. The Wesleyan ministers of the place met and resolved to enter personally and immediately into a vigorous revival effort. A series of union services, to continue a full week, were appointed for St. Paul's chapel. The town was divided into twenty-two districts. Into each of these visitors went daily with small handbills announcing the subject for the evening and inviting the people. Almost without exception the visits were received, and the invitation was responded to by hundreds. The sermons were brief, and in each case followed by prayer services at the altar. Christians and penitents came forward together. Parents brought their children, and wives their husbands, and many whole households found the forgiveness of their sins. Members of other congregations were among the number.

FATHER HYACINTHE has written to Father Gratry a ringing letter, rebuking him for his tame adhesion to the dogma of infallibility. Here is a specimen paragraph: "What! Reverend Father! Only a few months ago you suddenly arose like a prophet in the confusion of Israel, and you assured us that you had received orders from God, and that, for the purpose of fulfilling them, you were ready to suffer whatever it was necessary to suffer! You wrote that demonstration, as logical as it was eloquent, which people might insult but not refute, and, after having established by facts that the question of infallibility is a gangrened question—to use your own expression—you uttered in your holy indignation that cry which still resounds, Namquid Deus indiget mendaci, vestro. 'Has God need of your falsehoods?' And now, before so many consciences which you have disturbed and left in suspense, you content yourself with writing to your bishop, with an ease of manner calculated to surprise and sadden: 'I wish, Monseigneur, merely to say to you what it seems to me it was not even necessary to say, viz., that I accept, like all my sacerdotal brethren, the decrees of the Vatican Council. Everything to the contrary that I may have written on this subject before the decision I disavow.' It is thus, then, that the truth and the conscience in the church of Jesus Christ are henceforth to be treated?"

The history of the Moravian Mission in Thibet is very interesting. It was founded in 1857—two brethren establishing themselves in a valley, among the Himalayas. A third missionary family joined them a few years afterward, but no results were seen for twelve years. Then a fourth missionary family were added to the force. A revival commenced. A second station was founded at Poo, and there success began to reward the efforts of the missionary, Pagell. "At first the mistrust and hatred of the people embarrassed him. No owner of land was willing to sell to him; no laborer was willing to help him build his house. In the year of his arrival the harvest failed throughout the country. Thereupon there was a great commotion among the people, already alarmed by a foreign enemy of their religion. They sent to consult the Grand Lama. He sent back the deputation, with this declaration: 'A stranger has come to dwell with you, and you have caused him all possible embarrassment. This is the reason of the failure of your crops. Do him as much good hereafter as you have done him evil, and your fields will become fruitful again.' The missionary's house soon became too small to hold the people who came to hear, and he resolved to build a chapel. Scarcely had this resolution become known, when one hundred and forty men came to offer their services, and in three days they collected the materials necessary for the building."

MR. SPURGEON has been staying in Rome; and, instead of doing as the Romans do, he succeeded in greatly astonishing some of them by his free utterances in the pulpit. The correspondent of the London Telegraph describes a service which he conducted at the Presbyterian church of the Rev. Dr. Lewis: "Perhaps the boldest thing Mr. Spurgeon ever said in his life was said in his running comments before the sermon, while reading a chapter of Scripture. Somehow or other, he introduced Rome and Roman affairs into his discourse; and, raising his hands and eyes at the same time—the hands clasped, the eyes turned up to the ceiling—he broke out, without warning or preparation of any kind, in the following terms: 'Oh, Victor Emanuel! Oh, Emanuel of heaven, thou true Victor! Help the Italians, bless and sanctify their cause, and make them prosperous.' I do not think the cry of 'Fire!' or 'Stop, thief!' uttered in the middle of the sermon, would have caused much more sensation than this prayer did. Some of the congregation looked frightened, some indignant, some painfully amused. A few old ladies seemed as if they would rush out of the church; but, being too far from the door, kept their seats. Others appeared bewildered, hardly knowing whether to laugh or to cry, and quite beside themselves. Others, again—and they formed the greater portion of the congregation, both as regards men and women—sat, as it were, spell-bound and devout-looking, wondering what would come next."

ONE of the two hundred and twenty thousand inhabitants of Rome, about five thousand before the occupation of the city by the Italian government were wholly devoted to the service of the church, and occupied what were termed "religious houses." These religious houses numbered nearly two hundred, of which ninety-five were occupied exclusively by men and eighty-five by women, and were divided among eighty-three different corporations, each having its own constitution, rules, and special field of work. In respect to character, they included one university, six colleges for general education, eighty-eight schools, thirty-two mission houses sending out priests as pastors of churches or preachers, and eleven belonging to societies engaged in hospital or other charitable work. This leaves a small number for the contemplative orders or monastic monks. Generally these corporations had but a single center, the great society of Jesuits possessing only one novitiate, and the Dominican order another. Whenever a religious body arose, at least one house in Rome became necessary to insure purity, life and permanence. Now, however, as the laws of united Italy conflict with monasticism, these religious houses are gradually becoming the property of the State. Just as all monasteries and convents throughout Italy were taken by the government, will the religious centers, educational institutions, and sacred treasures generally of the church in the city be taken possession of by the same government, as it becomes established in Rome.

CHRIST'S SYMPATHY.

Goodness may not always be sympathetic. We can well believe in the love of God, when we have so many evidences of it in the provisions of salvation. There is tenderness, pity, compassion in the infinite Father toward His erring creatures. God alone perfectly comprehends the consequences of guilt and sin in its future and eternal developments. Neither men nor angels can completely fathom the depths of that wretchedness which the lost soul is doomed to experience. God alone knows the sufferings endured in this world. No human capacity can go over the terrible array in detail, much less can it gather up and grasp the whole at a single glance; and yet with his knowledge of sin and suffering, and with his love for the fallen and wretched, passing all human love, we can scarcely conceive of God as "touched with the feeling of our infirmities."

In angelic natures the impossibility of this fellowship in suffering is apparent. They are moved by a benevolence only less boundless than that of God himself. They can truly rejoice over the repentance of one sinner, and minister tenderly to the heirs of salvation, but they can have no proper feeling of such weakness as springs from the flesh in its companionship with a corrupt and fallen nature. Their pinions of light know nothing of weariness, and their spirits of flame have never been darkened and saddened by the shadow of sin. In the wilderness and in Gethsemane they could do scarcely more than gather upon the outskirts of those terrible passages in the Redeemer's conflict with the powers of darkness. However near they may come to us in their vigilance and solicitude, there is still a vast distance between them and our human nature. The general import is clear enough; the unseen and spiritual enemies are more manifest to them than to us, and the tremendous interests involved are measured as no human intelligence can take them in. But there are elements in the struggle which baffle their efforts to fully conceive. So far as they are like ourselves, they are capable of sympathy; but beyond this, and as we enter the conditions of our depraved and fleshly natures, they can be little more than anxious spectators of a scene which there is nothing in themselves to explain.

The capacity of man to feel for his fellows is limited by his very imperfections. Without goodness and benevolence, indifference prevails. Where the moral condition is right, there is wanting complete perception of the suffering in any given case, and of those variations and modifying circumstances which may exist. It is a difficulty with the best of benevolent natures to adequately feel for others. There are points in which experiences touch, but there are also many in which they are far removed. It is hard for the strong to enter into the trials of the weak, for the well to appreciate the temper of the sick, for the learned to have perfect patience with the ignorant and illiterate, and for great and highly endowed minds to deal kindly and considerately with those of low and medium gifts. Both selfishness and incapacity are in the way of complete sympathy. To feel all, and to feel perfectly, would crush. Only a superhuman organization could bear a weight and strain like this. And yet human sympathy, in its best manifestations, is the most beautiful, helpful and healing of virtues. One touch of nature, thus refined and purified, "makes all the world akin." However helpful our sympathy may be, it is often helpless. What it inspires us to undertake is altogether beyond our performance. In the physical pain of others, in their mental anguish and in their spiritual perplexities, we may be profoundly moved, and wrought up to the highest tension of desire to assume the burden, or in any way to relieve the sufferer. But we are absolutely helpless.

The sympathy of Christ stands out in relief as something different from the love and compassion of God, to be distinguished from the benevolence of angels, and as every way more perfect and effective than our purest and deepest fellowship in human suffering. He knows, as he only can know, the anatomy of the body and the soul, and how every fiber and faculty of this wondrous compound is swayed and tortured under the force of pain and anguish. Without sin, he approached so nearly its conditions as to meet the most powerful assaults of temptation. He was tempted "like as we are." The diabolical, the fleshly, the worldly were encountered in their fullest strength, and his soul passed through every strait of anguish known to us in the conflict with sin. All the lines of a perfect sympathy meet in him as in no other being in the universe. Knowledge, feeling and helpfulness are all complete in him.

And it is a comforting assurance which we have, that in his heavenly exaltation the Savior retains his sympathetic character. He is at the right hand of the Majesty on high in his humanity, and it is there, and now, and ever, that he is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities." It is as the ascended and glorified Christ that it is written of him: "For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." He was qualified by the assumption of our nature, and by the temptations and sufferings of his life on earth, to be in heaven "a friend that sticketh closer than a brother." Enthroned, as he is, above all, and invested with the purple of everlasting and universal empire, and by the mightiness and splendors of his regal state almost lifted beyond the gaze of the seraphim, he is still touched with the feeling of our infirmities. The sorrows and trials of the humblest saint, the death-throes of the obscurest believer, penetrate through all these ranks and atmospheres of dazzling radiance, and touch the Redeemer's heart. If we cannot apprehend God, if we wearily ponder and speculate where we find no ground to tread on, we may rest in this blessed assurance. We may feel how inadequate, how utterly powerless is earthly tenderness to sustain, and at the same time turn to the loving and ever-living Christ. No submissive sufferer, no earnest seeker is without his sympathy. Especially in the great battle of believers for salvation does Christ claim his rightful relationship as brother and near of kin. From his throne he is not ashamed to call them brethren, and in all their warfare he cheers them by his presence, and sustains them to the end.

WE SINCERELY SYMPATHIZE with Bro. Glenn and his afflicted house in the bereavement they have experienced. The folded lamb is better off. The good Shepherd has only taken the precious child to himself, and he hath done all things well. A note from Bro. J. W. Shores, dated Troy, Alabama, January 29, says:

My Editor: The Rev. J. W. Glenn, pastor of the Methodist church in this place, has met with a sad bereavement in the death of his little daughter, who was only four years old. She died in Glennville, Alabama, at the residence of her uncle, Bro. D. V. Glenn, on Wednesday, the tenth instant. The father arrived there on the eleventh, only to look upon the lifeless form of his child. The sweet little spirit has gone to join its mother in the better land.

LOGAN D. DAMERON.—We observe with pleasure that the prosecution of this gentleman, formerly the business manager of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, has been withdrawn, and the case has been stricken from the docket of the court. Bro. Dameron was also fully acquitted by a committee of investigation of the church to which he belongs in St. Louis, and his character, most foully and unjustly aspersed, is fully vindicated before the church and the world.

DER FAMILIENFREUND.—This is now the name of our German paper. Family Friend is the interpretation. The size has been doubled, and the paper much improved. Judging from the appearance, and from the testimony of our German friends, we must pronounce it a most excellent and valuable sheet. It is issued every other Wednesday, at 112 Camp street.

A WORTHY OBJECT.—The Rev. C. F. Evans is in this city soliciting aid for our weak and struggling church at Monroe, Louisiana. The Conference, regarding the matter as most urgent and important, authorized him to visit the churches and solicit contributions. We trust the appeal will be generously responded to by our friends here and elsewhere.

WHY DON'T YOU TAKE A CLASS IN SUNDAY SCHOOL?

"Because I want to rest when Sunday comes." We admit that this is very natural; but we suspect it is as natural and proper for most other people as it is for you, and if this desire for rest is to be generally gratified, we are afraid the little ones will be without the Sabbath school and its sweet influences altogether. But may it not be a question whether it is proper to work so hard all the week, and so late on Saturday night, that we don't feel like giving an hour on the Sabbath to the great Shepherd and his lambs? Besides, it is said by observant people that the Sunday school work is really a recreation, for it brings "change delectable."

"But the fact is, I don't feel like it." Sorry to hear you say so. It seems to me your heart ought to "leap with inward joy" to assist in so sweet a task. Can it be possible that you can remain unfeeling when little children, with their young lives and great possibilities, plead for help? Have you not a seed-thought you would like to sow in the virgin soil of their hearts, that may spring up and bear fruit again long after you are homed with the good, aye, and hear it forever more? Then hasten to the Sunday school, and gather the little ones around you, whose hearts, like the mouths of the birdlings, are waiting eagerly to receive whatever you are willing to give. Have you not some beautiful image of truth or love that you would like to impress upon a susceptible heart, from which time nor change shall ever erase it?

"I am not competent. I don't know how to teach." This possibly may be so, but I dare not risk your friendship by saying so. Come, consider that you were once a child. Bethink you what you wished as a child to know. Life's experiences must have taught you much that the child does not know, and needs to be taught. "But I am not familiar with the Bible." What! not familiar with your Bible!—your Father's will, bequeathing you an "inheritance" eternal in the heavens! Not familiar with the wayhill of your journey, the chart of your voyage! I regret to hear it. But will you remain ignorant? No need to do so. So many Bibles, so many cheap commentaries and helps to the study and comprehension of the Book of books.

Then, if you do not know it, though I think you must, let me tell you there is no better way to learn than by teaching. It calls out our knowledge, it shows us our needs, and sends us variously in search of help. Do, pray, make no more excuses, but be up and doing. Resolve, while we are talking, that you will go to Sabbath school. Say next Sunday morning: "Mr. Superintendent, I have come to work in the nursery of the Lord. I wish I was more skilled than I am; but I will do the best I can." My word for it, you do your best and you will never regret it.

BISHOP MARVIN IN TEXAS.

From the Bishop's last letter (January 6) to the St. Louis Christian Advocate we quote:

There are a good many Mexicans in San Antonio, and the German population is very large. Infidelity is outspoken and organized. The Sabbath of the Lord is despised. Evangelical agencies are feeble. There is one Methodist congregation, two Presbyterian, one Lutheran and one Episcopal. But they are all small, and have a hard struggle to exist. Our congregation is, perhaps, as large as any other, if not the largest in the place. Of course I speak of the Protestant churches. The Roman Catholic churches are strong. The actual membership of our church is but sixty-five. But the brethren begin to take heart. Signs of prosperity begin to appear. The general tone of society is improving. Bad men and evil deeds are falling more into disrepute. The improvement is slow but perceptible. Railroads are coming and will break up the supremacy of foreign influences by bringing American citizens of intelligence. So they labor in hope.

I preached from Friday until Monday night, with the usual Sunday services, and a sacramental occasion. An incident of great interest to us all was the administration of the sacrament by our Mexican brother to four of the converts who are the fruit of his labors. They came to the table by themselves, he first addressing them in their own language upon the nature of the ordinance. Several Americans present understood the Spanish language, and with one accord were gratified to find his instructions so judicious and his statements so accurate. When they came to the table I gave him the elements and he distributed them to the new converts, who for the first time received the bread and wine according to our Lord's own institution, in remembrance of him.

This first sacrament in connection with the Mexican mission I shall never forget. It was witnessed with profound sensibility by members of various evangelical churches present. We prayed that these might be the "first fruits" of a very great harvest to grow and increase in the hands of the reapers for ages and ages to come. Is not this the handful of corn in the top of the mountains? Shall we see the fruit of it waving like Lebanon? May the Lord of the harvest send forth more laborers, for the fields are white!

I left San Antonio on Wednesday morning, in company with Rev. W. J. Joyce, agent of the American Bible Society. Thirty miles brought us to Sutherland Springs, where I preached at night to a very small congregation, made up of very intelligent people. Thirty miles the next day brought us to Helena, where I preached at night again to a crowded assembly of attentive hearers. Forty miles more on Friday brought us to Goliad, and here I am now, still on the bank of the San Antonio river, which is not perceptibly larger here than at its source.

We arrived here last night just in time to be ahead of a norther. Under a hospitable roof, by a blazing fire, I hear the rush of the wind with a deep feeling of comfort and gratitude, not unmixed with sympathy for the thousands that are out on the prairies to-day.

Another Response.—A Proposition.

MR. EDITOR: I have $100, deposited with me by a member of the Carondelet Street church, for Centenary College, provided nine other persons will come forward to make up the sum of $1,000.

W. V. TUDOR.

FEBRUARY 5, 1872.

REV. H. EBERS, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, transferred from the Louisiana Conference to the Virginia Conference, arrived in Baltimore on the twenty-eighth of January. Bro. Blogg has taken him to Petersburg, to place him in charge of the German work there. He is a very pleasant young man, has resided in Texas for many years, and received an English education since he came from Germany to this country. We doubt not he will prove a valuable coadjutor.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY.

The following is the final action of the convention at Memphis:

Resolved, by the convention, That measures be adopted looking to the establishment, as speedily as practicable, of an institution of learning of the highest order and upon the surest basis, where the youth of the church and country may prosecute theological, literary, scientific and professional studies to an extent as great and in a manner as thorough as their wants demand.

Resolved, That this institution shall be called the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Resolved, That it shall consist, at present, of five schools or departments, viz.: 1. A theological school for the training of our young preachers, who, on application for admission, shall present a recommendation from a Quarterly or an Annual Conference, and shall have attained a standard of education equal to that required for admission on trial into an Annual Conference; and instruction to them shall be free, both in the theological and the literary and scientific departments. 2. A literary and scientific school. 3. A normal school. 4. A law school. 5. A medical school.

Resolved, That the sum of $1,000,000 is necessary in order to realize fully the object desired; and not less than $500,000 must be secured as a condition precedent to the opening of any department of the University.

Resolved, That the location of the University shall be left to the decision of the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Resolved, That the carrying out of this whole scheme is hereby committed to the following persons, viz.: William C. Johnson, Robert J. Morgan, Smith W. Moore, Milton Brown, Alexander L. P. BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE HOME OF GOD'S PEOPLE. By Rev. William L. Gage. Worthington, Dustin & Co., Hartford, Connecticut, 1872.

This book is, of course, about the land of the Bible—geographical, historical, ethnological and topographical, and telling in popular style everything known or discovered concerning the countries and places hallowed by scriptural reference. It is not a hastily written work, and every page bears the marks of much study and a thorough acquaintance with the subject. Every good Sunday school library should be supplied with it. The illustrations are numerous, and will prove exceedingly helpful to the student of the Bible. The volume is a handsome octavo of 557 pages. It is sold by subscription. We are indebted to S. T. Goodwyn, Esq., of New Orleans, agent and publisher, for a copy.

MORE THAN SHE COULD BEAR. A story of the Cachupin war in Texas, A. D. 1812-13. By Hesper Bendhow. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, 1872.

The author has chosen a new and exciting field of romance, and has made an exciting story. The materials are for the most part historical, and the work is a graphic reproduction of the wild, adventurous and bloody conflict which for years was carried on between the frontier waves of our population and the military power of Mexico. The volume is a duodecimo of 439 pages, and tastefully bound in cloth. For sale by James A. Gresham, New Orleans.

ORAL TRAINING IN NATURAL SCIENCE AND GENERAL KNOWLEDGE. By H. Barnard. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, 1871.

This work is intended for school teachers, and also for private instruction. The art of teaching is most important, and this volume cannot but prove exceedingly helpful to those who are engaged in schools or in the instruction of private classes. Besides showing how to teach, these lessons furnish the teacher with a tolerably complete epitome of natural science. Price, $1, sent by mail, postpaid.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE for the weeks ending January 20 and 27 contains, among other important articles: Church and State in Italy; American Experience in the Relief of the Poor; Old Fashionable London; The Queen of the French; A Reminiscence of Eton Life; Jowett's Plato; The Story of the Hostages; Political Influence of Humor in America; Indian Forests; Affairs at Pekin; Ross Neil's Lady Jane Grey; Public Calamities and the Public Bearing; The People's Diction of the Future; The Quakers and the International; with the continuation of a remarkable serial, "The Maid of Sker," etc. The subscription price of the Living Age is $8 a year, or for $10 any one of the American $4 magazines is sent with the Living Age for a year. Littell & Gay, Boston, publishers.

OLD AND NEW for February has: Unpublished Writings of Washington; Sexual Science; Selfhood and Sacrifice; Washington, the General; Washington's Expression of Countenance; The Standard Likeness of Washington; Washington's Agricultural Letters, and other articles.

THE PICAYUNE.

On the first instant Mr. A. M. Holbrook retired from the proprietorship and management of this old and well-known journal, and transferred it to the "New Orleans Printing and Publishing Company." This company is composed of the great body of our best citizens, and the paper promises to be the advocate and organ of the best interests of the people and community. The price of the weekly and daily have been greatly reduced, and single copies are sold at five cents. We heartily welcome the new management, and sincerely hope that the principles upon which it is proposed to conduct the Picayune may be firmly adhered to. We quote a single but suggestive paragraph from the salutatory of the new proprietorship:

This implies that it will not, while denouncing Satan, assist in his works, or while howling against the sin, bug the sinners; but will hold Satan and his works, the sinner and the sin, in equal abhorrence and detestation.

And this implies that it will manifest in all proper ways a steadfast friendship for religion, without invidious reference to distinctive creeds, in the firm persuasion that the most frightful superstitions are those of unbridled infidelity, that without the conservative and reassuring influences of an intelligent religious faith and culture, society would plunge into chaos and despair, and that it is only a God-fearing people whom no prosperity can corrupt and no disaster can crush.

MORTALITY OF LITERATURE.—A late French writer, M. de Tapies, gives the following tables of literary mortality in his "Statistical Contrast between France and England." Out of 1,000 published books, 600 never pay the cost of printing, 200 just pay the expenses, 100 return a slight profit, and only 100 show a substantial gain. Of these 1,000 books, 650 are forgotten by the end of the year, and 150 more at the end of three years; only 50 survive seven years publicity. Of the 50,000 publications put forth in the seventeenth century, hardly more than fifty have an established reputation. Of the 80,000 works published in the eighteenth century, posterity has hardly preserved more than were rescued from oblivion in the seventeenth century. Men have been writing books these three thousand years, and there are hardly more than five hundred writers throughout the globe who have survived the outrages of time and the forgetfulness of man.

THE will of Isaac Rich has been opened. He bequeathed all his property, except a few legacies to his relatives and one or two personal friends, to the University, of which the Boston Theological Seminary is a department. William Claflin, William H. West and John Goldsborough are executors. The property is to be untouched for three years. Ten thousand dollars a year is then to be applied to the University; after five years, twenty thousand, and after ten years, the whole income. The property is now valued from one and a half to over two millions. Such a disposition of it insures not less than three millions, and probably four, by 1882. This is the largest gift ever made for higher education in America.—Zion's Herald.

Obituaries.

J. N. KLEIN.

The following resolutions were passed by the Vicksburg Quarterly Conference:

Resolved, That this Quarterly-Meeting Conference learns with sorrow and regret the demise of our late brother and member of this body, J. N. Klein, steward in this church.

Resolved, That in his death this church has lost an estimable member, and this Conference an efficient, able and liberal co-laborer.

Resolved, That in Bro. Klein we recognized one eminently worthy in all the relations of life—as husband, father, citizen, and member of the church of God.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved widow and fatherless children, and refer them our heartfelt condolence; and could in our prayers commend them to him whose ear is ever open to their cries.

Died, at his residence near Tallula, Madison parish, Louisiana, of chronic dysentery, November 30, 1871, T. WARREN BRISCOE, aged thirty-nine years.

Bro. Briscoe was well known to a number of the members of the Louisiana Conference, having been connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church South for upward of ten years. He was born in Mississippi and extensively connected with prominent families of that State and of Louisiana. He first married Miss E. M. Humphrys, in April, 1858, and the year following both joined the church, under the ministry, I think, of Rev. R. S. Trippett. During his residence in Claiborne parish, February 25, 1861, his wife died. One child survives as the fruit of this union. In June, 1867, he married Miss M. Scott, who, with two children, survives to mourn his loss.

Bro. Briscoe was afflicted from childhood, and often suffered because of the disease that finally ended his life. He was a man of courtly presence and winning manners, and wielded an astonishing influence. Without political ambition, although only the position of a planter in the community, he yet seemed so endowed with rightful qualities as to be possessed of unusual influence among men. The colored people were never more easily led than by his address. He never permitted unchristian familiarity, never appeared to seek to control them by any superior and kind way for gaining their confidence, so largely were they benefited by receiving his advice, and so completely did he win their affections, that alone the word of Bro. Briscoe was sufficient to quell the most threatening disturbance. Several times did he prevent imminent outbreaks by his own unsupported word. The community feel their loss, and to-day there is no one who can fill his place.

As a member of the Church Bro. Briscoe never lost the opportunity of proving his worth. As regard to personal religion he was evident, not disposed to exalt himself, and perhaps was not always as fully persuaded of his accepted state as he wished to be; but he was sincere, earnest, and, so far as I could judge in a short acquaintance, very consistent. I have no doubt that he was a regular reader, and had he been in communion with a church of size and liberty I believe he would have been more demonstrative, and in better personal experience. He was very desirous of having preaching in the community, and perhaps did all he could to secure it. But he stood, as a Methodist, alone, no other member being near him. Limited, from the character and size of the community, as his opportunities were, he still was the means of considerable good religiously. It was a matter of constant regret that he could not bring about a better state of things. About two weeks before his death Rev. B. F. Alexander spent the night with him conversed of his state of mind, and religious matters generally. This conversation had a great and happy influence on his mind. He spoke [illegible] its effect. Knowing that he could not live long, he set his house in order. He had no fear of death, and anticipated a home in heaven, and, though suffering till just before the end, bore all with great patience.

My pen fails to do justice to the noble character and life of this man. He deserves a place in the memory of the good. The church suffers when such as he—men who, we may say, stand on the outposts and among strangers to Methodism—illustrate its principles and uphold its honor. But, whoever may strive hereafter to cultivate the waste places of Madison parish will find a potent influence to aid him in the memory of Bro. Briscoe, and need never fear to refer to him as a representative of Methodism and Christianity. May the blessing of God be with the bereaved widow and the fatherless children.

F. T. RAWSON, Pastor.

BRADFORD DAVIS COFFEY was born in Jefferson county, Mississippi, December 25, 1850, and died November 27, 1871 a short but noble life.

Gifted by nature with many excellent traits of character, possessing superior intellectual powers, and having had good educational advantages, both secular and religious, he was a young man of great promise to his family, his country, and his church.

He had finished his education and was preparing to enter upon the practice of his profession when he died. His law diploma came by mail from the University of Mississippi where he graduated the day he was buried.

Dedicated to God by baptism in infancy, and raised in the nurture and admonition of the Lord by pious parents, he was an early convert to Christ, and was taking a high position as a Christian. When but ten years of age he gave his hand to the church in token of his desire to be recognized as a member. His religious experience was clear and well defined. He came to the full assurance of faith. He lived in the faithful discharge of his duty. He died in peace.

On the tenth of last November he delivered an address before the thirteenth anniversary of the Female Financial Association of the Fayette circuit, Mississippi Conference. The address was timely and eloquent, full of excellent thoughts and amiable sentiments. The subject was: The Claims of the Gospel Ministry to a Competent Support. He delivered this address with the fever on him which terminated his life. It was requested by the society for publication, but he modestly declined to furnish it.

During his last illness he suffered greatly, but with patient submission to the will of his heavenly Father. He spoke of his home in heaven, and expressed his desire to go to it. He said he was weary, and wanted to go home to rest. He was anxious to live on account of his widowed mother and orphan brothers and sisters; but other than that he was willing to die. His last words were to his mother: "You know there will be a great day, and we will meet again."

His obsequies were attended by a large concourse of sorrowing friends. He was buried in the church-yard in Fayette, on the twenty-ninth of November, amidst a profusion of tears.—Rev. xiv. 13.

His pastor, W. B. LEWIS.

At a regular meeting of Fayette Sabbath school the following preamble and resolutions were passed:

To the Officers and Members of Fayette Sabbath School: The undersigned, your committee appointed to draft resolutions on the death of our late companion, Bradford D. Coffey, would respectfully submit the following:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God, in His wise providence, to remove by death our beloved and cherished friend, Bradford Davis Coffey, who has been from childhood to manhood an exemplary member of our Sabbath school, having been enrolled in 1856, in the sixth year of his age; be it, therefore,

Resolved, That in his death our school has lost a zealous friend, a faithful scholar and an earnest Christian, one whose ambition was to excel in literature, scholastic learning and biblical knowledge.

Resolved, That not only has the Sabbath school cause and the church been deprived of one of its tried and firm advocates, but society has lost a young man whose talents gave great promise of future usefulness.

Resolved, That we sincerely sympathize with the bereaved family in the recent demise of a dutiful son and an affectionate and devoted brother.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and one to the family of our deceased brother, and minutes made thereof on our record.

JAMES McCLURE,
C. W. REED,
SAMUEL RICHARDSON,
Committee.

BELLS.—We call attention to a slight change in the advertisement of Messrs. E. A. & G. R. Meneely, founders of the Troy bells.

COSTUMES, ETC.—A large assortment of costumes and fancy articles are to be found at the establishment of Madam Grimx, No. 93 Conti street.

TARPAULINS.—One of the oldest and most extensive firms dealing in the above article is that of C. H. Allen & Co., No. 81 New Levee street. See advertisement in to-day's paper.

BLOODED STOCK.—Mr. C. J. Shepherd anticipates the early arrival of his fine blooded cattle, sheep and other stock, which have been delayed, and hopes in a few days to be able to meet the wishes of purchasers. He may be seen at 39 Carondelet street.

MR. S. A. SHUMWAY, DEALER IN SUGAR AND MOLASSES.—Those who are interested in the sale or purchase of sugar and molasses would do well to make the acquaintance of Mr. Shumway, No. 10 Conti street. See his advertisement in another column.

FAIRBANKS' SOUTHERN SCALE DEPOT.—Mr. W. R. Bowman, agent for Fairbanks' scales, at 53 Camp street, keeps a well-assorted supply of scales and corn mills at reasonable rates. Those interested will find his advertisement in the ADVOCATE, and should call at his depot.

MESSRS. W. J. FRIERSON & CO.—The gentlemen constituting the above firm have large experience as cotton factors, and are worthy of the confidence of those who are seeking for a reliable house to which to intrust their business. We commend their advertisement in this issue to the attention of our readers.

WILLIAM HOLIAN, boot, shoe, trunk and valise manufacturer and dealer, Nos. 99 and 101 Canal street, deserves much credit for the extensive trade which, by close personal attention to business, and a determination to give satisfaction to customers, he has built up. We take pleasure in calling attention to his advertisement in another column.

LIFE INSURANCE.—The Equitable Life Assurance Society, of which our worthy fellow-citizen, Mr. A. P. Cleveland, is general agent, will be remembered as one to which attention has been repeatedly invited in the columns of the ADVOCATE. We are satisfied that all we have said in favor of the association is true, and we take pleasure in repeating that we regard it as one of the best in the country. An advertisement will be found in the columns of this issue.

GEORGE MCGIBBON & CO., 141 CANAL STREET.—But few persons familiar with Canal street in former years will fail to remember the extensive and elegant establishment presided over so many years by Mr. E. Gignel. We can assure them that Messrs. McGibbon & Co., the worthy successors of Mr. Gignel, are fully sustaining the reputation of the house. The large assortment of fancy and staple goods is varied and beautiful. Call and see for yourself.

FOR NEW YORK.—The Merchants' Steamship Line consists at present of six staunch and fast-sailing steamers, with superior accommodations for passengers. We have found the company's agents attentive and obliging to shippers. We have much pleasure in calling attention to the advertisement of Mr. John H. Ludwigsen, the worthy agent of the company for this city, and trust that the patronage of the company may continue to amply reward them for their enterprise.

GINGER ALE, manufactured by Messrs. Cantrell & Cochrane, of Belfast, Ireland, is said to be a very delightful temperance beverage, used extensively in the old country. It is claimed that it is an antidote to acidity and dyspepsia, and an excellent drink for the hot and debilitating seasons. It will doubtless have an extensive patronage at the soda fountains. Mr. R. L. Neill, 198 Gravier street, is wholesale agent for this city. The names of Cantrell & Cochrane appear on the bottle, cork and label of the genuine.

WE CALLED a few days since at the musical emporium of Messrs. Zorn & Bremer, No. 176 Canal street, and found that they had just received a large invoice of Pleyel pianos, which, coming direct from the manufactory, they are able to sell at very low prices. For brilliancy of tone, elasticity of touch and durability of finish these pianos have a world-wide reputation. Messrs. Zorn & Bremer have also the Union, Steck and Hallet & Cumston pianos, Smith's American organs, accordeons, violins, etc., all guaranteed to give satisfaction, and for sale at reasonable prices.

LIVERPOOL AND MISSISSIPPI STEAMSHIP COMPANY.—There is nothing in all the enterprises for which capital and business talent have been combined more vital to our prosperity than our direct trade with Europe. Withhold from New York, for even a few months, the proceeds of her vast importations for the consumers in the South and West, and her prosperity and credit would descend like an arch with the key-stone removed. The importer's share of the profits on imported goods is too frequently the lion's share. There is therefore nothing connected with our shipping interest which we could with greater pleasure direct attention to, or speak a word of well-deserved encouragement, than the company to which we are indebted for the line of splendid steamships running between New Orleans and Liverpool. Every citizen is interested in their success. We refer our readers to their advertisement in our columns.

DR. JOHN G. HADFIELD, 156 Carondelet street, New Orleans, has opened up a good suit of rooms for the treatment of all diseases, especially chronic diseases of years' standing. The mode of treatment is called the Equalizer Treatment, the principle of which is to relieve the whole or any part of the body of a portion of the atmospheric pressure resting on the same, by means of inclosing any diseased part in an air-tight receiver, in which a vacuum is made, and blood rushes into this part with a much greater force. It is claimed many cases of paralysis, rheumatism, lung affections, female weaknesses, nervous debility and many other diseases can be cured. The treatment is based upon scientific principles, and it would seem from the testimonials of physicians and patients in the doctor's possession, and the patronage he is daily receiving, that there is merit in his system of cure. Those who are diseased would do well to examine the process, which can be done by sending or calling for descriptive circulars. See his advertisements in this paper.

FEMALE BOARDING SCHOOL.

THE SPRING SESSION of this school, located in the pleasant town of Athens, East Tennessee, on the East Tennessee and Georgia railroad, midway between Knoxville and Chattanooga, will begin on MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 1872.

The school is in charge of Mrs. M. W. Sullins, assisted by competent teachers. The boarding department is in the care of Rev. T. and Mrs. Sullins.

Athens is an eligible location for schools, noted for health, and was the resort of visitors from the South, last summer, in quest of health and pleasure.

Young ladies educated in this fine climate will live longer and enjoy more of life than if educated in the South; and the difference in expense would more than pay the passage to and from this place, so that parents in the South can educate their children here cheaper than at home.

The school rooms are in the same building as the family residence, and pupils can attend school at all times without exposure. Thoroughness in studies, promoting health, developing mental and moral faculties is the constant aim of the principal.

Terms.

Tuition in Literary Department, per term of five months, from $10 to $18, according to studies, payable half in advance, the other half at the middle of the session.

A BABY HOOK.

[illegible]

"Tinkle-tinkle"—it paused, and a dainty lesson falling,
Cried to its fellow-gipsy: "O bobolink! bobolink!
To June, the world's delight" and a wonderful stream of trilling
Echoed the singing water—"O sweetheart, come and drink!"

Come and drink, music, truly! I know he has been already,
For all his song is the brooklet's carried up on the wing;
"Tinkle-tinkle," went on the sweet little voice and steady;
Only a little longer, and I should have learned to sing!

HOW ANNIE CARTER BECAME A GOOD SAMARITAN.

BY CHARLOTTE GRAY.

The hour for Sunday school had come in the pleasant country church, and now was nearly gone. To the group of happy little girls, gathered around their teacher, Miss Harris explained the lesson about the Good Samaritan. To-day the familiar story seemed to have a new interest for them, and their eyes brightened as they listened to the account of the kindness of the noble traveler to the stranger, and wondered why they had never thought it so beautiful before. As the bell gave the signal for closing school, and Miss Harris finished her story, she said: "Won't each of my little girls be a Good Samaritan this week?"

One of the class to whom this question was addressed was Annie Carter, and, as she walked slowly home, she asked herself how she could please her teacher by living her lesson. She hardly knew how to begin; certainly there were no wounded men waiting to be healed. Indeed, she had never heard of any robbers in her quiet village, and the more she looked down the pleasant road and away to the hills just putting on their gay autumn colors, and as she listened to the twitter of a bird or chirp of a cricket—sounds quite unlike the groans of a dying man—she decided that could not be the place for a Good Samaritan.

Annie had no mother, and often, instead of going to her father with her troubles, she would think them over to herself, in hope of finding some way out of her difficulties. So on this Sunday afternoon, when tired of reading, as she sat watching the cows come home and the chickens go to roost, the same subject came back again. Annie's father had told her of John Howard, the great and good man, who spent his time and money in visiting the London prisons, and ministering to the wants of those confined there; she had heard, too, of Florence Nightingale, called the Angel of the Hospital, from her being ever present to relieve the sufferings of the wounded soldiers. These, she thought, were the examples she ought to imitate. Grown-up people, it seemed, were the ones to do good deeds, not little girls like her.

She jumped up bright and early on Monday morning, for many things were to be done on that day—dolls to be dressed, her playhouse to be put in order—and no housekeeper, rising with the burden of a new week's work before her, could feel more important than did our little Annie; yet even thus early her lesson of the day before came to her mind, and in her morning prayer she asked that her Heavenly Father would teach her how to be a Good Samaritan.

All through the day she played and thought, ran on errands for Katie, and thought again, but still the light did not come. In the afternoon as she sat out under the trees, surrounded by her dolls, she stopped playing to watch a figure coming slowly up the road. No, she could not be mistaken, it surely was Aunt Eunice; and Annie wished she could run away, so that she might not speak to her.

Now Aunt Eunice was an old Indian woman, who lived alone in a hut not far away; she was known to be cross, disagreeable, and by no means attractive to little girls. At this time she was returning from one of her occasional trips to a distant town, where she went to sell the baskets which she made at home. Both her hands were filled with bundles, while over her shoulder was hung a large bag, that caused the poor woman to bend beneath its weight, until just as she reached the top of the hill she sank down, as if unable to take another step. At this sight Annie's heart softened, and to show her pity for the poor traveler, who, she thought, must be faint from her long walk, she hurried to the house for four of Katie's best ginger-snaps, and creeping softly up behind the Indian woman, dropped them in her lap and ran off again. At a little distance Annie saw her cakes caught up and eaten, and as the last one disappeared Aunt Eunice turned toward her and said: "Thank you, miss; if it hadn't been for this bag, seems to me I never could have got home." On hearing these pleasant words Annie ventured a little nearer, and seeing the [illegible] became to her that she might help the old woman carry the bundles to her home. It was quite an effort to offer her aid, but when they were fairly started, Annie, trotting along with her arms full of bundles, was saying a word really enjoyed it, and the thanks she received at her journey's end fully repaid her for all the sacrifice she had made.

Before Annie slept that night she decided that to-morrow she must go to her father with her trouble, and ask him how she could be a Good Samaritan; for now another day had passed, and still she seemed no nearer learning how herself. Yet Annie's dreams were sweet, for in the darkness an angel seemed to come and stand beside her, bearing in her hidden crown, upon which was written: "Annie Carter, the Good Samaritan." But Annie shrank back; there must be some mistake; it couldn't be for her, she had done nothing to deserve that name. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," the angel said, and was gone.

It was only a dream, but Annie was happy now, for she understood the way. The Child at Home.

LETTERS OF RECOMMENDATION.

A gentleman advertised for a boy to assist him in his office, and nearly fifty applicants presented themselves to him. Out of the whole number he in a short time selected one, and dismissed the rest. "I should like to know," said a friend, "on what ground you selected that boy, who had not a single recommendation?" "You are mistaken," said the gentleman, "he had a great many. He wiped his feet when he came in, and closed the door after him, showing that he was careful. He gave up his seat instantly to that lame old man, showing that he was kind and thoughtful. He took off his cap when he came in, and answered my questions promptly and respectfully, showing that he was polite and gentlemanly. He picked up the hook which I had purposely laid on the floor and replaced it on the table, while all the rest stepped over it or shoved it aside; and he waited quietly for his turn, instead of pushing and crowding, showing that he was honest and orderly. When I talked with him I noticed that his clothes were carefully brushed, his hair in nice order, and his teeth as white as milk; and when he wrote his name I noticed that his finger-nails were clean, instead of being tipped with jet, like that handsome little fellow's in the blue jacket. Don't you call those letters of recommendation? I do, and I would give more for what I can tell about a boy by using my eyes ten minutes than all the fine letters he can bring me."

The Farm and Garden.

NEW METHOD OF GRAFTING.

The London Gardener's Chronicle says: "A French gardener has adopted a new method of grafting and budding pear trees. The wild stocks, he says, succeed best when budded, as their branches then continue to grow as if no operation had been performed; while in the case of grafting, the stock being cut down to the ground, wastes vitality, which the graft is not able to supply for a long time, so that during the first year progress is very slow. In order to remedy this he leaves two shoots on each side of the stock, which he splits half way down, and then, shaving away the sides of the lower end of the scion, he inserts the latter in the cleft and binds up in the usual way. If the operation is performed in the opening spring, you pinch off the shoots in order to prevent the stem from growing too fast, and cut back at the end of the year; if the grafting is performed in the autumn, the cutting is executed at the end of the winter. The graft having then taken well, it has force enough to excite the action of the spongioles, so that much trouble and loss of time are saved. He has a like plan for budding. It is well known that this operation cannot be adopted after the rise of the sap has ceased; he therefore cuts his bud with a small portion of wood attached to it, so that the lower part of the eye is, of course, not only uninjured, but supported by the ligneous matter; the budding piece is then inserted either in a slit in the top of the stock, or into an opening made in the middle of the stock, with a knife, and into which the bud, or rather the small pivot of wood attached to it, is inserted. The operation may be regarded, in fact, as grafting with a single eye."

HORSES.

At this season of the year horses are usually out of condition, consequently they require to be more carefully attended to, both as regards their food, grooming and exercise. Long yoking should be avoided. The stomach of the horse being comparatively small, he requires to be fed regularly at intervals of not more than five or six hours. The stable should be ventilated, and all currents of cold air guarded against. When the horse returns to the stable from the yoke, he should be rubbed over, and afterward more thoroughly groomed—say about eight o'clock. The too common practice of allowing horses, when warm, to drink water generally proves injurious to their general health, and is not an unfrequent cause of colic. If the horse's legs are washed in a pond, these should be afterward carefully rubbed, otherwise inflammation of the cellular tissues of one or more of the legs may be induced. This disease is commonly known by the term "weed," and greatly deteriorates the value and general usefulness of horses.

Foals may now be separated from their dams and carefully fed on suitable food. A small quantity of oats may be given about twice a day, and in the evening less than one-half a pailful of cooked food, which may consist of light grain, chaff, refuse potatoes, with or without a portion of turnips. It is generally found a desirable [illegible] place a foal [illegible] young [illegible] unless there [illegible] to [illegible] two foals on the [illegible] they should be kept together.—Country Gentleman.

THE APIARY.

Artificial Combs.—We are not aware that artificial combs have been made from beeswax that are of practical value. Mr. Wagner patented a machine, several years ago, which would stamp the base of the cells on paper. It is said that the bees will readily accept these comb foundations and lengthen out the cells. We have not as yet tested them. We are unable to state the exact cost of Mr. Wagner's machine. Should these comb foundations be found of practical value, another and important advance in bee-culture will have been attained.

Absconding Swarms.—When young swarms leave for the woods we are of the opinion that their home has, in a majority of cases, been selected beforehand; or, in other words, that they do know to what particular tree they are going. Still, we have known of instances which would go to prove an opposite conclusion. We once knew a new swarm to hang upon the limb of a tree till they were destroyed by cold rains in the fall. Again, we have known them to leave for the woods without clustering at all.

Introducing Queens.—To introduce Italian queens to colonies of native bees, proceed as follows: Remove the native queens. Cage the Italian queen, and if the weather be warm, and the bees are gathering honey freely, lay the cage on top of frames. Thirty six hours afterward release the queen, and she will, as a general rule, be well received. But in cool weather, and especially if honey be scarce, the case is different, and greater precautions must be used. Move two of the central frames sufficiently apart, so as to admit the cage and push it down between the brood. At the end of thirty-six hours open the hive and sprinkle the bees well with sweetened water, well scented with essence of peppermint. The queen cage should also be well sprinkled. As soon as the bees have filled themselves liberate the queen. While there are numerous methods of introducing queens to full colonies, we consider the last one that as not only the best, but safest, of any that has come to our notice. All persons who intend to Italianize their bees should bear in mind that the introduction of queens is attended with much less risk when the weather is warm and the bees are gathering an abundance of honey.

The Honey Extractors.—We are decidedly in favor of using the honey extractor, and would recommend every bee keeper to procure one, and then use it. The best results cannot be obtained from any apiary unless the honey-emptying machine is used. It still remains an open question whether the greatest profit is to be obtained where the extractor is used exclusively. Although double and even treble the amount of honey may be obtained by its use, it does not sell as readily, nor command as high a price. But the body of the hive oftentimes becomes too full, and by emptying and returning the comb we give the queen a chance to lay, thereby keeping the colony strong. In fact, more box honey may be obtained by a judicious use of the extractor, while the extracted honey is just so much clear gain.—Herbert A. Burch, in Rural New Yorker.

Thousands for One.—Some painstaking genius has been at the trouble of counting the increase in weeds. It figures up considerably more than the Scripture count. Here it is: A healthy pig weed, if not disturbed, will ripen more than 10,000 seeds—and they are pretty sure to grow. The seeds of the common dock will produce 13,000 seeds. The toad-flax leaves 15,000 heirs to inherit its estate. Burdock is prolific to the amount of 21,000 fold, and, like poor relations, they are always hanging to one's skirts. The common stinging nettle gives 100,000, and over, for one. There are very few weeds but will produce a thousand-fold, and they do not require to be ripe to reproduce their kind. Destroy them, if possible, before they blossom. You cannot raise figs on thistles, neither may you expect good crops among weeds. Every one destroyed before seeding this year saves the trouble of destroying thousands another. Kill the weeds.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

Antidote for Poison.—A farmer writes: "It is now over twenty years since I learned that sweet oil would cure the bite of a rattlesnake, not knowing it would cure other kind of poisons. Practice, observation and experience have taught me that it will cure poisons of any kind, both on man and beast. The patient must take a spoonful of it internally and bathe the wound for a cure. To cure a horse it requires eight times as much as for a man. One of the most extreme cases of snake bites occurred eleven years ago. It had been thirty days standing, and the patient had been given up by his physician. I gave him a spoonful of oil, which effected a cure. It will cure blout in cattle caused by fresh clover. It will cure the sting of bees, spiders and other insects, and persons who have been poisoned by ivy."

Tomato Soup.—If you have no stock for soup on hand, put two and a half pounds of veal or lamb to one gallon of cold water; boil the meat to shreds, and the water down to two quarts. It will require three hours' slow boiling. Take two quarts of fresh tomatoes, peeled and cut fine; put them into an earthen or porcelain-lined saucepan, as tin or iron give them a metallic taste; set them where they will simmer all the time the meat is cooking. When the meat is done, strain the liquor, and then put in the tomatoes, stirring them very hard, that they may thoroughly dissolve; then boil them in the liquor half an hour; season with pepper and salt, an onion and parsley if desired. When it has boiled half an hour strain again, and add a tablespoonful of butter and two teaspoonfuls of sugar before putting it into the tureen. Send to table hot.

Scientific.

THE SPECTROSCOPE.—It has been proven that the one two-hundred millionth of a grain of sodium can be detected by means of the spectroscope, even when dissolved in water. This statement, which we find recorded in scientific papers, conveys very little meaning to us, from our inability to grasp so small a quantity as the one two-hundred millionth of a grain. Mathematicians tell us that we can form no correct idea of numbers beyond the few hundreds or thousands used in regard to the matters of every-day life.

In order that we may have some little conception of the power of the spectroscope, and form an idea of this small fraction, we reduce the statement to another form. Construct a tank eight feet square on the base, and nine feet high. Such a vessel would contain 576 cubic feet, and if filled with water would hold about 138 barrels. A piece of common salt, the size of a pea, would contain about one grain of the metal sodium. If this pea were dropped into the vessel of water, and allowed to dissolve, each drop of water would contain about the one two-hundred millionth of a grain of sodium, and would be sufficient to prove the presence of that element in the whole body of water. For this calculation we have the following data: A drop of pure water weighs one grain. In a gallon of water there would be 46,080 drops. In a barrel of 31½ gallons, 1,451,520 drops. Two hundred million drops would therefore fill nearly 138 barrels. How wonderfully exact, and how powerful! Though we give all praise to the microscope, yet it cannot compare in power with the spectroscope.

To illustrate this still farther, we will mention the recent discoveries in regard to the hitherto rare element, Lithium. Until within the few past years, this element has been one of the great rarities of the chemist. It was found in small quantities in only two or three places in this country, and associated in such a way with other minerals as to be rather difficult of extraction. The spectroscope has shown that its distribution is well-nigh universal. Analyses of soils show its presence in small quantities. It is present in very many springs and streams, and is largely present in the waters of the ocean. Plants growing on soils containing this element absorb it in large quantities, and this is given to the flesh and milk of animals feeding on such pastures. In this way it must enter largely into the system of man. In fact, it is almost as universal as common salt, which is found everywhere. Why this abundance unless it has some beneficial effect on the human body? It is a settled law of God's providence that those elements which are essential to man are of world-wide distribution, like air and water, while those not so essential are more limited in extent and local in distribution.

We do not wonder that some of our best physicians are investigating the subject with great care. Our subject has much of interest for the medical fraternity, and the science of spectrum analysis is destined to play a very important part in medical examinations and in medico-legal trials. The spectrum of blood differs very notably from that of any other known substance. Increased observations, it is hoped, will give us a means of separating the spectrum of human blood from that of the lower animals. Already we can detect the one thousandth of a grain of blood in solution, and thus separate it from all other known liquids. The dried stain from a single drop of blood is all that is necessary for the examination. Arterial blood can be told from venous, and the proportion of carbonic acid in the latter easily determined. We can easily detect poison in the blood by this means, even when the quantity is so small as to escape the chemist. Not long since a man died in Europe under very peculiar circumstances. The jury could find no marks of violence upon his person, no evidences of disease or traces of poison in his system. A spectroscope was called into requisition, and a drop of blood taken from the scarcely cold heart, which revealed the presence of prussic acid, one of the most deadly of poisons. Thus, day by day, science is increasing our store of knowledge—not only of ourselves, but also of the boundless universe of God.—Methodist.

A GOOD INSTANCE of "sharp practice" is that of a man in Ohio, who was acquitted of murder on the plea of insanity. He had secured his lawyers by giving them a mortgage on his farm, but now repudiates the mortgage on the ground that he was insane when he made it, according to the showing of these same lawyers.

A GRASP of the hand, a smile, a word even, is often enough in God's hand to change the entire course of life, to save a soul from death.—W. H. H. Murray.

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable product of the swamps of Louisiana. It is prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered them only temporary relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Delhi, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

1. From one to two bottles will cure permanently any first attack of Rheumatism or Gout.

2. From two to twelve bottles, according to durat on of disease, will cure permanently any case of Rheumatism or Gout.

3. It will cure many cases of Neuralgia, from the simple fact that the origin of the disease has been of rheumatic character.

PRICE, $5 PER BOTTLE.

No charge made except for medicine. For directions as to use and for further information address

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.

The anticipation of more liberal receipts has checked the demand for most articles of Western produce, and has had rather a depressing influence on prices since our last issue, though there was a better demand on Tuesday, and the market generally closed with a better feeling. Sugar and molasses have been in good demand at firm prices.

The river is 13 feet 7 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the second instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales.	20,937
Lake.....	71
Mobile.....	1,407
Texas.....	158
Total.....	21,673

On Saturday the demand was only moderate and the sales were confined to 4,200 bales, at prices requiring no change in quotations. On Monday, under decidedly favorable telegrams from Liverpool and New York, factors raised their pretensions ¼c., but, finding that buyers refused to go on at the advance claimed, they subsequently met the demand more freely, and the sales summed up 6,800 bales, closing at a net improvement of ⅛c. On Tuesday the movement was checked by dark and rainy weather, but nevertheless 3,300 bales were sold at irregular prices, in some cases showing a slight decline, but generally at Monday's figures, the market closing quiet but firm.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 648,181 bales, against 792,834 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 436,503 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 113,270 to France, and a decrease of 409,560 to Great Britain, and of 82,060 to other foreign ports.

LOUISIANA RICE is dull, owing to free arrivals from Charleston, and the market is depressed. Choice Carolina is jobbing at 9c., Rangoon 7@7¾c. ₱ lb. Louisiana is quoted at 8½@8¾c. for fair, 9c. for prime and 9¼c. for choice.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7.—The position taken by gentlemen closely connected with the administration of the government is that the British high commissioners perfectly understood the views of the American high commissioners in negotiation of the treaty of Washington, both from its terms and its associations in the protocol, and that therefore our government is altogether justified in presenting the case as it has, claiming consequential damages in case the board of arbitrators shall not award a gross sum in satisfaction of the so-called Alabama claims. This government is willing to stand by the decisions of the arbitrators. It is known that though the British commissioners had full powers, they frequently consulted their home government, and acted in accordance with its wishes in all they did. It is officially asserted that if the claim for consequential damages had not been presented and was not to be passed upon, there might be a complaint by the people of the United States that provision was made for a partial settlement only of the difference between the two countries. Such claim was therefore presented for a full settlement in the interests of peace and to preclude future disputes. This government has not yet received the text of the letter from Lord Granville to General Schenck, and therefore cannot take official action upon it. There is no probability whatever that our government will withdraw any part of its statement of the case, but will leave the British government to pursue its own course, or the tribunal of arbitrators to act in the premises according to treaty stipulations; nor is it likely that our counsel will take any action in order to accommodate the British government.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—A Rio de Janeiro letter reports the burning of the steamer America, from Buenos Ayres for Montevideo; sixty lives were lost; no Americans among them.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 7.—Martin John Spalding, primate of the Catholic Church in the United States, and archbishop of this diocese, died this afternoon, after a protracted illness, aged sixty-two years. The funeral will take place at ten o'clock on Monday.

CHICAGO, Feb. 7.—A railroad accident reported at eight o'clock this morning on the Rockford, Rock Island and St. Louis railroad, near Alton, Illinois, by which ten persons were killed outright and forty wounded. The cars caught fire and five persons were burned to death. No further particulars yet received.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The educational bill, which passed the House to-day, was originally introduced by Mr. Pierce, of Mississippi, chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor. It consecrates public lands to public education. One-half the proceeds of the sales of public lands are distributed annually among the different States; during the first ten years upon the basis of illiteracy, as shown by the present census. The other half is to be invested and the interest used for educational purposes. No State loses its share of the fund by legal enactments forbidding mixed schools. After ten years the distribution will be on the basis of population, instead of illiteracy.

CAIRO, Feb. 8.—Quite a heavy shock of an earthquake was felt here at five o'clock this morning.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—Senate.—A resolution calling for treaty affairs was discussed all the morning, and went over on a motion to table it.

Amnesty resumed. The clauses affecting naturalization in Sumner's amendment were discussed. The treaty with China, forbidding the naturalization of the Chinese, is the stumbling block in Mr. Sumner's path.

Finally Sumner's amendment was adopted by the casting vote of Vice President Colfax, and the amnesty bill thus amended failed of the necessary two-thirds vote. The following-named Senators voted nay:

Blair, Boreman, Davis, Goldthwaite, Hill, Johnson, Kelly, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Saulsbury, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, Trumbull, Vickers, Wright.—19.

The ayes were 33.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—Another Nicaragua canal expedition is contemplated by the government.

The Senate Election Committee discussed the North Carolina Senatorship without action. They will hear Mr. Ransom next Saturday.

A motion will be made early next week in the Senate to take up the House amnesty bill and press it to a vote clear of amendments, when its friends feel sure it will secure the necessary two-thirds vote.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 11.—There were thirty-five deaths from smallpox last week.

SALT LAKE, Feb. 11.—There has been no let-up in the snow blockade. The Japanese are still detained.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 11.—The smallpox deaths for the past week show one hundred and eighty-three increase.

SALT LAKE CITY, Feb. 13.—In the election held here yesterday the Mormon ticket was elected. The women and children voted.

The Japanese embassy will be obliged to return to San Francisco and take a steamer via Panama. There is no prospect of raising the snow blockade on the Union Pacific road for a month.

The Post Office Department is proposing for a stage service around the blockade for sixty days.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13.—Cotton is nominal. Sales for February delivery are reported at 22¼, for March at 22½, for April at 23, for August at 23¼.

Sterling is strong, and gold dull.

The report of the Congressional committee appointed to investigate the Radical quarrels in Louisiana will be submitted to Congress next week.—Picayune.

FOREIGN.

VIENNA, Feb. 8.—A basis of compromise has been agreed upon by which certain concessions toward self-government are granted—the Province of Galicia.

BERLIN, Feb. 8.—The Bishop of Strasburg having notified the cabinet here that the Holy See no longer recognizes the Concordat as applying to Alsace and Lorraine, Prince Bismarck has replied that the Emperor of Germany will undertake, independently of such measure, the church government of those provinces.

MADRID, February 9.—Agitations against the government are reported in Valencia and Andalusia.

BERLIN, Feb. 9.—In the Diet to-day, during a debate on the education bill, Bismarck said the government was disposed to propitiate the Roman Catholics, but its patience was exhausted. He announced it as the policy of Prussia hereafter to Germanize the Polish schools as France had Gallicized those of Alsace and Lorraine.

ROME, Feb. 10.—Chevalier Nigra, late Italian minister to France, has been appointed minister to Russia. The position vacated by Chevalier Nigra will not be refilled, as the Italian government feels aggrieved at France having no minister at Rome.

HAVANA, Feb. 10.—The Official Gazette publishes additional orders regarding Chinese in Cuba. For the present all applications of Chinese to permit a change in their places of residence, or to become Spanish subjects, will not be entertained. The government also refuses to grant passports to free Chinamen who may be desirous of leaving the country.

Chinamen found without police documents, from whatever cause, will be sent to the government yards or depositories, and there be compelled to work at forced labor. The measure is intended for the benefit of planters, who thus obtain cheap labor at very low rates. The measure will also tend to lessen the number of Chinese vagrants.

LISBON, Feb. 11.—A steamer arrived from Rio de Janeiro January 22.

The distinguished Brazilian statesman, Viscount Itaborahay, is dead.

The recent outbreak of fanaticism in the Town Juudil, in the Argentine States, resulted in fearful massacres. The Gauchas were excited to frenzy by a man named Saluno, who made a sudden attack on the foreigners. The latter were taken by surprise, and were unable to defend themselves, and before the authorities could stop the slaughter thirty-six were killed.

PARIS, Feb. 12.—Caleb Cushing, J. Bancroft Davis, William M. Evarts and Mr. White have arrived in Paris, and are in close consultation in regard to the business before the Geneva board of arbitration.

M. Rouher, formerly minister of State under Napoleon, has been elected to the Assembly from the Island of Corsica.

A republican has been elected to the Assembly from the Department of Eure.

LONDON, Feb. 12.—In the House of Lords this evening the Duke of Argyle announced the government had received official information of the assassination of the Governor General of India, the Earl of Mayo.

In the House of Commons Gladstone stated that on the evening of the eighth instant the Earl of Mayo was stabbed by a Mohammedan convict, and soon after receiving the wound expired. The premier proceeded to express the regret the whole country would feel at his death; and was followed by Disraeli, who referred to the deceased in terms of the highest praise.

THE LATE DR. DIXON.

The Rev. Dr. Dixon died on the twenty-eighth ultimo, aged eighty-three years. The London Watchman says:

"He was born in 1788; in 1812 he entered the regular ministry; in 1824 he went for a year as missionary to Gibraltar; in 1841 he was elected president; in 1848 he went as our English delegate to visit the Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States; in 1862 he retired from the full work of the ministry, and 'sat down' at Bradford. His sight by this time was quite gone; but he kept up to the last his communion with the living world, and his fellowship in thought and affection with his brethren.

"Dr. Dixon, taking him altogether, can hardly, perhaps, be regarded as belonging to the company of the very greatest men of Methodism: but he was actually in some aspects and on special occasions a grandly impressive man. We have never seen any man appear so grand as on occasion we have seen Dr. Dixon, in speech, in sentiment, in countenance and attitude, in his whole person, utterance and manner. He was pre-eminently an individual, an original man. He was truly noble in spirit. To truckle or to oppress, to affect to be anything but what he was, to shine in borrowed goods, to envy or to wrong another—all such offenses as these were abhorrent to his truthful and disinterested character. Then, although a strong and individual man, he was simple, humble, teachable; though stern at times—stern against meanness or malice—and often stern in tone and seeming, he was at heart of a tender spirit.

"In his early youth he was slow in thought, and not seldom uncouth or ungainly in speech or manner. His visit to Gibraltar fired him with a hatred to popery; and on his return the fire which had been pent up within flamed out in strong and passionate eloquence. He became a famous missionary speaker, depicting in awful coloring the curse and woes of heathenism and of popery. Henceforth he was a famous man. He became a great speaker against slavery; a great lecturer, as well as speaker, against popery; a great and famous preacher, sometimes, indeed, heavy and obscure, but sometimes also powerful with an eloquence rich in close, deep thought, no less than in burning declamation. He is said never to have preached the same sermon twice. Though this is perhaps an exaggeration, it is certain that he very seldom repeated his sermons, even in substance, and never verbally. He deeply premeditated, and then gave out, in deliberate, deep, sonorous tones, his strong thoughts.

"In person he was singularly noble. A finer, more luminous face was never seen than his. His head was altogether massive and Jovelike; and the fine, pure white, flowing and curling locks, which festooned his noble head, were an unrivalled feature in his appearance.

"He was a great practical preacher—a great preacher of righteousness. In his later years he became increasingly simple and evangelical; he often insisted on the need of plainly preaching Christ in all his evangelical fullness; and, if he could have begun his life again, his earlier preaching would have been more richly and simply evangelical than it was.

"In his earlier life he was a strong and high constitutionalist in Church and State. His visit to America, however, materially modified his views, broadening and relaxing them. Throughout his life he intensely hated popery. Of late years, as we understand, his political and ecclesiastical sympathies had somewhat reverted to their earlier tendencies.

"He has gone: and devout men have followed him to his burial. The ex-president and Mr. Pope delivered fit and worthy addresses over his remains. A prince and a great man is no more among us on earth; he is gone to 'his company' in heaven."

CURE FOR CANCER.

MR. EDITOR: In 1864 a cancer came on my right arm. After much suffering, and the failure of all other remedies, I had it burned with caustic. It broke out again in my right hand. Last spring it grew very fast, the hand becoming so helpless that I had to carry it in a sling. Fearing my hand would have to be amputated, and having heard that several persons had been cured of cancer by drinking wild tea and poulticing with the tea-grounds, I began using wild tea in earnest. I drank nothing else at my meals, and in four weeks my hand was as well as ever. I know of two persons that have been cured of cancer by drinking wild tea during the past few months. This remedy should have the widest publicity.

J. B. WILLIAMS,
Health Officer, Allegheny City, Pa.

THE DUTY OF EVERYBODY.—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." It could not be made plainer. Disciples, baptize and teach every one. As long as a single creature is left out anywhere the limit is not reached, the field is not filled, the work that Christ planned is not done.

Are we the persons to whom the command is addressed? There can be no doubt of it, for Christ spake it to his disciples, and then added, "Lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world!" which shows that the command is delivered to the entire succession of his disciples, down to the end of time. When the world and the church become co-extensive, then the world is at an end, and the church alone shall exist in millennial glory, and we all can have a good time and enjoy ourselves.

Behold, then, the command issued from headquarters, the field indicated, the campaign planned, and ourselves the parties commanded. Is it not manifest that we are under obligation to prosecute this work?

Certain officers once spoke in the presence of the Duke of Wellington of the missionary enterprise as though there could be no rational prospect of its success. The old Iron Duke was aroused, and replied: "When the chief issues marching orders, what are you, the under officers, and the rank and file of the army, to do?" "We are to march." "Well, here are the marching orders to the chief: 'Go ye into all the world and preach.' Your duty is to march and fight. The responsibility of success lies with the commander, not with you." If they did not march, they would be shot.—Rev. H. M. Scudder, D. D.

GET TO GIVE.—This should be the motto of the Christian Church, to contrast nobly with that of the selfish world, Get to hoard! God is to be glorified with her alms as really as with her prayers. Both together are to be accounted as a memorial of her fidelity by him who looks upon the heart. The worldling may accumulate wealth for his own pleasure; but the Christian has a very erroneous view of his relations to Christ and his cause if he does not perceive that duty requires him to use his gains for the glory of God. No policy is consistent with a Christian profession, excepting this of getting to give; and sooner or later the believer will see it to be thus, and will exclaim with the eloquent Antony: "I have lost all, except what I have given away." The sweetest consolation ever yielded by a fortune to the dying believer, was enjoyed by him who, to the inquiry, "Where may your fortune be found?" replied, "In the pockets of the indigent."

NOT long since a dyspeptic was beguiled by an advertisement to send to a New York individual a dollar, for which sum a cure for dyspepsia was promised. He received a printed slip with these words: "Stop drinking and hoe in the garden." The man was angry at first, then laughed, and finally stopped drinking and "hoed in the garden." In a short time he was as well as ever.

IS THERE any work so delightful to a Christian as to go to those poor souls, which are but God's flowers, that sorrow and sin have beaten down, and lift them tenderly, and wash them from adhering vices, and twine around them the sure support of some sky-reaching hope?—W. H. H. Murray.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF THE REV. JOHN WESLEY, M. A., founder of the Methodists. By the Rev. L. Tyerman. In three volumes. Volume I. New York: Harper & Bros., 1872.

The Methodists, and all, for that matter, who feel an interest in one of the most extraordinary characters of history, will welcome the appearance of an American edition of this latest and completest life of John Wesley. We can now do little more than announce the reception of the first volume of the work, which brings the history of the great "founder" down to 1747, and to the forty-fourth year of his age. The introduction on the greatness of Methodism gives a careful and accurate statistical exhibit of every branch of the Methodist family throughout the world down to 1870, and is a very useful and instructive compendium. Mr. Tyerman has possessed himself of a large mass of materials hitherto not available, and has projected his work on a scale and plan to embrace substantially everything that can in any way contribute to a thorough knowledge of his subject. He leaves the philosophy of Wesley's life to others, and contents himself with the task of supplying his readers with all the facts. Original letters and extracts from published and unpublished writings are liberally interwoven with the text, and often shed new light upon matters which have been hitherto misunderstood and misrepresented. The author claims to have been honest, and he certainly shows no disposition to cover up or extenuate the weakness and faults of the great Methodist organizer. In these pages, more than any other, Wesley is a man "subject to like passions as we are;" but our conceptions of his greatness are rather heightened than otherwise by this impartial and unvarnished relation of everything material to his life and character. The present volume is a handsome octavo of 564 pages, and is embellished with an engraved likeness of Wesley in his fortieth year. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

OUR MONTHLY is a religious and literary magazine, published by Alfred Martin, Philadelphia. We believe it is in some measure under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church. We are much pleased with the February number, the only one that has reached our table.

THE ILLUSTRATED CHRISTIAN WEEKLY is a marvel of beautiful typography and splendid illustrations. The number of February 10 is especially a fine one. Published by the American Tract Society, New York, at $2 per annum.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the minutes of the seventy-seventh session of the Virginia Conference. It is a stout and very handsome pamphlet, and exceedingly complete in arrangement and the matter embraced.

THE AMERICAN EDUCATIONAL MONTHLY for February is an excellent number.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: As many of your readers are interested in this institution, information in regard to its management will doubtless be acceptable to them. The numbers in attendance have been gradually increasing since the opening. The faculty have given entire satisfaction, and there is not a pupil in attendance who has not made commendable progress, while some have distinguished themselves.

The curriculum is extensive, embracing every department of study necessary to a complete female education. Some are being educated to become teachers. The demand for a higher order of female education than has hitherto been reached by our Southern institutions is increasing. This college is preparing to meet this demand; so that the necessity of sending off to a distance from this section of the State, if it ever existed, does not now exist. Under the present organization advantages are afforded here well worthy the consideration of those who have daughters to educate. The matron is a lady of extensive experience, and devotes herself assiduously to the welfare and comfort of her boarders, watching over them as a mother, and nursing them carefully when sick. The table is bountifully supplied. The sleeping apartments are refurnished with new and neat furniture. Home influences and a home atmosphere pervade the whole establishment. Nothing will be left undone to give this institution the largest success, and the president would earnestly invoke the aid of those interested in its prosperity to send pupils, and to strengthen, on the part of every one, confidence in its management as a church institution. Its locality is remarkably healthy, and rendered accessible by a daily line of hacks from Selma. The religious advantages are of the highest character, and the institution being removed from the excitement and disturbances of a large place, nothing exists to distract the mind or draw off attention from study. This is a matter worthy of serious attention by those who have daughters to educate. The president would invite correspondence from those who desire further information.

Pupils will be admitted during the present month.

ONLY A GLIMMER OF SUNLIGHT.

It was only a glimmer of sunlight,
But it came with an angel's face,
And it seemed like an angel's mission
To be in that lonely place,
For it came with its sudden brightness
Into a cruel test room,
Where on the beds and the women's faces
Were dark in the gathering gloom.

It fell on the head, thought-silvered,
Of the man who struggled there
To awaken in weary spirits
An eager delight in prayer,
And it fell upon world-worn faces,
Overtroubled and sad,
And it brought to them hope and comfort,
Making their spirits glad.

It was only a glimmer of sunlight,
But it spoke of softer things
That rise to lift care and the worry
We feel in the dark world brings;
And the people thought of their Father,
Thought of the heavenly song,
Thought of the Savior's pity,
Till their hearts were subdued and strong.

It was only a glimmer of sunlight
That came through a little rift,
But many a grateful spirit
Thanked God for his timely gift.
And even the preacher's message
Given in his great name
To the sighs of the waiting people,
With a thrice-sweet sense came,

Only a glimmer of sunlight,
So often our Father sends,
But it cannot be guessed by strangers
What pleasure to life it lends.
For it comes to our souls in darkness,
Thrilling them with delight
As it tells us soon, and for ever,
We shall live in his perfect light.

SUCCESS OF THE GOSPEL.

The promise made to Abraham was that in the seed of Abraham all the families of the earth should be blessed. The prophets understood the Abrahamic covenant to embrace the whole race of man. They predicted Christ's universal triumph and perpetual reign. He gave his apostles a commission to all nations. He bade all the ends of the earth to look to him and be saved. The whole economy of grace contemplates the salvation of all men. The church in all ages has prayed for the salvation of all men. The great missionary enterprise has for its foundation God's promises that the heathen should be given to Christ for an inheritance, and the uttermost portions of the earth for a possession. There are conflicting opinions as to the character and nature of the millennium, but there is no controversy as to the faith of the whole church that all the world will finally be brought under the influence of Christianity.

Now, after four thousand years of prayer, effort, faith and suffering, only about one-third of the families of the earth have been influenced to accept the Bible as the truth. Christianity has not permeated a single nation on earth; much less has it reached the great heart of humanity. There must be a powerful and substantial reason for this stupendous failure. There must be a radical defect somewhere. If we fall back on the doctrine of depravity as the central or real cause, we deny the power of the gospel as a remedy; but if human nature be the same, and the gospel has regenerated anybody, it proves that it is the remedy for everybody. The apostle says it is the wisdom of God and the power of God, and mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds. If the want of success is not to be found in the constitution of humanity, nor in a want of power and adaptation in the gospel to conquer and control men, where, then, shall we look for the cause? That the gospel is only a partial success, after a trial of so many ages, is a fact not to be denied, but to be met and accounted for by the church.

The source of all wisdom connected with the church and human salvation is to be found in the Bible. Why did Moses fail to lead the Israelites into Canaan? Simply because he recognized himself as their leader, as indicated by his words at the rock of Horeb. God could not allow Moses to lead the Israelites over Jordan without ignoring himself. God led the people through the wilderness, not Moses. The stone was cut out of the mountain without hands. If the world is ever converted to God, he will have the glory. The first and main difficulty is to be found in the church itself. While the apostles all preached the sound doctrine, and Christ the all and in all, the church was a wonderful success; and if the church had remained a unit, and preached nothing but the gospel for the glory of Christ, the world would have permanently received Christ as the Son of God in less than two centuries. But how can the church convert the world, or God convert the world through the church, as it is? What is the gospel? Now the church has certainly missed her way. The gospel is the truth—eternal truth, unchangeable truth. The Catholic Church, or rather institution, professes to have the truth—to have always had the truth. They taught five years ago that they had the whole truth. The Pope was not then infallible, but he is declared to be so now. If they had the truth then they cannot have it now, and if they have it now they did not have it five years ago.

Luther thought he had the gospel when he preached salvation for all men; and no doubt he thought he preached the gospel when he preached reprobation, unconditional, for a part of mankind.

The Greek Church think they have the gospel; but they find the same difficulty in making the world believe it that Catholics and Protestants do. But why have the Greek and Catholic churches accomplished so little in the last sixteen hundred years? The Catholic Church especially ought to have met with more success, viewing her action from a merely human standpoint—their priesthood, schools, in a word their whole system.

But when the gospel is mixed it becomes neither the wisdom of God nor the wisdom of man; but the Catholic Church really does reproduce itself mostly in the prejudices of men, from the plain fact that it has always been a persecuting, not a Christian institution.

The gospel is the wisdom and power of God; and while men have the power to resist it, they have not the wisdom to meet it. Paul preached the gospel at Athens successfully not by teaching school or editing a paper, or by insinuating himself into office, but by preaching the gospel of Christ. They as a people had as much human wisdom as men can ordinarily reach, unaided by the light of revelation. They were as fully imbued with the idea that they had the truth in their religion as it was possible for falsehood to control the human mind, and yet St. Paul did succeed in planting the gospel in the mind and heart of many in Athens. But it may be said that Paul was inspired. So he was; but certainly not more than or above the gospel.

More in the next.

FAMILY PRAYER.

MR. EDITOR: Allow me space to pen a few thoughts on the above subject. It may be considered by some an old, trite and hackneyed subject, but it is certainly a very important one, and one that should be kept constantly before our people, and urged upon them with all possible earnestness. Time was, we are told, when almost every male member of our church, who was the head of a family, held family prayer. But how different now! There has, perhaps, been some improvement in the last few years; but very many still neglect this duty. Some who neglect it try to persuade themselves that it is not their duty: but others admit that it is a duty, but offer various weak excuses for neglecting it. Some plead their want of education, some their diffidence, some their not having been trained to it from childhood; others say they have not time, or they cannot so control their business or their families as to attend to it at the proper time. We fear none of these excuses will satisfy God in the day of judgment, and they ought not to satisfy the consciences of these brethren. Even suppose a man is not yet fully satisfied of his acceptance with God—this is not a sufficient reason for neglect of this duty. The way to get religion is to wait upon God in the use of all the means of grace. He who takes up every cross, and tries to do his whole duty, will be much more apt to obtain salvation than he who pursues a different course. The following are some of the inducements that should prompt to the discharge of this duty:

1. It has a good influence on a man himself. The fact that he gathers his family around the family altar, morning and evening, and leads them in their devotions, makes him more careful how he lives. He will be more consistent. It is a restraint—just such as every man needs while engaged in the battle of life.

2. It does the family good—more good, perhaps, than we are aware of. It keeps the subject of religion constantly before them, and reminds them daily that there is a God, and that it is their duty to worship him. It makes impressions for good that all the scenes of life will never be able to efface. Oftentimes, long years after, far away from the scenes of childhood, amid strangers, and surrounded by wickedness in every form, the remembrance of "the old family Bible that lay on the stand," of the voice of the father or of the mother as it read the sacred page, and then ascended to God in thanksgiving and prayer, may awaken feelings of tenderness and of penitence that will lead to salvation. Many a one has thus been led to God, when almost everybody had given them up as lost.

3. Praying in one's family is a good way to train ourself for praying in prayer meeting and the public congregation; and in many places there is great need for members to pray in public. In some places the minister has no one to assist him in the prayer meeting.

Brethren, don't neglect this duty! Take up the cross, however heavy it may be, and thus show to your family and the world that your religion is not a name merely, but a living reality.

THE LAST OF THE CALCASIEUS.

MR. EDITOR: On a bold promontory, which juts out into Lake Peiaro, (formed by an enlargement of the Calcasieu river,) in days now merged in the past, stood the dwellings of the once powerful tribe of the Calcasieu Indians. On the east a noble forest, around whose stately trees clung the vine, bearing luscious grapes and flowering creepers; on the west, across the gentle lake, stretched a wide, natural meadow, meeting in the distance another forest growth, and relieving the monotony by a pretty contrast; to the south all was open, until the river merged into the open sea; and northward its winding form was to be seen, until hid by the grand unbroken wealth of timber ending in the prairies of Iowa. The last link between this people and the strangers of to-day, an aged woman, it was the writer's fortune to hold converse with. We stood upon the spot once trod by her forefathers, long before Columbus conceived the idea of a westward passage to the Indies, and beneath whose sod the ashes of her people in silence rest until the end of time. In her simple language she told of their traditional glory and power, of their close alliance with the Aztecs of Mexico, of the wide range of country subject to their rule; and thus speaking, a sort of inspiration shed a soft and mellow light over her face. As she recounted all the changing fortunes of her people—their spoliation by the greedy Spaniard, and the American pioneers after their advent—a tear coursed down the swarthy face of "the last of the Calcasiens," and dewed the earth which held her people. And now old "Ponpon" lies in the bosom of mother earth, and a whole race have passed away. There is a deep moral in this. The actors of to-day, like this powerful tribe, will soon be thinned to the last link, and it, with one grand retrospect and perhaps a tear, will vanish. Thus the mysterious drama of the world moves on. Kings, lords and subjects, civilized and savage, appear, spread out, rule, dwarf, shrivel and fade; and yet, amid all this changing, God is over the same. His plans and government and purposes alone stand. With him there is neither youth, maturity nor decay. No gold hunter nor man of emprise, no lover of power nor ambitious slave, check for one infinitesimal of time the grand sweep of his rule. Race after race have come and gone, leaving no trace behind; and still onward moves the harmonious reign of him with whom there is no variableness. The hand that writes and the eye that reads will lose their cunning and their vision, and untold myriads will come and go, leaving not a ripple on the surface of purpose; and as the shout of the angel closes the act of Time, the risen dead will touch the shores of eternity, and behold no change in God's great plans.

FROM A PEW.

MR. EDITOR: My heart has often been made to ache and cringe by expressions falling from the lips of those who ought to be fathers in Israel, by such expressions as "We are all ashamed to let our best friends know what we are daily doing in secret," "We are all on the downward track," and such like expressions, both in the sermons and prayers of ministers.

These confessions are more appropriate for the closet than for the public, for this reason: if the minister, who is expected to be an example, publicly confesses we are all guilty, it will be a natural inference that we are as good as our exemplar and preceptor, and that we are at least on salvable ground.

Much better would it be to live so that we do not feel that these are personal declarations; but say to your hearers that if they do not comply with God's law they will be everlastingly damned.

Would to God that this was not so, but in its stead was proclaimed experimentally the truth of the high standard of Christian perfection professed and possessed by our forefathers.

SAVING A LOST SHEEP.

Wandering, as I have often done, knapsack on back and staff in hand, over the mountains of the English Lake district, I reached my old friend's, Ritson of Westdale, just as tidings were brought of a sheep that had wandered among the precipices and was in peril. A party set off at once to rescue it. I joined them, and thus was witness of a scene which I looked at as a parable acting before my eyes, and in every particular illustrating gospel truth.

The sheep was a long way off, and yet was noticed. It was but a tiny object—a mere speck upon the rocks; still the careful eye of the shepherd detected it. It was but one of a large flock, yet it was valued. It had wandered off in search of herbage, and, descending without difficulty the face of the mountain cliff, had reached a ledge in the rocks. It could go no farther, neither could it return by the way by which it had descended. And now there was nothing for it to eat, and the poor sheep must have perished had not the shepherd come to find it.

No time was to be lost. One of the shepherds fastened a strong rope round his body, and the other two men lowered him down over the top of the rock. There was some risk of limb or life, but he was willing to encounter it for the sake of the sheep. My brother and myself found a way to clamber to the bottom of the rocks, whence we watched the shepherd being lowered down till he came near to where the sheep was standing. But as he could not reach it with his hand, he stretched out the long pole and tried to place the noose round the sheep's neck. I watched with interest the patience and perseverance of the shepherd. For two whole hours, hanging over the precipice, he labored to save the sheep.

But the sheep seemed resolved not to be saved. Just as the noose was about to fall over its head, the sheep twisted suddenly round to avoid it. Then the shepherd had again to arrange it and prepare the line. "Poor sheep! you do not know how good that shepherd is, and how he wants to save you! You think he has come to do you harm. You are frightened at your helper. You dislike the noose that has been prepared to rescue you. You do not see that such captivity will be freedom; that such a bondage will be safety." Thus for two hours the sheep continued to elude the shepherd's efforts. Moreover, in its fright it was often in danger of throwing itself over the precipice. To prevent this, we shouted and threw stones. The sheep was frightened by these noises, which no doubt it regarded as coming from enemies, but which were merciful warnings and terrors kindly meant.

At length the noose was cast over the head of the sheep. The poor wanderer struggled hard; but the shepherd drew it toward him, in spite of all its resistance. The cord was tight round its neck, and no doubt gave it pain; but it was needful pain—pain only in the process of rescue—pain only till the sheep was brought quite close to the shepherd. Then he loosened the cord, as he held the sheep carefully in his arms. But there was more to be done yet. The shepherd asked us to act as helpers and under-shepherds to him. For as it would be easier and better to lower the sheep to the bottom among the safe pastures than to raise it to the top among the rocks, he tied the legs of the sheep together, and fastening the rope to them, lowered it down to us. Then we unfastened the string that bound its legs, and set it at liberty. We did not save it, but, as under-shepherds, we helped in the good work.

Oh, how glad the sheep was when it found it was safe and free! How it jumped and skipped, and frisked along the turf! Then how eagerly it began to browse the safe pasture, for it had been long without food.

And how glad was the shepherd when he saw the sheep was safe, and when he ascended again to the top of the rock and rejoined his companions! And with what delight they went back to the farm and said: "Rejoice with me, for I have found the sheep that was lost!"

These simple facts, which are related just as they occurred, are a parable needing no interpretation.

"All we like sheep have gone astray."

"Behold I, even I, will both search my sheep and seek them out. As the shepherd seeketh out his flock in the day that he is among his sheep that are scattered, so will I seek out my sheep."

"I drew them with the cords of a man, with bands of love."

"I am the Good Shepherd; the Good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep."

"And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing."

OUR FRIENDS IN HEAVEN.

So many of many friends have recently gone to heaven, it is quite natural that thoughts of them and their surroundings should be frequent. And certainly they are very pleasant. If there was ever a time when religion and death and the life beyond were subjects of sad reflection, to be indulged only as a duty, such a time has passed away. It is now as cheering and agreeable to think of friends (and the more loved in life the more pleasant) enjoying the pleasures of the heavenly state, as to hear from others traveling in foreign lands, rejoicing in scenes and associations that satisfy their longing desires. The wisest and best of Roman moralists and philosophers enjoyed such thoughts of their friends gone before them into the unseen and eternal, and they anticipated with fond emotions a blissful reunion and refreshment in the society of the great and good. And with life and immortality brought to light by revelation, what was to those ancient pagans a dreamy speculation scarcely worthy of being called a faith, is to us reality. Our faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. We have thus entered already upon the inheritance, so that we have the good of it and part of the glory, as the heir to a vast estate or a throne enjoys, long before he comes into possession, the reflected honors and pleasures awaiting.

Names and faces and forms of friends who have within the past year preceded me into their rest, have been peopling the cheerful chambers of memory this evening. It is a rough night outside, and the day has been a weary one; but now a soft fire-light fills the room and the study lamp is shaded, so that the silence and shadows invite converse with the spiritual and unseen. And the departed of the year have joined themselves with the many who finished their course before them, and are now in the midst of worship and feasts and friendship in the mansions of the blest. How pleasant their memories now! How the heart gladdens with the remembrance of the joys on earth and the hopes of higher in heaven!

Just about twelve years ago (it was December 16, 1859) I had some friends at dinner with me—a larger number than are often gathered at my table; but they were friends, valued friends, some of them very dear. It was a feast of fat things, and six hours flow away like so many moments, in that feast of reason and flow of soul, making an evening never to be forgotten here or hereafter. And of that dinner company, eighteen men are now in another state than this—their bodies moldering in the ground, their souls gone to God! Eighteen of my companions, associates in business, in the church, in public and private life, personal friends, eating and drinking with me in one company, and now all gone!

I stopped just here and went to a drawer and took out a sheet of paper, on which is a diagram of the table and the seat that each one occupied, with his name written in it. The links of memory are brightened, so that their voices, their pleasantries, their very words of wit and wisdom, sparkling and bright, come flashing and shining, as on that glad and genial evening. At my right was the stalwart Edgar of Belfast, and on my left the polished Dill of Derry; and just beyond was the elegant and eloquent Potts; and next to him the courtly and splendid Thume; S. E. and R. C. Morse, three years sundered by death, but just now reunited to be sundered never again; and there was Krebs, himself a host, my companion in foreign travel and a most delightful friend; and Murray, the "Kirwan" of the Observer, brightening the brightest with the humor of his native isle; and Cooke, who was with me in Switzerland; and that wonderful astronomer, Mitchell, who now looks down to study the stars; and my friend Hoge, with love like that of woman; and my brother, P. E. Stevenson, and others whom I will not name—a brilliant company; an acquisition to the skies; stars all of them, who finished their course with joy, and then entered into the joy of their Lord. It would seem that the earth could not spare all those men, and keep right on. But they are in fitting company, with the Lamb in the midst of them.

"There is the throne of David,
And there from toil released,
The shout of them that triumph,
The song of them that feast."

And there is a younger company. All these were heroes and prophets and kings; but the children who have gone up there are children always. O blessed thought! They were with us long years ago, and they are in our hearts, the same playful little ones they were when the Father of us all asked them to come to his house. And they are his children and our children forever. That little one to whom David said he should go, is still the child of David—not an infant of days, for there are no days nor nights in heaven, but the saint's child, radiant in immortal beauty.

"O! when a mother meets on high
The babe she lost in infancy,
Hath she not, then, for pains and throes,
The day of woe, the watchful nights,
For all her sorrows, all her tears,
An overpayment of delight?"

Heaven's floor is covered with them. Of such is its kingdom. They have been going there—flying before they could walk, carried there by the angels—all these thousands of years. Yours are there. There did I say? We do not know where the place is nor what a place is for spirits to dwell in. They may be near us, around us—ministering spirits sent forth to do us good, to strengthen us. They, or thought of them, have been so pleasant with me to-night that it is good to be here. It would be good, doubtless better, to be with them where they are, and with him who has them near his face. There is nothing sad, depressing, in such communion. But it is getting late. The fire is low on the hearth. To-morrow will soon be here; its duties require fresh life; and as death brings life eternal, so sleep makes new life for the day to come.—Bonnus, in New York Observer.

TIME USED IS LIFE.—An eminent divine was suffering under chronic disease, and consulted three physicians. They declared, on being consulted by the sick man, that his disease would be followed by death in a shorter or longer time, according to the manner in which he lived; but they unanimously advised him to give up his office, because, in his situation, mental agitation would be fatal to him.

"If," inquired the divine, "I give myself up to repose, how long, gentlemen, will you guarantee my life?"

"Probably six years," answered the doctors.

"And if I continue in office?"

"Three years, at most."

"Your servant, gentlemen," replied; "I should prefer living two or three years in doing some good to living six years in idleness."

THE London Missionary Chronicle says until recently the missionaries could not get access to the low classes of the native India women. But now European ladies are invited to the houses of the natives for the instruction of their wives and daughters, and that they even offer to pay for such instruction. The change is most encouraging to Christianizing that great country.

THE CHILD OF AFFLICTION. A parent does not hate his child because it is diseased. So, if I be a child of God, my infirmities will not alter his love to me, though he will hate what is wrong in me, while I shall love him the more evidently for this, as well as for needful corrections.

REAL FORESIGHT consists of resting our own forces. If we look with anxiety about the future, we destroy that strength which would enable us to meet the future. If we take more in hand than now we can do well, we break up, and our work is broken up with us.—Observer.

THE manner of giving shows the character of the giver more than the gift itself.—Lavater.

MORNING HYMN.

Father, in the morning
We awake to thee;
Teach us, Lord! and mold us
Henceforth thine to be.

Lord, this day preserve us
From each sin and snare;
Guide us and protect us
With a Father's care.

EVENING HYMN.

At the close of every day,
Lord, to thee we sing and pray;
Make each one of us thy child,
Look on us with mercy mild.

O! forgive and wash away
All our naughtiness this day;
While we sleep, and while we wake,
Bless us for our Savior's sake.

A LITERARY ODDITY.

The Brewers should to Malta go,
The Rabbis all to Scilly;
The Quakers to the Friendly Isles,
The Furriers to Chili.

The little, snarling, carolling "Rabies,"
That break our nightly rest,
Should be packed off to Baby-lon,
To Lap-land, or to Brest.

From Spit-head Cooks go o'er to Greece,
And while the Miser waits
His passage to the Guinea coast,
Spendthrifts are in the Straits.

Spinsters should to the Needles go,
Wine-bibbers to Burgundy;
Gourmands should lunch at the Sandwich Isles,
Wags at the Bay of Fun-dy.

Bachelors to the United States,
Maids to the Isle of Man;
Let Gardeners go to Botany Bay,
And Shoeblacks to Japan.

Thus emigrate, and misplaced men
Will here no longer vex us;
And all who aren't provided for
Had better go to Texas.

ALCOHOLIC MEDICATION.

There is no topic more important now to the temperance cause than that of alcoholic medication. It is very difficult to persuade many people of the injurious effects of intoxicating drinks, and of the danger of the drinking habit, while physicians continue the practice of indiscriminate prescription of alcoholics. This is sometimes carried to so great an extent as to produce the impression that the doctors consider alcohol, like some quack medicines, a universal specific.

A gentleman in England whom I was visiting told me that, being unwell some years before, his doctor, among other matters, prescribed regular and free doses of port wine. "But, doctor," said my friend, "I am a teetotaler, and do not like to take wine; and, besides, I do not believe in it, even as a medicine." "Your teetotalism is all very well," replied the doctor; "but in this case, as a medicine, you must take wine. There is nothing else that will answer the purpose, and I do not see the way to your recovery without it. If I am to have the responsibility of treating your case, you must yield to my judgment; if you decline to do that, you must employ some other physician." "Well, doctor, if you insist upon the wine as a medicine, you must furnish it, for I will not send to the public house for it." And so the doctor sent bottles of what he called port wine to the patient's house. At the regular intervals, by direction of the patient, his wife transferred the prescribed quantity from the full bottle to another; and so the wine treatment went on for weeks, until the patient was well. At his last visit the doctor said: "I hope now you are convinced that alcohol has its place, where it will do good—if not as a drink, certainly as a medicine; for I may tell you now, as I didn't at the time, that your case was critical. I was in doubt as to the result, and there was nothing to meet it but alcohol; you could not have recovered without it."

"Wife, hand down those bottles," said my friend; and she did. "There, doctor," he continued, "is all the wine you sent here, and I have not taken a drop of it. My opinion remains the same. I have no faith in alcoholic medication."

The doctor went away in deep displeasure at what he considered the trick that had been passed upon him; and especially, perhaps, that the alcoholic theory was at fault in this case.

I was visiting for some days an eminent physician in the west of Scotland, and the conversation turned upon this point. The doctor said that a neighbor and friend of his went to London on business, and had the misfortune to break a leg. He was a young man of twenty-eight years, strong and healthy, and should have recovered promptly from his hurt. He was taken to a spacious London hospital, where he remained several weeks; and then was taken to his home, and my friend was called in. The doctor said that no union whatever had taken place in the broken bone. A cartilage was formed over the ends, epilepsy had been induced, and the patient died four days after his return home; and all from the excessive alcoholization to which he had been subjected at the hospital.

The physician from whom I had this story is one of the most eminent medical men in the west of Scotland, and he stigmatizes the indiscriminate prescription of alcohol by the profession as quackery. A few years ago Prof. Laycock, of the Edinburg College of Surgeons, delivered a lecture in that city, in which he defended the use of alcohol; and the doctor to whom I allude delivered, in the same hall, a lecture in reply to the professor, in which he demonstrated before the audience the mischievous effects of alcoholization. This passage between the doctors was famous at the time, and occupied the English and Scotch papers largely.

We should be slow to believe that the profession would persist in any mischievous practice, did not those of us whose hair is already gray remember very well the old days when no water was permitted to patients sick with fever, when their beds were heaped with blankets, windows and doors kept closed, and the victims were saturated with hot sage tea. One of the oldest and most respectable physicians in New England told me this story: He was a student with the most eminent medical man in Massachusetts at the beginning of this century. It was "haying time," and the master had a farmer patient sick with typhoid fever. Master and student visited him in the hot summer's evening, and found him at the last gasp. He could not survive, the night—raging heat, parched mouth and throat, not a drop of water! That night a neighboring farmer, weary with a long, hard day's work, was the watcher; and he fell soon into a profound sleep. The patient took advantage of the situation, arose quietly and made his way to the water-pail in the kitchen, and returned quietly to bed. In the morning the student called, as a matter of mere ceremony; the famous doctor didn't, "because the patient was dead, no doubt." But the patient wasn't! Much to the astonishment of the student, he learned that the patient yet lived. He went in. Pulse soft, skin moist! patient clearly out of the jaws of death. How's this? And so the story of the sleeping watcher and of the water-pail was told him. If that watcher had been awake he would have resisted the patient by force, if need were; and so the poor patient would have died miserably, begging for a little water. Now said my friend, the doctor, strange as it may seem, it was many years after that incident before the profession began to suspect their mistake in the no-water practice, and to allow water freely to fever patients.

It isn't many years ago that bleeding in scarlet fever was the regular practice in dealing with that disease in those days—the terror of every family having small children. One of the most respectable physicians in Maine told me this story: Like all other regular practitioners, he bled his scarlet fever patients, and they died; they utterly refused to survive that treatment. He changed his practice in that particular, and his patients recovered. At one time, when scarlet fever was all through the country, among the children, he spoke to a friend of his, Dr. P., known very well to me, about the practice of bleeding, advising him not to do it. But Dr. P. objected that the "books" prescribed it. "That's true," said Dr. J., my informant, "that's true. But my habit has always been to watch closely the effect of my practice, and, whenever I find myself unsuccessful, to discover the cause, if possible, and not to follow the books blindly. I found my scarlet fever patients could not rally under the bleeding practice; and so I forbore to bleed, and found myself much more successful. Now the death of one is the exception; but under the lancet the recovery of one was the exception." But Dr. J. remarked that his friend Dr. P. continued to follow the books. Scarlet fever entered his own family of three small children, and the father conscientiously killed them all with the lancet.

And now the profession alcoholizes everybody for almost every disease, real or imaginary; and the practice, as many think, is far worse and more disastrous in its results than the old, old practice of excluding water and air from patients sick of typhoid and bleeding those who are suffering with scarlet fever. I know a doctor now—an eminent practitioner, well read, and furthest possible from a quack—who follows to some extent the universal custom of alcoholizing his patients. Why, what can he do? It is in the books. Everybody does it. How can he resist the current—the fashion? A friend of his fell sick of consumption—a brother doctor, living far away; and, as usual, the physicians in the neighborhood were anxious to do their best for their friend and brother, and, among other remedies, prescribed whisky, the panacea in such cases. The patient wrote to his friend, the skillful and eminent doctor far away, informing him that he was laboring under pulmonary difficulties, and that whisky had been prescribed for him, and asking whether it was useful in such cases. His friend replied plainly that he could not see that in any case coming under his observation any benefit had been derived from it.

There are many eminent medical authorities in this country and in Europe who disapprove entirely of alcoholic medication, and some of them denounce it in strong terms. It will be interesting to see how surely, though slowly, this view of the effect of alcohol in medical practice is gaining ground in the profession. I have no room in this article to refer to these writers.—Hon. Neal Dow, in Independent.

Common Sense in Christian Work.

TABERNACLE COLLEGE LECTURE, BY REV. DR. FISH, OF THE BAPTIST CHURCH, OF NEWARK, N. J., TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 16.

Common sense is the best sort of sense. It is natural, practical intelligence that is born in one—not guesswork. It is practical instead of theoretical, and it is especially a good thing for a live Christian or Christian worker to have. If a man wants to do Christ's work, it is common sense for him to be in sympathy with Christ and to enter into his work-purposes and designs; he must be a Christian in the best sense of the term.

Men who succeed, address themselves to one aim; if it is to make money, they let all else go and press on to that goal—they accomplish their purpose by singleness of aim. We speak of the sacred professions. The term came from the priesthood of the Romish Church; men set apart to the sacred profession could hardly touch the earth on which they lived, while the common people devoted themselves to secular pursuits. Every pursuit of man ought to be a sacred pursuit. John Newton said if two angels were sent to the earth, one as prime minister and the other as a street-sweeper, it would be a matter of no difference whether they received the one or the other commission; it would be honor enough that the Lord had sent them. It is possible and practical to carry this right through, and do everything for the Lord Jesus Christ.

Norman Smith, the saddler, was not any the less religious making money for Christ in the saddle business. Noel Bleecker (whom I knew in New York when I was at the seminary) went from his morning devotions to business; at noon he went away alone, and would not allow himself to be disturbed till he had spent fifteen minutes upon his knees, and again at night he had his season of communion with God. Was not that a religious life! Harlan Page started a noon-day prayer meeting at the Tract House, and now every day at noon you will find them holding the prayer meeting Harlan Page established there. If you want to do anything for the Lord, try to keep the thought before your mind constantly that, whether you go out or come in, eat or drink, you are to do everything to glorify God. The reason the world paralyzes a man's piety is because he does not have singleness of aim. The world and business were married before man was created. How can the meal be leavened except it come in contact with the leaven. God put men into the world and asked them to be pious, and they ought to make the world minister to their piety. Dr. Kane, seeing himself in danger of being crushed by an iceberg, said: "I'll use the iceberg;" he thrust out the harpoon, anchored his ship to the iceberg, and it bore him to Polar waters. So you must make the world and business bear you heavenward; virtue is of more value than innocence; struggle makes manly piety; a great deal may be done by culture.

An aged minister of fourscore years, now a distinguished man, when first converted, gathered the children round him in a barn and talked to them of Jesus, and when he began to preach he made a fool of himself. There is nothing like practice. I put my converts right to work; if they say they can't talk and pray in meeting, I say: "Well, you must do some other thing; there are different gifts—some are called to do one thing and some another. You must find out your talent, and put it forward in a well-directed manner."

Many are persuaded that they ought to preach. God always sends two copies of calls to preach. One is your own desire to preach, and the other is, some one that will hear you. Find out your special aptitude and magnify that office; if you can do one thing well, that's as much as is to be expected. Common sense has much to do with the materials of Christian work. Learn to use your tongue and pen. I had a young man in my congregation whom I could not reach; at last I wrote him a letter and sent him "The Great Question," a book by Dr. Boardman. When he came to join the church and related his experience, he said: "That letter brought me, for then I knew you were in earnest."

If you are going to talk about Christ, get full of your subject. You don't want to drop buckets into empty wells and draw up nothing. Have scrap-books of pigeon-holes; save everything you see on any subject that may be of use to you. I heard a man swearing the other day; I stuck the tract "Don't Swear" into his pocket. When he finds it he'll ask: "Did the devil put that in my pocket?" Go equipped; have your materials always at hand. Use tact in handling men. Keep a sharp lookout to catch the best opportunity for approaching a man. Mr. B——, of London, is a butcher and talks to butchers. Seventy butchers have come to him in two or three weeks to ask about their souls. They know he is of their craft and can sympathize with them. A certain lock is composed of five rings, upon which are letters; when the letters are so placed as to spell Jesus, then the lock is unlocked. To unlock a human heart you must tell it of Jesus.

The secret of Dr. Chalmers' success was his blood-earnestness. It is said of Blair that he kept his ideas so long to be dressed, they froze. Sydney Smith said: "Must Christian ministers put their audiences to sleep to get sin out of them, as Adam was put to sleep in order to get Eve out of his side!" John Welch, brother-in-law of John Knox, rose at night and threw his plaid over his shoulder, unable to sleep. His wife asked him: "What is the matter?" "I have three thousand souls on my hands, and I know not how it will go with them."

Dr. Chalmers, riding on a stage-coach by the side of the driver, said: "John, why do you hit that off leader such a crack with your lash?" "Away yonder there's a white stone; that off leader is afraid of that stone; so by the crack of my whip and the pain in his legs, I want to get his idea off from it." Dr. Chalmers went home, elaborated the idea, and wrote "The Expulsive Power of a New Affection." You must drive off the devil and kill the world by putting a new idea in the mind. Handel caught the chimes of one of his grand choruses at a blacksmith's shop, listening to the ring of the anvils. He had music on the brain.

Finally, we need absolute goodness. We are feeble workers, because we are feeble Christians. The philosophy of doing good is to be good. If you would be strong, live near a throne of grace.—New York Observer.

WHAT MISSIONS ARE DOING.

1. Christian civilization is fast supplanting every other, and a chronology, dating from the Savior's birth, must soon come into use in the world's commercial reckoning. Dating from Hegiras or Dynasties must be laid aside.

2. With such vantage ground in commerce and such necessary interchange, no arbitrary restraints of false systems can hide from advanced minds, in every land, the superior religious principles which underlie our civilization.

3. The fact that Asiatic governments are sending so many youth at public expense to study our institutions, is certainly most auspicious, as indicating the attitude of leading and governing minds.

4. The diffusion of books and newspapers, the tide of travelers through all foreign marts, the contact of railroads and telegraph lines in heathen lands, though carrying the evil with the good, will, on the whole, facilitate the conquests of the truth.

5. The fact that so many Christian denominations or societies—over fifty in all—are laboring on heathen soil for a common object, affords a sublime spectacle of Christian union and of moral power. At first sight it looks like division and weakness, but on a further view it strengthens the hold of that central principle which, through all variety of non-essentials, still animates the common missionary zeal of all evangelical believers in whatever land. If it does not yet add conviction to the heathen mind, it gives confidence to Christians at home.

6. The methods of missionary enterprise are greatly improved, as compared with early efforts. The raising up of native agencies is now a demonstrated success. For years valuable influence was lost for want of it. Noble specimens of preachers have been found in nearly all heathen nations. The native mind has capability and susceptibility. With the grace of God the pagan must become a chief reliance in the salvation of his fellows. Hundreds of native churches are now under the pastoral care of men of their own nationality and supported wholly or in part by their gifts.

7. The best schools in heathen lands are those which have been formed under Christian auspices. It is the very highest testimony to their value, that in many instances the support of heathen governments is freely given them.

8. The word of God is now translated into two hundred and seventy-four languages; many of these were, until within a short period, heathen tongues. In how few languages can the Koran be found, or the Shasters?

9. At more than four thousand different stations and out-stations in heathen lands the gospel is now preached by living men. Two thousand missionaries are at work in the broad field, and all Christian laborers, foreign and native, number more than nine thousand.

10. The greatest of all gains is that which must be found in subtle and yet effective moral changes in the whole attitude of the heathen world. It is like the delicate electrical changes which precede the storm. We have no spiritual barometer to mark them, but their power will surely be felt at no distant period. The storm or the earthquake will come suddenly, perhaps like the casting aside of Sandwich Island idolatry, or of Buddhism in Japan, and the prediction will be fulfilled of nations born at once.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC church in Indiana appeals for money to erect a new house, and promises a daily mass to be said fifty years for any one sending $50, ten years for $10, and five years for $5. This is certainly very cheap, and a great sum will be contributed.

THE Protestant Episcopal Church is to district the State of Texas into three dioceses. The southeasterly portion of the State, outlying the Gulf line, is to remain under the charge of Bishop Gregg. The other portion will be in charge of two missionary bishops to be chosen.

BISHOP LEE, of Long Island, stated in an Episcopal convention, the other day, that one church of his diocese paid more money for music last year than all the churches combined paid for missions. All good Christians will agree with the Bishop in pronouncing this fact disgraceful.

THE POPE AND HIS "PRISON."—A foreign exchange states that the Pope has found means to give a new explanation of the sense in which he understands the word captivity. At the reception of the delegates of three Roman parishes he said: "I am not a prisoner in the ordinary sense of the word. I have neither a warder in my prison nor guards at my gates. But I am morally imprisoned, for it would be impossible for me to go out without my person and my dignity being offended."

ARCHÆOLOGISTS have known from time immemorial that a magnificent cathedral once existed near the site of the ancient town of Parthenion, in the Crimea. The exact location was not ascertained until recently, when a party of workmen engaged in constructing a road came upon some walls which upon investigation proved to belong to the cathedral. Further excavations have uncovered the high altar, which bears an inscription to the effect that the cathedral was built in honor of the holy apostles, during the episcopate of Theodore, in the fifteenth century.

THE British Association expeditionary party for the exploration of Moab is on the point of starting for the East in advance of the Americans. The party consists of the Rev. Canon Tristram and Dr. Ginsburg, accompanied by the Hon. Mowbray Trotter, Mr. C. Louis Buxton, Mr. Amherst Hayne and Mr. R. C. Johnson, of Liverpool, and will be joined at Jerusalem by the Rev. F. Klein, the original discoverer of the Moabite stone. The object of the expedition is to make a survey of Moab, and to explore the natural history and antiquities of the country.

IN EGYPT the Copts, descendants of the earliest Christian church in that land, now number two hundred thousand; they hold the Bible in esteem and are accessible to our missionaries. Evangelical effort among them is meeting with great favor. At Cairo the members of a little church, though all of them poor and only eighty in number, gave $350 last year for the support of the gospel. In Osiut a newly-formed church has about ninety earnest working members, who go out two by two every Sunday to labor in surrounding villages. The Protestant missions of Egypt, since the absorption of the Pilgrim mission, are entirely under the control of the United Presbyterian Church of America, with the exception of a school conducted by a daughter of Archbishop Whately.

SINCE the last Polish rebellion the Roman Catholic Church in Poland has been a church without a bishop. In punishment for their conspiracy against the Russian government, the bishops were all banished to Siberia, and the affairs of the church have since that time been under the charge of a board of priests, formed by the Russian government. At length, however, the Pope and the Emperor have come to terms. The Emperor permits the Pope to refill the Polish episcopal sees; and the Pope, on his part, permits the use of the Russian language in those provinces with a mixed population which lie between Russia proper and Poland proper. The Emperor wants to "Russify" these provinces entirely; and, if the Pope will help him in this, he will make some concession with regard to the control of the church in Poland proper.

WE TAKE from the Presbyterian Monthly Record the following important statement: "It has pleased God to hear the prayers of the Presbyterian Church for an increase of men to go forth into the world's harvest. The annual report of the Board and Permanent Committee of Education for 1870 announced that they had received during the previous year 627 students under their care. The new board in May, 1871, reported, for thirteen months, 670. Since that time, until December 16, it has received the recommendations of renewals of 685; and will have upon its roll, before the year ends, about 700, who look to it for assistance. All are needed. Far more are needed. There are not enough yet in all to form one regiment of the United States army. But these are to fight the battles of the cross all over the world."

DURING the illness of the Prince of Wales, Sir Moses Montefiore sent a telegram to the Jewish authorities at Jerusalem, requesting them to pray for the recovery of the royal sufferer. The following is part of the reply of the rabbis: "We then, conjointly with our learned and pious colleagues, assembled in the great synagogue; gave orders to light up the candelabra in all the synagogues of the Holy City; opened the portals of the Holy Ark, and offered up a most fervent prayer for the speedy and perfect recovery of his royal highness, Albert Edward, Prince of Wales—invoking the Holy One (blessed be his name!) to make him live, to grant him health, to strengthen him, and to renew his youth. We also sent a congregation of pious and learned men to pray the whole night at the tomb of our mother Rachel (may her merit protect us!), while, at the same time, we ordered a congregation of equally pious and learned men to call upon our God, before the western wall of the ancient temple, from which spot, we are told by our ancestors the Divine Glory never departed." If the effectual, fervent prayer of "pious and learned" men avail anything, this Prince of the Gentiles has much reason to be grateful to the rulers of the Jews.

REPLYING to the second rule of the Chinese government respecting missions, Lord Granville says: "To prevent women from altogether attending divine worship would be in violation of the freedom of religion provided in the treaty, and would be contrary to the fundamental principles of Christianity." Also to the third and fourth rules: "Her majesty's government cannot allow the claim that the missionaries residing in China must conform to the laws and customs of China, to pass unchallenged. It is the duty of a missionary, as of every other British subject, to avoid giving offense, as far as possible, to the Chinese authorities or people; but he does not forfeit the right to which he is entitled under the treaty as a British subject because of his missionary character. Also that the free exercise of the Christian religion in China is stipulated for by the treaty of 1858, which states: 'Persons teaching or professing it shall alike be entitled to the protection of the Chinese authorities, nor shall any such, peaceably pursuing their calling, and not offending against the laws, be persecuted or interfered with.' Her majesty's government, therefore, although they have given it to be distinctly understood that conversion to Christianity gives no title to British protection against the operation of the laws of the land, could not be indifferent to the persecution of Christians for professing the Christian faith."

SPAIN.—Rev. W. H. Gulick, one of the missionaries in Spain, writes: "The last person burned at the stake in Spain was a woman who was charged with heresy by the inquisition of Seville, and who suffered martyrdom on the seventh of November, 1781. A living Spanish writer says: 'I myself saw the pile on which this last victim was sacrificed to human infallibility; she perished on the spot where thousands had met the same fate. I lament from my heart that the structure which supported their melting limbs was destroyed. It should have been preserved, with the infallible and immutable canon of the Council of Trent over it, for the detestation of future ages.' The same writer adds: 'For centuries Spain has imprisoned, banished and burned her children for the love they bore to Jesus; and only three short years ago she was less accessible to the gospel than Japan or China, or any of the great heathen nations of the world. To-day she throws her gates wide open to the missionaries of the cross, and hundreds of her children are worshiping God in the beauty of holiness, in the temples that he has wrested for them from the hands of their persecutors. Spain calls on us to-day for Christian help and sympathy, and presents at this hour one of the most interesting fields on the face of the globe for gospel work."

GODLY CRAFT.

Paul made a bold and instructive confession when he says: "Nevertheless, being crafty, I caught you with guile." Soul-saving is an art, as much higher than all other arts as its object is greater than all other kinds of human enterprise. "He that winneth souls is wise," and there is a fertility of invention and a studied application of means which are needful to insure success. These alone will accomplish nothing, but they tell amazingly when united and in harmony with the operations of the Holy Spirit. While God gives the increase, and while only the good seed of the gospel bears living fruit, the skill of the sower has much to do with the result. As workers together with God, we may work in such a bungling way as to do little or nothing in bringing souls to Christ. Paul artfully accommodated himself to the conditions around him. "I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some." The guile which he employed consisted in the wise and dexterous use of the lawful and the expedient to move and allure to virtue and piety. Prejudices were conciliated, habits, tastes and opinions were treated with careful delicacy, and all the springs of human action were touched with such a deft and adroit manipulation as to lead the opposers unconsciously up to the acceptance of religious truth. In this there was no compromise of anything essential; but where occasion called for it, there was the most unflinching assertion of the offensive doctrines of the cross.

This combination of art and of fidelity is the element in soul-saving which demands our study and imitation. It is to have craft and guile, and to be at the same time without low cunning, and clear of blamable duplicity. It is to be wise to win, without abating the claims of the gospel: and to be all things to all men, while we know nothing among them but "Christ and him crucified." It will not do to fall back upon the divine power of the gospel, and to rest complacently in the conviction that the Holy Spirit is the adequate and only saving agent. If God accepts of human instrumentalities, and has made the world's salvation dependent upon them, we are responsible for their most effective disposition and use. While everything is in the inspired word, there is much in the manner of its exposition and application. Christ might have put the substance of his teachings into a few propositions as dry and bald as the thirty-nine articles, and as terse and compact as the Nicene creed. He chose, however, a style ornate, and lavishly embellished, illustrating by the most finished parables, and by the richest imagery, and by the largest affluence of figurative language. He labored with zeal, and with the utmost fidelity, and yet with consummate art. His life and intercourse with men shews of whom Paul had learned his craft. To seek and to save the lost he also, in some sort, became all things to all men, adapting himself to the capacities and social customs of the times; but so that sin was always rebuked, sincerity, penitence and faith were commended, and the afflicted were cheered and comforted. The apostles were to be "fishers of men," and to take with them into their higher calling the tact, judgment and practical resources which had been developed by their toils and perils on the Sea of Galilee. Here was a stormier deep before them, and prizes of infinite value to be taken. And here was occasion for the exercise of all their mother wit, and all their daring and shrewdness. The line and the net were scarcely to be cast at random, but rather to be handled with ingenuity and skill. They were to catch men not by casting their nets at a venture, and by drawing it in a careless manner, but with elaborate art, with a view to results.

Our efforts to save men are too often perfunctory in their character, and we turn complacently from them, with the doubtful satisfaction that we have done our part. If the sinner is not saved, it is his own fault. We have delivered our testimony, and here our responsibility ends. But have we used every possible art to awaken and attract him to the cross? Have we studied his character and adapted our means to reach his heart, and to interest him on the subject of personal salvation? The Christian, whether preacher or layman, cannot be clear unless he has brought all resources and all expedients to bear upon his work. "That I might by all means save some" was Paul's endeavor. The adequacy of the gospel, the necessity of the Spirit's operations, are all conceded; but still there was room for godly craft. Among the Greeks he reminded them of what their own poets had said, and illustrated the Christian warfare by allusions to their historic games and their military customs. He was at home in the literature of Athens and Crete, and knew when and how to quote their standard authors. Among the Jews he appealed to his own unblemished Hebrew lineage, and drew his weapons with wonderful tact from the armory of patriarchal and levitical lore.

Of the eminent soul-savers among uninspired men, it is enough to say that their business was an art in which means and expedients were studiously adapted to the great end in view. How to save souls, and how to save the most, is the thing aimed at. Whatever lawful expedients will reach this result are certainly legitimate. Luther and Wesley, scarcely less than Christ and Paul, had to break with the traditions and methods of their times. Whitfield wielded his mighty powers at the expense of regularity and order in the Established Church, but with a single eye to saving results. A church is built to be filled; the gospel is proclaimed to be heard; Christian men and women are to leaven this great worldly mass, and to save the human race. Against the good is marshaled every form of cunning, and the most multifarious devices and inventions of evil. Worldly sensations must be met with the religious, and the wisdom of the serpent, along with the harmlessness of the dove, must inform our religious life and enterprise. If Christians are solely intent upon saving souls, they will not stand upon dignity and order, they will not be content to move in the old ruts, they will not be satisfied with a stated round of duties which produce no fruit, but they will seek new and improved methods. The elaborate wiles which the devil throws around a single soul surpass description. The snares and allurements of the world are a most formidable and complex apparatus for the destruction of men. We must also be fruitful in the devices and allurements of love, study effect upon character to a sanctified end, and seek by the most varied appliances, and by the highest art, to compass the salvation of perishing souls.

ABSTRUSE PREACHING.

I suppose the objects to be secured in preaching are to instruct, convince and persuade—of course with the grand aim of leading men to Christ. Many styles of preaching and "diversities of gifts" may be and are successfully employed as instruments in achieving the conversion of men. Men often the most diverse in characteristics are equally successful in the great purpose of the ministry—in "turning men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." But, we take it, all men who have been eminently successful have been plain, or easily understood, preachers. I have heard, and perhaps have made the remark, that the proportion of metaphysical hearers is always small. In an audience of four hundred, I should think forty metaphysical minds would be a large average. This statement true, or nearly approximating the truth, the metaphysical preacher must ever have a small audience, while the great body of his hearers must be uninterested and unedified.

The plain preacher is, of course, always understood by the most abstract and refined reasoners in his audience, and the non-speculative and practical class can understand none other. I have heard some profound and abstruse thinkers who had the happy art of simplifying and developing their ideas with apt and lucid illustrations. This is a great excellence. But all men who have metaphysical tendencies of thought have not this illustrating talent, or, having it, do not feel nor see the need of employing it as a means of simplification. I think this is to be deplored. They are needlessly shorn of a large measure of their usefulness. Let such as God has gifted with the power of profound and abstruse thought "take thought" how few can follow them with interest and profit, and let them, by well-chosen illustrations, more perfectly express their thoughts to common and practical minds.

I have often heard it remarked by persons, after they had heard some great and powerful thinker in the pulpit: "How plain he was! How easy it was to understand him! He really seemed to be saying something that I had always known, but had never been able to express so clearly."

The great Preacher, whose powers were competent to the mastery and best exhibitions of all possible styles, chose to be so clear, so simple, and yet so attractive, that "the common people heard him gladly." With what admirable wisdom, and yet without any seeming effort, he drew his illustrations and conveyed his ideas with things familiar to the business and bosoms of men! How often he said: "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a man going forth to sow;" "like an householder, who went forth early in the morning to hire laborers;" "like a woman hiding leaven in three measures of meal;" "like a marriage;" "like a great supper." Here is the model divine. Let preachers imitate him as best they may, and it shall be well with them and their hearers.

W.

MRS. MARTHA ALICE HALLORAN, wife of G. W. W. Goodwyn, died in this city on the second instant, in her forty-third year. Sister Goodwyn was raised in New Orleans, and was from her childhood an exemplary member of the Methodist Church. We have rarely known a more unselfish and devoted Christian, or one more actively engaged in such church and benevolent work as became her sex. Like Tabitha, "this woman was full of good works and alms-deeds which she did." She was the blessing and joy of a large household, the stay and counselor of her husband, and the wise and affectionate guide of her children. Hers was a most beautiful and exemplary character, and seldom has a death in the circles of New Orleans Methodism created greater regret and sorrow. Her funeral and burial were attended by Bishop Keener and the Methodist pastors and ministers of New Orleans, and by a large concourse of those who had long known and loved her. Her memory, embalmed in the hearts of hundreds, will be long cherished, and her example of Christian grace and usefulness will bear fruit which shall be fully manifest only in the final day.

WE RECEIVE frequent inquiries about the fate of obituaries sent us. Where they have not been received we inform the parties seeking for information. Where they are on hand they will appear as soon as possible. Our little sheet is a good deal crowded at times with advertisements, and the space for these communications is rather limited. In many instances we are compelled to condense those we receive, but we insert them all sooner or later, and at such length as we can. We value highly the record of holy living and dying, but the writers must study condensation, and be always as brief as the nature of the case allows. Write only what is essential of the deceased, and where topics for an essay are suggested, treat these separately, and prepare them as articles or essays for another department of the paper. We dislike exceedingly to leave out whole pages of prose and poetry in the obituaries of little children. These little ones are dear to God, and "in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven," and they are dear to us; but long pages of affectionate and treasured memories are not to the purpose. Aged, mature and eminent Christians must have more space, as their history and experience are of general interest, and edifying to the church. Some of our cotemporaries of the Methodist press limit obituaries to say ten or fourteen lines, and charge high rates for all beyond this limit. This we shall not do. Some obituaries ought to be of considerable length—many should be exceedingly brief. What we can publish shall be published freely; and so far from discouraging the writing of the dying testimonies and triumphs of God's children, we would rather encourage the practice, and invite the continuance of this class of contributions.

THE FESTIVITIES of Mardi Gras were heightened by the presence in our midst of the Grand Duke Alexis of Russia. He arrived on Monday morning, and is undergoing the usual round of entertainments—theaters, opera, balls, guzzling, dancing and feeding proper on such occasions. It is a sad comment upon our civilization and taste, leaving religion and morality out of the question, that these should be the chief and imperative requisites in the expression of a people's courtesy and hospitality. Not having had a glimpse of his royal highness, we cannot say from personal observation what manner of man he is. He has been described to us, however, as a stout, fair-haired and fair-skinned person, and looking very much like a man of twenty-five who has a good bank account and is well-to-do in the world. The Picayune sketches him thus:

Standing over six feet high, the Grand Duke is a finely proportioned young man, with an extremely light complexion, well-shaped features, framed in neatly-trimmed moustache and side whiskers, and withal much handsomer than any of the numerous wood-cuts of his appearance that have been published. His attire consisted of a dark suit of clothes, over which he wore a heavy overcoat of light brown color. A black silk hat completed this simple dress.

What he thinks of our country and of those who dance and hobnob with him we cannot altogether imagine.

FAREWELL TO MEAT.—New Orleans is likely to rival Rome itself in the celebration of the carnival. Scarcely was ancient Venice more stirred than we are now by the strange and grotesque proceedings of Shrove Tuesday. The Corso at Rome, and the northern boulevards of Paris, in their palmiest Mardi Gras festivities, produce no greater popular sensation than the carni vale (farewell to meat) in New Orleans. Thus has come down to us the Saturnalia of paganism, through the channel of papal superstition and folly. We can almost imagine the Io Saturnalia, pouring from pagan throats into the ears of Augustus and Caligula, as being revived in our streets. This feast of Saturn was a most convenient thing to be taken up and baptized as the compensation for the coming forty days' fast. If meat must be given up the vale must be a hearty one, and the brief adieu to flesh must be pronounced by such fleshly liberties as shall leave a long perfume. Better be without the fast, and without the excesses of frivolity and riot, which usher it in. The headaches, and penitence of Ash Wednesday, and all the abstinence, masses, confessions and penances of lent, will hardly atone for the previous license. The world's share in the religion of the festival is the grand excitement and riot which religion seems to indorse, and also the profit brought to its manifold crafts by this relic of paganism and popery. It is a curious and extravagant dissipation attracting thousands of eager visitors, but we could wish the community well rid of the custom. The procession of "the Mystic Krewe of Comus" is often an exhibition of art, both pleasing and instructive; but, taken in connection with the carnival and its attendant revelings, the effect is altogether pernicious to the piety and good morals of the people.

DEATH OF MRS. ANDREW.

Mrs. E. W. Andrew, widow of Bishop James O. Andrew, died at Selma, January 25, 1872. From the address of Rev. Mark S. Andrews, delivered on the funeral occasion, we make the following extracts:

I would that my personal knowledge had been such that I could, from incidents in her life, bring vividly before you her many virtues, as they were seen by others. But though my personal acquaintance with her was limited, I was no stranger to her fame and character. Wherever I have traveled in the bounds of the old Alabama Conference, the name of Aunt Emma—as she was affectionately called—was a household word with many Methodist families. The stream of youth of both sexes, that in former times flowed to Summerville and back, from all parts of our State and from other States, spread her name and influence abroad. And the seventeen years of married life with her late husband brought her so prominently before the entire church that there are but few, I suppose, in our extended connection who are not somewhat familiar with her history and many excellencies. We drop a tear to-day, when we remember we shall see her no more, and that her teachings and influence henceforth will be felt only in the recollection of a piety that was always consistent, a faith that never faltered nor became gloomy, and a charity that was prompt to relieve the needy, and draw a vail over the frailties of others.

She was seventy-four years old, and for sixty-one years a member of the Methodist Church. During this long service—as those who knew her well gladly testify—there never was a word of complaint against her for dereliction of duty, want of zeal, or for violation of the proprieties of life or of church discipline. Her's was truly an exemplary Christian life. Endowed by nature with rare mental gifts and great force of character, she seemed without effort to impress those about her. Of genial disposition, and given to hospitality, her home was the center of a refined and delightful social circle. Here her Christian character shone most brilliantly, and was most effective, for she was ever firm in the defense of truth, and in insisting on holiness of heart as indispensable to religious comfort and usefulness, and to future happiness.

While not ostentatious in her piety, she was by no means timid in the service of her Redeemer. She felt she owed him all that the most positive life could give; and hence she was "bold to take up, and firm to sustain, the consecrated cross." When talking of the great facts of redemption, or leading the devotions of the social prayer meeting, or in the family circle, her rarest powers were called forth, and the fervor of her nature sparkled out in the most beautiful language and in apt quotations from the Scriptures. This peculiarity was seen even in her latest days, although the mental powers had become somewhat enfeebled by a protracted case of typhoid fever two years ago.—Though the memory of names, and even of persons most dear, seemed to have perished from her mind, still in her conversations about the church and Christian experience, and in the prayers in the family, there was manifested much of the strength of thought and facility of expression that gave such a charm to her society in her last days.

Lying in a state of unconsciousness for several days before her death, she gave no expression of her feelings, and no dying testimony to the truth. We heard nothing from her as she looked through the curtains of death and saw the pearly gates opening. This, however, was not necessary. Her life and profession to the last were enough. For sixty-one years she confessed Jesus before men, and he has verified his promise and confessed her before his Father in heaven. Our faith enables us boldly and confidently to make this assertion; and while we weep, it is not on her account, but for ourselves and this poor world, which is so much poorer because she is dead.

Certainly there is reason for hope in her death and for rejoicing that the "prisoner is released." Paul's sublime argument in support of the great Christian doctrine of the resurrection of the dead—which constitutes a part of our beautiful and appropriate burial service—fills us with comfort. When we bury her it will be with the conviction, yea knowledge, that she will rise again. We who have faith in Christ need not go beyond our personal experience to know that Christianity is true. The doctrine of the resurrection is a part—a glorious part—of this divine truth, and we are confident we shall not sleep always. And our beloved sister will come forth in white robes with songs and rejoicing. She shall be changed; yea she shall see Christ as he is, and be like him.

THE Baltimore correspondent of the Richmond Christian Advocate, writing January 29, says: "The Rev. Dr. William E. Munsey has just returned home from a short lecturing tour in the Southwest, where his brilliant oratory has attracted universal attention. He has been lecturing at Louisville, Memphis, Holly Springs, Mississippi, and Jackson, Tennessee. The Louisville and Memphis papers give sketches of the doctor's lectures, and speak in glowing terms of his eloquence. His return home was hailed with joy by the members of his church and congregation, and the large Central church edifice was filled to its utmost capacity both last Sunday morning and night. In this connection, let me inform your readers that Dr. Munsey is now preparing for the press a volume of his sermons, which announcement will doubtless be gratifying to his numerous admirers throughout the land."

A SUGGESTION.—Since our connection with the Advocate it has had a "donation account," which has furnished the paper to the poor, particularly to widows and orphans. We have knowledge, in many cases, what comfort and benefit this benefaction has been. Shall it be continued to them? Would not this be a proper and good form of Christmas gift or New Year's present to such families? If any may wish us to dispense benefaction in this direction, we are in circumstances to do it intelligently, and shall cheerfully perform the service. A gentleman who has contributed annually to the "donation account" sends his remittance for this year, paying for all our periodicals for himself, and the balance, $17.50, to supply the Advocate to the poor. Who will follow the good example? St. Louis Christian Advocate.

RESPONSE NO. 4.

NEW ORLEANS, FEB. 12, 1872.

MR. EDITOR: I have just received a letter from Clinton, Louisiana, responding to the $100 Centenary proposition. Colonel D. C. Hardee gives $100, and Charles McVay, Esq., gives $100. This is the second time these gentlemen have given this sum toward the repair of the building. Yours truly,

J. C. KEENER.

ECCLESIA.—In the article of Dr. Spillman, on the Unity and Indefectibility of the Church, published last week, the types made sad work with this word. The fact that we have no Greek type occasioned the error. Of course the doctor wrote ecclesia plainly, and we suppose our readers generally supplied the right word.

WE HAVE RECEIVED from Hon. W. P. Kellogg, Senator in Congress from Louisiana, the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1870.

TRUE HAPPINESS.—Money unsanctified makes nobody happy; neither do big houses, big farms, large acquaintances, power, fame; but he is only happy that enjoys religion—he that knows his sins are forgiven. How is it with you, reader?

THE BEQUESTS OF ISAAC RICH.

Mr. Rich, of Boston, gave largely while he lived. The following is the disposal of his large fortune by will:

The will of the late Isaac Rich was entered for probate to-day, January 29, 1872. After numerous private bequests, among which is $10,000 to Rev. Joseph Cummings, president Wesleyan University, at Middletown, Connecticut, Mr. Rich directs that all his estate and property shall finally go to the trustees of the Boston Wesleyan University, and be under its management and direction to promote and perpetuate piety and learning; and inasmuch as he hopes the Boston Theological Seminary will be merged into the University, he directs his trustees within three years after his decease, in case the Boston University shall have become possessed of real and personal estate to the value of $200,000, to pay to the trustees of said University the sum of $10,000, in five years $20,000, in seven years $30,000; and at the end of ten years to convey to said trustees all the real, personal and mixed estates together with the accumulations, for their absolute use and disposal forever.

In case the Boston agency does not, within ten years, acquire property to the value of $200,000, or, in case it abandons its charter before that time, an undivided half of the above-mentioned property shall revert to the Wesleyan University at Middletown, Connecticut, $100,000 to the town of Wellfleet, the income of which is to be used for the purposes of education; $100,000 to the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, $25,000 to the Preachers' Aid Society of the New England Conference, $25,000 to the Marine Wesleyan Academy at Readfield, $25,000 to the East Maine Academy at Bucksport, and the residue and remainder of all the property to the Wesleyan University at Middletown.

William Claflin, of Newton; William H. West, of Dorchester; and John Goldsbury, of Boston, are named as executors. The property under the will is sworn at $1,700,000.

Obituaries.

Florence Jane, youngest child of Rev. F. W. and A. M. Sharbrough, departed this life January 23, 1872, at Brookhaven, Mississippi. Her disease was typhoid pneumonia, and was of four weeks' duration. Her suffering was beyond description; but all this is at an end with her. She has crossed the Jordan, and now basks in the fullness of him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me," etc. Her age was one year, seven months and two days.

F. W. S.

Bro. Archer Brown died at his residence, near Prattville, Autauga county, Alabama, January 10, 1872. He was born in North Carolina, February 5, 1802, and at his death had reached nearly threescore and ten years.

He came to Alabama in 1820, almost without a dollar, and commenced the improvement of the farm on which he lived more than fifty years, and where he ended his earthly pilgrimage. Having the advantages of a virgin soil, blessed with health and the smiles of Providence, he accumulated a handsome fortune. He was twice married in his youth to Miss Mary Griffeth, after whose death he was married to Miss Maria Killet, who still survives him. He sustained the character of an honest and upright citizen, an humble and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in the pastoral fellowship of which he had lived for thirty-five years. His piety was of a quiet and unostentatious character. He had humble views of his own religious attainments. His disease, being that of cancer, had the effect to produce great depression of spirits, yet he ever manifested much pleasure in devotional exercises.

A few days before his death he concluded the final settlement of all his temporal business, even to the payment of his physician's bill, which, being assured, was much to the satisfaction of all his family. He then committed all to God, and said: "I am now ready to go." In this calm frame of mind he awaited the Master's call, which was not long delayed.

R. S. WOODWARD.

James Treadwell was born in Clark county, Georgia, December, 1797, and in 1820 was married to Miss Mary Pace, of the aforesaid county and State. A short time after his marriage he moved to Calhoun county, Alabama, where he resided until the fall of 1847, when he again moved and settled in Leake county, Mississippi, where he resided until his death, which occurred November 22, 1871, aged seventy-four years.

Though plain from youth, he never formally attached himself to the church until a few months before his death, when he professed a saving faith in Christ, and received Christian baptism at the hands of the late and good brother, J. S. Collins.

From the time he joined the church until his death the subject of religion was his all-absorbing theme, and the manner in which he discoursed upon the great fundamental tenets of the religion of Jesus showed that his palmy days had not been spent to the entire neglect of the "one thing needful."

Bro. Treadwell was one of those characters who esteemed a good name above the riches of this world; and the same predominant principle is satisfactorily manifested in the lives and character of the large family of children raised under his fostering care. As a natural consequence, a man of his moral worth was universally beloved, and his numerous friends join his children and relatives in mourning his loss.

J. M. WEEMS.

Died, at his residence in Natchitoches parish, November 9, 1871, Mr. W. A. Tucker, aged forty-nine years, eleven months and nineteen days.

Heaven from all creation hides the book of Fate—
All but the page prescribed.

The subject of this memoir was born in Wilcox county, Alabama, on the twenty-first of November, 1821. He joined the Methodist Church at the early age of fifteen, in which he lived an exemplary and useful member until his death. He was a good citizen, a kind husband and a devoted Christian. In all the relations of life he was faithful. He possessed a strong natural intellect improved by constant study, untiring energy and solid piety. He had almost constant communion with God, daily assembling his family around the altar, praying with and for them, instructing them on all subjects pertaining to this life and that which is to come, and in all times and in all places demonstrating the character of a true Christian.

None ever came to him for aid without receiving it, often depriving himself that others might be assisted. Devoted to the interests of the church and always at the post of duty, when death came he was ready. Several times during his illness he told me that he heard the heavenly host singing, and so real did it seem that he himself sang a portion of the hymn, "Jehovah reigns." He was very fond of singing the praises of his Savior, and many mornings his voice, so full of melody, would arouse his family by singing some favorite hymn.

From the first he seemed impressed with the idea that he would die. Although anxious to be spared longer to his family, he assured us of his resignation to the will of God. He had many crosses and disappointments in life, and those who knew him best bear testimony to the sweetness of his disposition, the uprightness of his purposes and the purity of his honor. He leaves a diary, kept almost daily for over twenty-five years, containing much valuable information, the contents of which give us a more perfect knowledge of the character and ability of its writer than can any fulsome of mine.

L. A. THARP.

Eugenia, wife of Samuel Ervin, and daughter of Rev. B. B. Wellington, deceased, of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Mobile, Alabama, February 27, 1850, and died in Hinds county, Mississippi, January 2, 1872.

With all her superior mental strength she was modest and unassuming, and free from all ostentation—a true type of a noble woman. In the sick room she was at home, and as a nurse of the sick there were few her superior. The crowning virtue of her character was deep piety—a Christian almost from childhood; but one, however, of great pretensions or loud professions, but uniform, constant and faithful. The few last years of her life have been times of great affliction to her by the death of both of her parents. In both these cases was the beauty of her Christian character clearly shown. She bore them with calmness and Christian resignation. When the time came in her own case, which tries the souls of all men, that same great spirit possessed her. There was a perfect triumph of faith in her death. When the hour came in which she knew she must depart, she first called her husband to her bedside, and exhorted him in the most beautiful and touching language to become and live a Christian. She then requested the presence of her sister, and, after blessing her, she said: "Laura, don't cry for me. I do not fear death; there is nothing terrible in it to me." Her little babe, which was then only a few days old, was brought to her by its request, and, after embracing him, she prayed most earnestly that he might be a man of God—a minister of the gospel. A moment of calm following this scene, she spoke of the bright shores of heaven and of the great happiness she soon would enjoy in again meeting her parents. She exerted herself then, and sang a stanza of that beautiful hymn, "I would not live always." "On Jordan's stormy banks" was sung by her request by those who were present, and at the close she bade each, one by one, a final farewell. All having shook hands with her for the last time, she prayed for grace to sustain her in the last. At the end of her prayer she remarked: "Can I say Amen?" and said "Yes," and repeated it several times. All was quiet for a time. The by-standers thought she would never speak again, when she aroused and said, "O how happy I am," and never breathed again.

J. W. McNEIL.

Sarah J. Robinson (maiden name, Lowe) was born in Fairfield district, South Carolina, October 23, 1812, and was married to C. E. Robinson, November 5, 1829. They moved from South Carolina to Sumpter county, Alabama, in 1831; from Alabama to Clark county, Mississippi, in 1842; from thence to Kemper county, Mississippi, in 1843, where she died April 15, 1871, in the fifty-ninth year of her age.

She had religious impressions early in life, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when a child. Herself and husband were converted to God at a camp meeting held at Cook's camp ground, South Carolina, in the fall of 1831.

This is a brief record of one of the purest and best of women. Few have ever borne a more irreproachable character. From childhood to the day of her death her entire life was characterized by the most excellent disposition of mind and heart. She was kind to all; affectionate to her family, and devoted to her church. Whether as wife, mother or neighbor, she acted her part so well as to provoke the admiration of all. Governed by the purest purposes and her conduct regulated by the greatest prudence, her life was weighed in balances. Having set out for heaven in early life, changed from nature to grace by the Holy Ghost, she adorned her profession with a pious walk and godly conversation. The utmost sincerity and earnestness of her entire religious life was manifested. She was strictly conscientious, and having a high appreciation of the obligation of a Christian, she labored to stand approved before God and the world. Her religion was not of the tedious kind, but quietly and persistently, against all opposing influences and through all the vicissitudes of life, she maintained her integrity.

Her death was sudden. She went to church the day she died, over muddy roads and swollen streams, in an ox-wagon, the condition of the roads being such as not to admit of travel in a buggy. She returned home, headed the table at dinner, and inquired about a revival meeting I had attended. On the joy evinced in her pleasing countenance when I told her there were thirty conversions. Dinner over an complaint—she took a seat on one side of the fire, myself on the other, her husband between. She was talking about Bro. Frank Walker. I saw her countenance change the next moment I rapid blinking of the eyes—still talking on the same subject. The next moment she fell on the hearth. I raised her up, and she gasped four times. Without a struggle or a groan she exchanged earth for heaven.

Unlike many others, she came to Jordan without knowing it. She approached the end of life's journey in the ripeness of years and in the vigor of health, with the soft hues of autumn lingering on her cheeks, while the snows of winter were on her brow, with a face so calm that from it seemed to reflect all the peace of life, and a smile so gentle that only the purest love of earth and heaven could have traced it there. Unlike others, no violent conflict of moral powers marked her last hours. The waters of death laved her feet, and no one knew it. The stream was so narrow and the passage so brief that one step brought her to the margin; another transported her to the other side. I announced that she was gone. No one knew that her end was so nigh. She has left a husband, seven sons and two daughters to mourn her loss. Her mother died in 1863. William, another son, died in the triumphs of faith in time of the war. The surviving children and husband are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. May the wise counsel and godly example of the mother be blessed to the salvation of all the children.

FEMALE BOARDING SCHOOL.

THE SPRING SESSION of this school, located in the pleasant town of Athens, in Tennessee, on the East Tennessee and Georgia railroad, midway between Knoxville and Chattanooga, will begin on MONDAY, JANUARY 29, 1872.

The school is in charge of Mrs. M. W. Sullins, assisted by competent teachers. The boarding department is in the care of Rev. T. and Mrs. Sullins.

Athens is an excellent location for schools, noted for health, and was the resort of visitors from the South last summer, in quest of health and pleasure.

Young ladies educated in this fine climate will live longer and enjoy more of life than if educated in the South; and the difference in expense would more than pay the passage to and from this place, so that parents in the South can educate their children here cheaper than at home.

The school rooms are in the same building as the family residence, and pupils can attend school at all times without exposure. Thoroughness in studies, promoting health, developing mental and moral faculties is the constant aim of the principal.

Terms.

Tuition in Literary Department, per term of five months, from $10 to $15, according to studies, payable half in advance, the other half at the middle of the session.

THE FLOWERS ON A FROLIC.

Winter once fell fast asleep
On a New Year's day,
Ventured out to play.

Hidden away in the dark caves
They for weeks have lain:
It would be so nice, they thought,
To come up again.

First they peeped—then they laughed—
Never was such fun:
Violets, with their purple caps,
Capered in the sun.

Periwinkle's sweet blue eyes
Danced with life and joy,
White and yellow crocuses,
May-buds fair and coy.

Daffodils in orange silk,
Hyacinths in green:
Such a pretty, merry sight
Ne'er before was seen!

And while they sported there,
Happy as the day,
Up rose winter from his lair,
Grim and stern and gray.

Tweaked the violet's purple caps,
Pinched the may-buds fair,
Turned the crocus blossoms pale,
With his freezing air.

Poor flowers! pretty flowers!
'Twas a sorry sight—
All their sweet, unconscious pranks
Scattered in affright.

All their merry gambols o'er,
Glad to shrink and run
Underneath the friendly earth
Till the spring should come.

Learn a lesson, little ones:
Winter never sleeps;
Though he slumbering seems, he still
One eye open keeps.

Stay at home another time,
And don't come out mocking
Till you hear at the door
April's gentle knocking.

CROCUS.

Sunshine! All the way down from the sky and over the world, it came through the gray winter dawning, and into a big bay window, where the plants were taking their morning nap. Right through the glass it sprang, but nobody heard any crash, and most of the flowers paid no attention. Only a multitude of sharp eyes began to open in the crocus corner.

"The top o' the morning to you, children," cried the new-comer, chucking them under the chins. "Bless your bright eyes! How have you slept?"

"Nicely," answered the chorus, and every crocus rubbed the bright eyes with the sharp little fingers. "Dear Mr. Sunbeam, how good it is to see you again! Pray where have you been all this long time?"

"On the other side of the world, my dears," said the cheery voice, "where I didn't see anything I liked so well as your shiny little faces. Hurried right back, you see; lightning express, bound to be first on the spot. But, dear me! I must pay my respects to the ladies. How do, Primmies? Sweeter than ever, I declare!"

A group of pretty Chinese primroses bobbed their little heads and smiled bashfully.

"How are you, Madam Pollux? Seems to me you're looking a little stiffer than usual; but then age will tell. Mesdemoiselles Fish-Geranium, how uncommonly blooming you are, really quite stocky too; wonder how much you'd measure round the waist? By the way, wouldn't you smell as sweet by any other name? Ivy Green, what's the matter with you! You droop about here as if you were trying to be delicate. Never knew one of your race that was. Caught cold the other night, eh? Nonsense; that's putting on airs. You, a shoot of the tough old Saxon stock! Servant, Mistress Oleander, when are you going to let me see those buds? Won't speak to me, hey? and I so interested in you! Now, that's too bad; pity handsome people have such tempers."

Mr. Sunbeam is a wild fellow, just as bluff and saucy as he can be; but he has a warm heart, as you will find out if you get on the right side of him. He never hectors the little ones, though he does like to tease the fine lady flowers. Miss Oleander thinks him very rude, because he is always peeping and asking about her buds. Of course a lady that makes such a magnificent toilet can afford to take a year for it if she pleases, and it's none of his business. Was she not the belle of the season last winter? Did not everybody admire her perfect pink and white complexion, and was it not all because she had so little of his company? Miss Oleander thinks it is a shame she has to stand in the south window, where that horrid Sunshine stays all day. What with his rude speeches and his staring, she knows she is turning just as red as those common out-door things.

But Mr. Sunbeam has gone around to the crocuses.

"Back again, pets! Never saw anything like the way you grow! Crocuses all over the world are smart little people, but you do beat all. What's the particular hurry?"

The little faces looked so happy. "Oh, don't we grow? You can't think how hard we have been trying! There's a reason, you see; tell him all about it, Goldy!"

"Yes," spoke up a fine yellow crocus, who had been trying to get the floor. "Yes, we've got a mission, I can tell you! Before you knew us, Mr. Sunbeam, we lived down in the cellar, where it was dark, and you may suppose we had a dull time of it. But we kept up good heart, for we knew we shouldn't stay there always. One day our mistress came down to see us, and we heard her say we were doing finely, and must go up stairs pretty soon. Then we jumped most out of our little pots. 'But,' she added, 'I don't know what I shall do with them, for they ought to go in that bay window, and it will be quite full when the hyacinths are in.' Then we felt sorry we were only poor little crocuses, and I do believe we would have shed a tear or two; but we had grown so plump, sitting there with nothing to do, that we couldn't so much as sigh without bursting our jackets. The very next night was that terribly cold one; you remember hearing about it, Mr. Sunbeam? In the morning we heard such a wailing overhead we could not think what was the matter. By and by somebody came and carried us all up stairs, and there was such a sight! Ever so many plants were hanging their heads and looking very faint, and all the people were fussing over them, and [illegible]. 'Calla Lily,' said one, and 'Oh, my beautiful pink Begonia!' cried another. I noticed that it went hardest with those that had the longest names. I should choke if I tried to tell you what some of them were called; but I suppose they were foreigners, and had delicate constitutions. It was really dreadful; many of them had to be amputated way down to the roots, and they were put down in the cellar in our places, and we took their places on the flower-stand. Then we began to think it was not bad to be only tough little crocuses after all, and we made up our minds to grow very fast, and be as much comfort as we could. And don't you think these dear little primroses went right to work and budded, though they were so small you couldn't expect it of them? I know they never would tell of it themselves, they are so modest. And we are all so glad we didn't try to grow big, but only to blossom.' The ladies seem to like us very much; they bring all their visitors to see us, and call us 'perfect darlings.' And then, there's the Boy—that's a sort of wild animal, I believe, only part human, but I am not sure, for we don't see him very often. I think he has hoofs, for when he comes in the ladies cry out, 'Take care! Oh, look at your great tracks on the carpet!' (The carpet has splendid red roses on, and big bunches of purple flowers, enough to make a crocus wink to look at 'em.) And then the ladies look so disgusted, and they call him a Boy! He walks about with his hands in his pockets, and he looks at the flowers, and whistles, but never seems to know what to say, till he comes to our corner, and then his face lights up and looks real pleasant, and he sings right out: 'Hello! jolly little cusses!'

"What can he mean by using such dreadful language! I try to look reprovingly at him, but I always have to laugh, and then he thinks I like it."

Yellow Crocus paused, out of breath, and soon a quiet purple and white beauty spoke. "Do you remember how the people talked when they stood around us yesterday? One said: 'I enjoy bulbs more than anything else; they make me know the resurrection.' Then I held my breath, for I knew they were thinking of something holy. Presently another spoke: 'Pink flowers are the loveliest of all; nothing could be sweeter than a pink crocus. But I never saw one; they do not grow so, do they? Perhaps they are being kept for heaven.'

"What do you think, Mr. Sunbeam? Have we got any little pink cousins in that beautiful land?"

"Don't know," said Mr. Sunbeam, meditatively. "Never been there. Shouldn't wonder, though, if you might go now, without much fixing. Why, lots of those human creatures think they're going; they expect to grow beautiful somehow, you see. Some of them will need a sight of altering. Don't bother your little heads about it; you've nothing to do but be jolly!"

But the crocus corner grew very quiet; and before Mr. Sunbeam said "Good night," all the pretty heads were nodding over the mighty question: "Where do good little crocuses go to when they die?"—Carl Spencer.

TOM'S GOLD-DUST.

"Uncle," said Tom one day, "it seems to me your things don't look as well as they might." They were in the garden, and "the things" the boy had his eyes on were the currant bushes.

"I don't expect they do," replied his uncle; "I'm no great hand at a garden. Well, sir, what can you improve?"

"I can try on the currants," said Tom. "They want to be trimmed out, and the wood cut off, and the right suckers trained. Don't you ever dig around them, and put ashes on the roots?"

His uncle had never done these things; did not know that they ought to be done. He thought, he said, "currants took care of themselves."

"But they can be cared for," said Tom, "and do all the better."

"Suppose you try, boy," said his uncle.

His uncle did not believe much would come of it, but he had reason to change his mind. Much did come of it. All at once, it seemed to him, for time goes fast to an old man, his bushes were loaded with fruit, fine large currants, such as his garden had not seen for many a day, if ever before. People, when they walked into the garden, exclaimed: "What splendid currants you have!"

"That boy knows how to take care of his gold-dust," said his uncle often to himself, and sometimes aloud.

Tom went to college, and every account they heard of him he was going ahead, laying a solid foundation for the future.

"Certainly," said his uncle, "certainly. That boy, I tell you, knows how to take care of his gold-dust."

"Gold-dust!" Where did Tom get gold-dust? He was a poor boy. He had not been to California. He never was a miner. Where did he get gold-dust? Ah! he has seconds and minutes, and these are the gold-dust of time—specks and particles of time, which boys and girls, and grown-up people, are apt to waste and throw away. Tom knew their value. His father, or minister, had taught him that every speck and particle of time was its weight in gold; and his son took care of them as if they were. He never spent them foolishly, but only in good bargains; "for value received" was stamped on all he passed away. Take care of your gold-dust.—Little America.

LIKE most garments, like most carpets, everything in life has a right side and a wrong side. You can take my joy, and by turning it around, find troubles on the other side; or you may take the greatest trouble, and by turning it around, find joys on the other side. The gloomiest mountain never casts a shadow on both sides at once, nor does the greatest of life's calamities.

The Farm and Garden.

GRAFTING GRAPES.

So many new varieties of grapes are being tried every year which ultimately do not prove valuable, that, to prevent loss of the roots, many of our cultivators have tried various plans of grafting, with variable success.

At the recent meeting of the Horticultural Society of Western New York, D. S. Wagoner, who has had much experience and success in grafting the grape, gave a description of the mode which he adopts. He grafts from early spring till the last of June. The grafts are cut early the previous winter and packed in sawdust. He grafts a little below the ordinary surface of the ground and covers with earth. The moisture of the soil is preserved by two inches of mulching. The cleft is sawn in without splitting. He has set the Delaware on Isabella roots with good success, and in one instance had a crop of grapes the same year. A strong stock is desirable, such as Isabella, Catawba and Diana. The Rebecca does better on a strong stock than on its own roots. In addition to this statement, Dr. Farley, of Union Springs, informs us that he finds the Iona greatly improved by grafting, and he has shown us fine bunches of this variety, more handsome and compact than any we have seen on Iona vines on their own roots.

The Ionia is an admirable grape where it is not subject to the attacks of thrips and other contingencies to which it is subjected. On the eastern shore of Lake Michigan it is giving good satisfaction, and should be cultivated.

RATS IN THE HENNERY.

A lady who has a number of fine hens, to which she had devoted a good deal of care and attention during the winter, in hope of obtaining an early and a fair crop of fresh eggs, was surprised at the meager result actually reached. The hens made noise, in singing and cackling, enough for every-day layers, and yet only occasionally did she get an egg. The lady at length determined to watch operations and ascertain, if possible, the cause of the failure. She saw the hens go upon the nest, but if she was not present when they came off, no egg was found. At length constant watching and waiting solved the mystery. A day or two since, while on the watch, a hen came off the nest and commenced cackling. Almost instantly an old rat came out of a hole, and running into a barrel which was thrown down on its side, and in which the nest was, at once nosed the egg out upon the ground, then lay down upon its back, and getting the egg between its fore paws and nose, commenced squealing, when two other rats came out, and taking the rat with the egg by the hind legs, dragged it, egg and all, into the hole. The lady affirms that she can substantiate the foregoing fact by at least three witnesses.—Poultry Standard.

PLANT COMPOST.

The Massachusetts Ploughman says: Compost for house plants should be made of the following ingredients:

1. Good garden mold.
2. Mold from decayed turfs, from a pasture or field.
3. Decomposed stable or cow-yard manure.
4. Mold from decayed leaves.
5. Sea or river sand free from salt.
6. Peat from the meadows that has been exposed to frost.
7. Coarse sand or gravel.
8. Broken flower pots, charcoal or oyster shells.
9. Old mortar or plastering.

Garden mold will not be needed if there is a supply of fine decayed turf mold. About one-fifth of the pot may be filled with the drainage materials, viz.: broken bits of pots, charcoal or oyster shells. If a little meadow moss is placed over these it will prevent the earth washing through.

Compost for camelias, roses, geraniums, etc., should be: One part river sand, one part leaf mold, one part manure, two parts leaf and turf, or garden mold.

For Cactuses.—Two parts coarse sand, three parts leaf and turf mold, one part peat and a little broken plaster.

EARLY CLINGSTONE PEACHES.

Within the past few years some valuable early clingstones have been introduced. Heretofore the defect connected with early clingstones was their small size and inferior quality; these defects are remedied in the following varieties:

Taskena.—Above medium, oblong, with sharp protuberance; skin yellow, nearly covered with deep orange red; flesh yellow, firm, vinous; slightly subacid. Quality good. Maturity, end of June. In appearance resembles the lemon cling, but without the blunt protuberance of the latter. Originated in south Mississippi.

Conner's White.—Above medium, slightly oblong, with a small acute apex; skin white, nearly covered with crimson, and finely penciled near the base; flesh white, juicy, vinous, sub-acid; quality good. Maturity, June 25. Same origin as the former.

General Taylor.—Medium, round; skin white, nearly covered with brown red; flesh white, with pink veins; firm, juicy, very good; June 20. In full maturity before the Early Tillotson is passed.—Farmer and Gardener.

FOWLS.—Fowls must never be left without water, but we would advise letting them take in such quantities and at such times as their natures demand. Give fresh water, and see that there is no snow in it. Experience has taught that snow water will reduce poultry in flesh.

ILLINOIS is said to have ten times as much forest as Germany, and Dutchess county, New York, more than all France. A narrow path divides farms in France, Germany and Holland.

Scientific.

PRESIDENT THIERS recently had it brought to his notice that an American, Dr. Charles B. Brigham, had achieved a wonderful operation on a French soldier, and therefore invited the surgeon and his patient to visit the executive mansion. The operation consisted in replacing the face of a soldier found on the battle-field. A complete face has been substituted, even to teeth and eyes.

MR. DARWIN gathers some curious facts regarding musical insects. Cicadas can be heard a mile. The female is mute, as was observed long ago by the Greeks, one of whose poets sang, somewhat wickedly: "Happy the Cicada lives, since they all have voiceless wives." The sound is made by vibration at the spiracles or air-passages, and made resonant by two scale-covered cavities. The Chinese keep these creatures in cages for their song, which must be an excellent accompaniment to the tom-tom. In many insects a sound is produced by rubbing one wing against the other at points which are adapted with serrations for the purpose. In grasshoppers the leg is armed with a row of exceedingly minute lancet-shaped teeth, with which it scrapes the wing cover, and each leg takes its turn.

A BALL FOR GEOLOGISTS.—Many a nut has been given them to crack, and they have offered some to others; but here is something harder. In Nova Scotia, we are told that a four-pound cannon ball, has been found in a solid coal bed, one hundred and sixty feet below the surface of the earth.

"Who can doubt, after this, that there were heroes before Agamemnon? That long before Adam dressed the garden or Eve dressed herself, there were men who fought with engines of war that hurled iron balls at one another? Indeed, does not Milton in his great Epic distinctly teach us that Satan invented and proposed, long before the creation of men,

"Hollow engines long and round, thick rammed, which
At the other bore with touch of fire,
Dilated and infuriate, shall send forth
Their balls of missive ruin, chained thunder-bolts,
And hail of iron globes."

Is it not barely possible that one of those balls that "from those deep-throated engines belched," fell into Nova Scotia and has now been dug up to bother the geologists?

Seriously, it is just as rational to build a theory on the discovery of this ball in coal as to deny the Bible because a bone turns up where there was no tombstone to tell its story.—New York Observer.

VICTORIA REGIA.—The weight capable of being borne by the leaves of this wonderful plant is the subject of a communication from Mr. Sowerby, of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Regent's Park, to a recent number of Land and Water, in which he says: "Although we are all familiar with the wonderful tales told by voyagers on the Amazon, of the buoyant power of the leaf of Victoria Regia, now a common and well-known water plant, I have not seen recorded the actual weight supported; it may therefore interest your readers to mention an experiment made here last week: A leaf was selected, the worst but one of eight on the plant, as we did not like to destroy the best; it was, however, pretty perfect, only a few holes within six inches of the margin; diameter, five feet six inches. On this leaf I placed a wheel three feet six inches in diameter, with eight spokes made of thin wood, and a small foot-board, on which I stood and flented 'high-and-dry;' the wheel was necessary to distribute the pressure over a considerable portion of the surface, the texture of the leaf being exceedingly tender, (the foot-board did not touch the leaf, but rested on the spokes of the wheel.) I have no doubt that if the wheel had been of the same diameter as the leaf it would have served as a life-raft for a small family, as the next experiment will show. The wheel and foot-board were removed from the leaf and its surface left quite free; we then gradually spread over the surface shell gravel previously weighed out in half hundred weight, when the gardeners standing by would not believe their own eyes, and began feeling under the leaf, thinking there must be some other support than water; but no, the leaf floated quite free. Another twenty pounds, and another, was thrown on, and yet the good ship remained seaworthy and no signs of foundering; four hundred and twenty-six pounds called, water began to leak in through the holes; the excitement, or perhaps the heat of the 'stove' in which we worked, made us rather hasty and unsteady in loading cargo, the weight of which was augmented by the leakage, and an unlucky cast tilted the leaf on one side, the water rushed over, it crumbled up like a sheet of paper and sunk in deep water, carrying with it a load of four hundred and thirty-six pounds, besides water."

MEDICAL.

The New Louisiana Remedy

FOR CONSUMPTION, CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, Asthma, Coughs, Colds, Throat Diseases, etc., is made from a vegetable prepared only in New Orleans, and put up in two forms, known as

G. H. SMITH'S PULMONIC SIRUP, AND SMITH'S LIFE TONIC,

and creates, wherever introduced, a profound sensation. The Life Tonic, with Smith's Liver Pills, is an effective remedy for Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, General Debility, Female Irregularities, etc. This remedy is the BLOOD PURIFIER of the century. It is delicious to the taste and absolutely harmless. An infant can take the Pulmonic Sirup with benefit. The proprietors give a long list of HOME references, comprising some of the first names in New Orleans.

N. JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.

A Purely Vegetable Compound

FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF

RHEUMATISM AND GOUT.

THE SUBSCRIBER takes pleasure in being able to announce to the public that the above-mentioned painful diseases can be entirely and permanently cured. Many popular medicines of the day have rendered incalculable relief to sufferers from these affections. But experience has demonstrated that such relief is only temporary, and that the patient is not cured through their instrumentality.

The remedy now offered eradicates every vestige of the diseases of which it claims to be the "Annihilator," and there can be no relapse. While it is a simple preparation of purely vegetable substances, that can do no injury, the unparalleled success of the proprietor, in the use of it, in the southern and southwestern parts of this State, justifies him in offering the Annihilator as a positive cure for Rheumatism and Gout. This is a broad assertion, but a fair trial of it will certainly convince the most skeptical that it is not an exaggerated one. For information as to its results in the above named sections of our State, the reader is especially referred to the Rev. Fisher T. Rawson, Iberia, Louisiana, and to the Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.

What the Annihilator Will Do.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy rapping machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, for the necessity for a series of purely educational, impartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching not offensive, to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars, and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces:

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequaled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction; as being most admirably adapted for mental drill as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.

The general market has exhibited only a moderate degree of animation since our last issue. Sugar has been in slack demand; molasses has been quiet, with a light supply; flour inactive, the stock being broken, with a scant supply of the higher grades; corn dull and ruling at lower prices; pork with scarcely any supply and commanding outside rates; and bacon quiet but commanding previous rates.

The river is 13 feet 10 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the ninth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	[illegible]
Lake	[illegible]
Mobile	[illegible]
Florida	[illegible]
Texas	502
Total	[illegible]

On Saturday, the skies being favorable, buyers came forward with increased spirit, and the movement showed a fair degree of animation throughout the day. Prices at the same time presented some irregularity; a part of the business having been done at previous rates, while the rest was at an improvement of ⅛@¼c. closing firm at ¼c. advance on all grades. The sales summed up 6,200 bales. On Monday, it being a legal holiday, the banks closed at an early hour, which prevented much movement in exchange, and restricted the movement. buyers standing aloof or asking concessions which factors would not admit, and the sales were confined to 1,400 bales, a part of which was at easier prices, but requiring no quotable variation. On Tuesday the market was depressed by unfavorable New York and Liverpool news, the former reporting ⅛c. decline, and the latter 1-16d. decline in spots and ⅛d. in arrivals, and with a limited demand only 1,700 bales were sold at irregular and lower prices, showing a falling off of ¼@⅜c. A decline in foreign exchange aided in increasing the prevailing depression. At the close the market was too unsettled to admit of quotations.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 690,186 bales, against 858,092 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 502,767 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 121,381 to France, and a decrease of 426,180 to Great Britain, and of 88,140 to other foreign ports."

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1872. NO. 8.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—There has been a fearful storm in the vicinity of this city. The mercury fell forty degrees in two hours. The hurricane was accompanied with blinding snow. Several deaths are reported from the sudden cold. The trains on this division of the Central Illinois road are all snowed in. The thermometer this morning was eighteen degrees.

The report that Spotted Tail and his band were frozen is believed, but the prostration of the telegraph by the storm prevents verification.

St. Paul, Feb. 14.—The heaviest snow of the season fell last night. The mercury has been below zero all day. The railroads west are all blocked. It is feared the Canadian surveying party, numbering twenty-five persons, under Colonel McNab, which left Duluth for Upper Superior, has perished. The last heard of them was on the twenty-seventh of January, when they were in an open boat, with the lake full of ice and a storm prevailing.

Mount Sterling, Ky., Feb. 15.—A fire at Sharpsburg burned the Presbyterian church and five of the best business houses in the village. Three alleged incendiaries barely escaped hanging by a mob.

New York, Feb. 15.—Advocates of the enforcement of an eight-hour law held a meeting last night—attendance large. Resolutions were adopted calling for the enforcement of the eight-hour law on public buildings.

A Matamoras special of the fifteenth says forty Texans crossed into Mexico, under Juan Guerrero, and threaten Mier. An attack on Matamoras will follow the fall of San Louis Potosi, which is hourly expected.

Nashville, Feb. 15.—Granville O. Torbett, formerly Editor of the Nashville Union and American, is dead.

The Methodist Book Concern burned. Loss, $30,000.

Memphis, Feb. 15.—A movement is on foot among the judges of the circuit and criminal courts of this State to hold a convention for the purpose of securing reform in the laws relative to trials by juries, as it is generally conceded that the present laws are totally inefficient.

Montgomery, Ala., Feb. 15.—Steps are being taken in the Legislature to provide a sinking fund for the redemption of the outstanding liabilities of the State.

New York, Feb. 16.—William B. Astor is dead.

Chicago, Feb. 17.—Ten persons were frozen to death in Dixon county, Nebraska. Seven wood-cutters for the Winnebago agency were frozen. The suddenness and severity of the storm is unparalleled.

San Francisco, Feb. 17.—A Panama steamer has been detained to take freight, intended for the overland road, which is blocked by the snow blockade.

An extra steamer is going to Australia to bring over freight. The bulk of freight waiting is wool.

New York, Feb. 17.—The smallpox is decreasing, owing to the very general vaccination; six deaths today and twenty-five for the week. The new cases are mostly varioloid.

FOREIGN.

Paris, Feb. 14.—The members of the Right have declared their unwillingness to fuse with the Orleanists in the Assembly.

Bucharest, Feb. 14.—Consuls and other representatives of foreign powers here have united in making a formal demand on the authorities for the protection of Jews in the principalities.

Bombay, Feb. 14.—The assassin of the Governor General of India has been tried, convicted and sentenced to be hung.

Toronto, Feb. 15.—Nine of eleven wholesale stores, known as the Iron Block, burned. The total loss on stock and buildings is estimated at $5,000,000.

Paris, Feb. 15.—Berthemy will be minister to Washington, and M. de la Roneiere minister to Rome.

Some of the delegates of the Right in the Assembly are going to Antwerp to submit to Count de Chambord their programme of action with regard to a monarch in France, and endeavor to obtain his sanction thereto, but there is little hope of success. It is a foregone conclusion that the count will refuse to make any concessions.

The Napoleonists are active at Belleville and Valletta.

Rome, Feb. 15.—The consistory for the nomination of Catholic bishops convenes on the nineteenth instant.

Havana, Feb. 16.—The steamer City of Merida has arrived from Vera Cruz, bringing City of Mexico dates to the eighth.

Julius Garcia has pronounced in the State of Colima, where the revolution is spreading.

A revolutionary movement has been made in Guadalajara, where the governor has assumed dictatorial powers.

The largest half of the States of Puebla and Vera Cruz is in the hands of the revolutionists. Mendez is commander-in-chief, with headquarters in Sierra.

Ex-Governor Felix Dean has been assassinated.

President Juarez is gradually assuming dictatorship.

It is reported that President Juarez applied to President Grant for assistance. Grant replied that he would support Juarez as a last alternative.

Later.—The revolutionists have captured Agnos Calientes. The Federals retreated to Lagosa.

Revolutionists in arms estimated at thirty thousand.

A large force of revolutionists are approaching Guadalajara. Consternation prevails here; and the Juarists say President Grant must act promptly if he intends to help Juarez.

Manaid, Feb. 16.—Advices from Manilla represent all quiet in the Philippine Islands, the revolt of the native troops having in a manner been completely suppressed. The mutineers were tried by court martial and eleven sentenced to death. The leader of the revolt had been executed.

The Official Gazette publishes the text of an armistice between Spain and South American republics, agreed to at Washington.

Paris, Feb. 16.—The police have information leading them to believe that sixty thousand rifles and thirty cannon, with large stores of ammunition, are concealed in Paris. Active search is being made in all parts of the city.

The Right Center in the Assembly refuse to confer with the Moderate Right, and is preparing an independent programme of policy.

Rome, Feb. 20.—It is reported that on Sunday last the Pope signed the decree convoking the Ecumenical Council, the place of meeting to be either in the Island of Malta or in the Tyrolese Valley, and that when the council meets the Pope will leave Rome.

Matamoras, Feb. 20.—The government troops under General Pasquera, Governor of Sinaloa, were routed in that State by General Marquese, with a loss of four pieces of artillery and many prisoners.

Generals Guerra and Naranjo, with eight thousand revolutionists, attacked the city of San Luis Potosi on the sixteenth instant, driving the government forces within their barricades, and cutting off all chance of reinforcements and supplies reaching them.

Paris, Feb. 20.—There is much excitement here over the discovery of a Bonapartist conspiracy. The government is taking extraordinary precautions here and in the northern department. The police force has been doubled there and at Versailles, and the troops have been ordered to remain at barracks ready for action.

Hay More Valuable than Cotton. The Columbus (Georgia) Sun remarks:

Planters ruin themselves by raising cotton, and borrow money at a tremendous per centage to pay the West for corn and hay, bound with blocks of Western wood, when grass is going to waste in the abundant fields, and they could cultivate abundance of better grain than they have purchased and save the transportation of wood. Did planters ever think the hay crop was more valuable than that of cotton? The figures prove it. The total value of the cotton crop for 1870 in the United States, according to the figures of the Agricultural Bureau, amounted to $286,000,000; the total value of the hay crop $339,000,000; showing the value of the latter exceeded the former $53,000,000. In Georgia the hay crop that year was estimated at $1,283,150, while that of New York was $77,000,000.

"Timothy Titcomb," Dr. J. G. Holland, of Springfield, Massachusetts, in his current lecture upon "The Undertow of Society," magnifies the Sunday school as a conservative agency. In allusion to the neglect of the moral training of youth he says that "the only way to rid ourselves of rascals is to quit raising them."

WOMEN IN THE PULPIT.

On Monday, February 5, a special session of the presbytery of Brooklyn, New York, was commenced, to consider the case of Rev. T. L. Cuyler, of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian church, who had invited a lady—Miss Sarah F. Smiley—of the Friends' denomination to preach for him. Dr. Cuyler was allowed to make a statement concerning the matter, which he did at length, from manuscript. He had invited Miss Smiley to his pulpit; she had accepted the invitation, and had gone into his pulpit, and talked to his congregation. She took no text, but consumed the better part of an hour in discoursing on the vision of Jacob.

He wanted to know: 1. Was the act prohibited by the book of church government? He contended that it neither permitted nor prohibited women preaching. 2. Was the act against the Bible? Was it against the word of God for women to speak in a mixed assembly of both sexes? He insisted that the Bible was very non-committal. Women had prophesied. Anna spoke of the Messiah in the temple. Paul said woman should not pray or prophesy in public without the peplum or vail. Philip's four daughters prophesied. Priscilla and Aquila prophesied. Paul does not forbid a woman to proclaim the gospel truth to a man. Priscilla "taught Apollos." Teaching was not prohibited. The promiscuous Bible class taught by woman often swells to the proportion of a country congregation. He concluded that Paul did not mean altogether to forbid the woman from giving gospel truth in any form. He contended that Paul allowed woman to pray and prophesy, but that his prohibitions on woman "speaking in church" meant differently. He claimed that there was a wide divergence of opinion on the question. He insisted that woman had a proper place in the gospel message; that it was next to impossible to draw a line in the Bible about woman's functions in the church. It was an open question, to be determined by conscience, common sense and circumstances.

In the afternoon Dr. Butler, on the part of the committee bringing charges, reported a resolution that, while recognizing the kindly spirit in which the objectionable act had been done, and admitting that it was exceptional, the committee felt constrained to express the opinion that it was contrary to Scripture, and to the usages of the Presbyterian Church. Another resolution proposed that a committee be appointed to "overture" the General Assembly upon the general question at issue.

Tuesday was consumed in the further consideration of the subject, most of the speakers being of opinion that it was inconsistent with the rules of the church for women to preach in a Presbyterian pulpit.

During the debate the Rev. Mr. Talmage offered a resolution dismissing the charge against Mr. Cuyler, and encouraging the practice of exchanging pulpits with clergymen of various evangelical denominations, and hailing the coming time when woman can go everywhere, recommending pardon and the comforts of the gospel. The resolution was at once tabled.

In the evening the investigation was concluded. Instead of censuring Dr. Cuyler the presbytery resolved to call the attention of the Presbyterian Church to a resolution of the synod of 1832, which declared that women should not preach in their churches.

Origin of the Cheney-Whitehouse War.

The Chicago Pulpit has discovered the hitherto unknown origin of the Cheney-Whitehouse ecclesiastical war. In an interesting sketch of Cheney's life, accompanying a sermon, it says:

"The long, exciting and unpleasant conflict between himself and the ecclesiastical authority of Illinois, to which such notoriety has been given by the public press, was not of Mr. Cheney's seeking. It arose by mere accident. Rev. Mr. Goodspeed, of the Second Baptist church, in private conversation with Bishop Whitehouse incidentally stated that Mr Cheney did not use the word 'regenerate' in the baptismal service for infants—not dreaming his remark would lead to such serious results. But for that conversation Mr. Cheney might have omitted the word 'regenerate' until this day, as many Episcopalian ministers without notice or comment. 'Behold how great a fire a little spark kindleth!' The Bishop called on the rector, and gave him a week in which to formally agree to conform literally to the prayer book. A refusal arrayed the dignity of the church against Mr. Cheney. With the subsequent history of the conflict the public are familiar through frequent statements. A trial ensued, which, though delayed a year and a half, resulted in sentence of suspension until repentance and conformity. Disregard of this sentence led to a new trial for 'contumacy,' in which he was found guilty, and on the second of June, 1871, the Bishop, in his cathedral, pronounced the sentence of 'degradation' from the ministry 'in the church of God' upon Charles Edward Cheney. Mr. Cheney has since continued in the discharge of his usual duties, disregarding this second sentence. Doubtless the occurrence of 'the fire' has delayed any further intended action. Whatever our judgment of Mr. Cheney's course in this particular matter, we cannot but admire him as a man. His firmness and sincerity, his charity and cordiality, endear him to all who know him. As a preacher Mr. Cheney is deservedly popular. He speaks as if he had a message to deliver. Very much of his attractiveness as a speaker is no doubt owing to his vivacity and his warmth of imagery; but his real power is in his hearty earnestness and fidelity to truth. His chief fault is in redundancy of illustrations and occasional undue amplification of them. Mr. Cheney's labors are not confined to his denomination, but he is known throughout the city by his interest in all 'good works.'"

The National Convention called to advocate a religious amendment to the constitution was recently in session in Cincinnati. About two hundred and fifty delegates were present; but most of the eminent men whose names were appended to the call failed to put in an appearance. Several papers were read, the most important one being communicated by Prof. Taylor Lewis, who was not present. Mr. Abbot, of the Index, presented a remonstrance in writing against the object contemplated by the convention. The remonstrance was received, and was replied to by the Rev. A. D. Mayo, of Cincinnati. Rev. H. H. George made the point that the question of the legality of the requirement to have the Bible read in the public schools, now pending in the Supreme Court of Ohio, would, if possible, be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, where, although Justice Strong, the chairman of the convention, and other Christian men were on the bench, who were desirous of giving the Bible to the children of the country, yet they would be obliged to decide the matter according to constitutional law, and in the Constitution of the United States there is no clause recognizing religion or morality. Therefore, the enemies of the Bible have much to hope when the question comes before that court. Some excitement was produced in the convention by the attempt of an individual styling himself the Rev. Chauncey Barnes, of Athens, Ohio, to show by chart the principle that belongs to the practical government of Christ. One of the peculiarities of this was that ministers should have no salary. On being asked what church he belonged to, Mr. Barnes asseverated: "I do not belong to any of your earthly, man-made governments. I believe in the government of the Lord Jesus Christ." The doctrines of Bro. Barnes not being acceptable to the convention, a scene of great disorder ensued, and cries of "Stop him," "Put him out," were heard. When the hubbub had subsided, Mr. Barnes admitted that he had been excited, and that, "as Paul said, he had been caught up, and would now come down." The convention re-elected the Hon. William Strong as its president, with a long list of vice presidents and other officers.—Independent.

Rev. Mr. Spurgeon, says the New York Observer, has given his people a lively account of Peter-worship in Rome. He says: "I saw gentlemen wiping his toe with their handkerchiefs and kissing it, old women being helped up to do the same, and little children lifted up to follow the example. There, also, was the chair in which Peter never sat, and people bowing down to pay homage to it. It was, in truth, a big joss-house; an idol-shop, and nothing better. It was not the worst image-house in Rome; but it was bad enough, and whatever might be said by those who turned to and professed the Catholic faith, if they were not idolaters, there were no idolaters on earth."

MR. BEECHER'S RIVAL.

The New York letter of the Southern Christian Advocate contains the following about Mr. Talmage and his church:

Over in Brooklyn Mr. Beecher has a great thorn in his popular side, in the shape of a Presbyterian clergyman, the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, a gentleman called from Philadelphia. His success here has been simply immense, and his Tabernacle (for such it is called) will seat nearly five thousand people, and if it had a larger number would be equally crowded. His sermons are unique specimens of home-thrust and parry; his style is intensely original and captivating. I recollect a simple prayer of his, by way of illustration. His church was crowded to overflowing, and the people had sung the proud old "China" until the very walls of the edifice appeared to groan with the ecstasy of joy. Then, when they had finished, and the last strains had died away, he said: "O Lord, what come these people out to see? A reed—shaken by the wind; assist that reed, that in its bending it break not, and bring this people, with all thy people, from the church militant to the church triumphant, for Christ's sake. Amen."

That was his entire supplication, and, uttered in the low, guttural, enetoned voice, you may imagine the electrical effect. Since his advent in Brooklyn many of Mr. Beecher's congregation have gone over to him, and the effect of his ministry is seen from the fact that the rental of Mr. Beecher's pews are twenty per cent. lower than they were last year. Mr. Talmage has not a paid seat in his church; they are all free for saint and sinner, and the conduct of worship is more on a basis of old-fashioned Methodism than of any church outside of our denomination. Congregational singing is always in order, and at times it is so inspiring as to make one weep with joy. The organ is the one used in the Boston Coliseum in 1870, at the time of Gilmore's great jubilee. Any ordinary instrument would be drowned in tone by the sea of voices.

The other night, when I was there, Mr. Talmage gave out the hymn commencing:

"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand," and when the chorus was reached,

"There you'll sing Hallelujah,"

it appeared as if the very roof of the house must be lifted by such a rush of symphony. It was the finest singing I ever heard, and the most eloquent.

The pastor receives a salary of $8,000 per annum, and a large parsonage has lately been presented him by his kind and energetic people.

It is my intention, in my letters, to speak of the popularity and the peculiarities of the great preachers of New York and Philadelphia, knowing well that your people have a curiosity to know more about them than they can find in the sketches floating about in newspapers.

A very smart young Chinaman named Yung Wing graduated at Yale College in 1851. He stood at the head of his class, and was especially distinguished for his talents as a writer of the English language. He has now been employed by the Chinese government to bring over thirty other young Chinamen, who are to be educated at Yale College at the public expense. It is said that thirty Chinese students are to be entered at Yale College yearly during the next ten years, and a sum of $150,000 a year has been appropriated by the Chinese government to pay their expenses.

A Necessary Qualification.—A superintendent was once called upon to select for an infant class a teacher from a number of ladies, all of whom were strangers to him. As it was known that he regarded the class as an important one, he was asked on what ground he had made the selection. "She looked as though she could smile," was his reply. He regarded a capacity for smiling as a very necessary qualification for a teacher of the young.

Take Care About Dates.—A clergyman on exchange found a note in the Bible to the effect that Bro. A. requested the prayers of the church, that the loss of his wife might be blessed to him, etc. The preacher prayed most fervently. To his amazement and mortification he found that the note had lain in the pulpit a year, while the bereaved gentleman was on this Sabbath sitting with a new wife in the congregation.

THE ILLINOIS TEMPERANCE LAW.

Illinois, says the Methodist, has for the present abandoned the effort to enforce the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and has enacted the Ohio license law. Under this, the liquor dealer and the landlord of the premises where drink is sold are made responsible for all damages growing out of the business.—Licenses can be had only upon giving security to the amount of $3,000. The husband, wife or child of any person injured by the sale of liquor may bring suit for damages. The section bearing upon this point is in these words:

"Sec. 5. Every husband, wife, child, parent, guardian, employer or other person, who shall be injured in person or property, or means of support, by any intoxicated person, or in consequence of the intoxication, habitual or otherwise, of any person, shall have a right of action in his or her own name, severally or jointly, against any person or persons who shall, by selling or giving intoxicating liquors, have caused the intoxication, in whole or in part, of such person or persons; and any person or persons owning, renting, leasing or permitting the occupation of any building or premises, and having knowledge that intoxicating liquors are to be sold therein, or who, having leased the same for other purposes, shall knowingly permit therein the sale of any intoxicating liquors that have caused, in whole or in part, the intoxication of any person, shall be liable, severally or jointly, with the person or persons selling or giving intoxicating liquors aforesaid, for all damages sustained, and for exemplary damages; and a married woman shall have the same right to bring suits, and to control the same and the amount recovered, as a femme sole; and all damages recovered by a minor, under this act, shall be paid either to such minor, or to his or her parent, guardian or next friend, as the court shall direct."

American Bible Society.—At the monthly meeting of the Board of Managers, held on Thursday last, numerous interesting letters, reporting the progress and great value of the society's work abroad, were received.

Grants of books were made to the Seamen's Friend Society; to a new hospital of the Episcopal Church in Brooklyn, with numerous grants to feeble auxiliaries, agents and responsible individuals, especially at the South and West, and on the Northern Pacific railroad, and for South America and San Domingo. The whole number granted is six thousand and eighty-six volumes, including ten volumes in raised letters for the blind, besides others to the amount of $1,055 to feeble auxiliaries, and $250 in funds for Bible distribution in Rome, Italy, by Rev. Dr. Cote, of the Southern Baptist convention.

AN ENCHANTED ISLAND.

A wonderful stream is the river Time,
As it runs through the realms of tears,
With a faultless rhythm and a musical rhyme,
And a broader sweep and a surge sublime,
And blends with the ocean of years.

There's a musical isle up the river Time,
Where the softest of airs are playing,
There's a cloudless sky and a tropical clime,
And a song as sweet as a vesper chime,
And the tunes with the roses are staying.

The name of this isle is the "Long Ago,"
And we bury our treasures there;
There are brows of beauty and bosoms of snow,
There are heaps of dust, but we loved them so,
There are trinkets and tresses of hair.

There are fragments of songs that nobody sings,
And a part of an infant's prayer,
There's a lute unswept, and a harp without strings,
There are broken vows, and pieces of rings,
And the garments she used to wear.

There are llamls that are waved when the fairy chora
By the mirage is filled in air,
And we sometimes hear, through the turbulent roar,
Sweet voices we heard in the days gone before,
When the wind down the river is fair.

Oh, remember, for aye be that blessed Isle,
All the day of life till night;
And when evening comes with its beautiful smile,
And our eyes are closing to slumber awhile,
May that "Greenwood" of soul be in sight.

REV. JOHN M. BONNELL, D. D.

IN MEMORIAM.

The yet recent death of one of the first men of the church has not attracted that degree of attention which would have been accorded to it in other days. It seems as though the number of distinguished men is so great among us that no one name can long fix the public attention, even when consecrated by the seal of death. There are some workers, too, who work so secretly and so silently upon the minds of their generation that while the results of their labors are everywhere known and accepted, they themselves are forgotten. Of this class was the Rev. John M. Bonnell, president of the Macon Female College, Georgia, who stood at the very head of the profession of teachers in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. For the last ten years more young ladies have graduated under his hand than have gone forth from any school within the same length of time. And when a young lady graduated from his school she was educated. His pupils may be known wherever found by the thoroughness and finish of their culture.

Bro. Bonnell was instinctively a teacher. Although ordained to the work of the ministry by the church, he found his vocation elsewhere, and naturally fell into the profession to which God had called him, and not men. This may account for his comparative obscurity, when it is remembered that Socrates and Dr. Arnold are perhaps the only two men that have gained a world-wide reputation in the vocation of teaching; and even their celebrity has been due more to accidental causes than to the real merits of the men themselves. Perhaps for this reason our Lord Jesus preferred rather to be called a teacher than a preacher, although he undoubtedly consecrated both callings, if he did not identify them, in his own person. The multitudes who hang upon the lips of an orator, and go away impressed, it may be, for an hour with the grandeur of truth, are not to be compared to the small and select audience upon which the instructor of youth impresses himself day by day for a series of years, subjected by the very laws of their being to these first impressions through all subsequent life, and multiplying their influence a thousand-fold upon others.

It having been my good fortune to be a member of Bro. Bonnell's family and his associate in teaching for about a year, I would be glad to convey to the world at large some conception of the value of their loss in the death of a man such as he was. On the day of opening the session he put me in charge of the Latin classes, which exciting my surprise, he pointed to the room in which he kept the younger pupils under his immediate instruction, and said: "When I get through with them there they will be able to help themselves." I learned the force of this remark in the course of the year. Never have I seen pupils so thoroughly grounded in all the elementary principles of learning. Even the very handwriting was a fac simile of his own. Daily exercises in dictation, composition, grammar, rhetoric, everything pertaining to language—the industry and ingenuity of the pupils taxed to the utmost by original questions proposed by his untiring watchfulness, anticipating every want of the pupil and supplying every deficiency of the text book. Much as I prize his work on prose composition, I see in it large spaces left to be filled by the teacher, as they were always filled by himself.

Bro. Bonnell was a man of fine literary culture and extensive reading outside of text books. He studied much in the department of metaphysics and of language. He was a cultivated musician and a poet. Long hours have I heard him spend, in company with Dr. Garland and the music professor and adepts of the school, in discoursing the sweetest music from a variety of instruments. The professor would lead, of course, on the piano, accompanied by Dr. Garland on the flute and Bro. Bonnell on the viol. He had a refined taste in hymnology, and was properly selected by the General Conference as one of the committee on the hymn and tune book. One thing he rarely ever read—newspapers. I mention this not by way of approbation, but to indicate how pure and independent were the sources of his literary enjoyments. His own reason for this neglect of the periodical press was the want of time, for he was a methodical worker, and left no vacant hours for leisure reading. His health was always delicate, and he preserved it by the most assiduous care, that he might perform the greatest amount of labor.

When I come to speak of Bro. Bonnell's religious character I feel that I am approaching a theme to which I can hardly do justice. The purity of his domestic affections, the simplicity of his personal habits, his exquisite moral and religious sensibilities, and his devotion, were unequaled by any man I have known on earth. O with what intense application did he study the great truths of the New Testament!—how did he strive to imitate the Savior's example and to drink in his spirit!

What yearning pity for mankind,
What burning charity!
In him might the world ever see
That God is only love.

This intense tenderness of sympathy gave his theological views a bias in the direction of Universalism, or the final restoration of all things, if not the absolute destruction and annihilation of the wicked. He, like Whateley, Dr. Arnold, Robert Hall, John Foster and others, hoped, if he did not believe, in the language of Tennyson, that

Somehow in the end it will be all,
That good, and only good, will come to all.

Yet it may be truly said that no man ever had a more piercing sense of the evil of sin. Especially did he look upon it and condemn it in the aspect of shame and dishonor done to human nature and the image of God in the soul of man. One of his favorite authors was Channing, and I may add without impropriety that he was deeply impressed with the evils attendant upon slavery, and endeavored to have as little contact as possible with the peculiar institution, although his worldly wealth was all invested in that form of property. Bro. Bonnell was a Northern man by birth and education, and, unlike Dr. Olin, never became domesticated in the institutions of the South. I feel sure he was heartily glad when his own slaves were set at liberty, as it relieved him at once of a delicate and weighty responsibility. (I hope I have not gone too far in giving the private sentiments of so wise and good a man, since they were never either obtruded or concealed by himself when living, and can do no practical harm to his memory now that he is dead.) His errors, if he made any, all leaned to virtue's side. War was an especial abomination. I do not think he felt any admiration for the Cæsars and Napoleons of the human race. Like Jean Paul Richter, he loved God and little children.

At the time of my intimacy with him he was deeply interested in the writings of Dr. Arnold. Often did we read together the sentiments of that remarkable man, the prince and guide of all the instructors of youth that are to come after him. How nearly Bro. Bonnell resembled him in his character and sentiments and influence it would be difficult to state, as they lived under circumstances so widely different and devoted their labors to the training of opposite sexes. But there is an affecting similitude in their deaths which amounts to a parallel. Dr. Arnold died in the forty-seventh year of his age, and so, I believe, did Dr. Bonnell. Both died of that most distressing and fearfully sudden disease, angina pectoris. Dr. Arnold died on the day after his annual session closed, before the boys had left for their homes in the long vacation. Dr. Bonnell died a night or two before his annual session opened, but after the pupils, to the number of hundreds, had gathered at the school. On the evening before his death Dr. Arnold entertained his friends, and before retiring for the night wrote the following remarkable entry in his diary:

"Saturday Evening, June 11.—The day after to-morrow, if I am permitted to live to see it, is my forty-seventh birthday. How large a portion of my life is already past! And then—what is to follow this life? In one sense, how nearly can I say 'Vixi,' and I thank God, as far as ambition is concerned, it is fully mortified. I have no other desire than to step back from my present place in the world and not to rise to a higher. Still there are works which, with God's permission, I would fain do before the night cometh. But, above all, let me mind my own personal work, to keep myself pure and zealous and believing—laboring to do God's will, yet not anxious that it should be done by me rather than by others, if God disapproves of my doing it."

Bro. Bonnell spent the evening of Saturday, September 30, with his friends and the friends of the college, among whom was the venerable Dr. Pierce, and then, retiring to his room, lay down—and died!

F. M. GRACE.

The Aggressive Power of the Church.

"And so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily."—Acts xvi. 5.

In order to form anything like an adequate idea of what the church—the Christian religion—has accomplished for the world, it is necessary that we take a retrospective view of the condition of the human family at the time of the incarnation of Christ. Such a view will at once be a convincing proof that Christianity or the gospel of Jesus Christ "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."

When Christ came, he called those to whom the keeping of the visible church had been committed a generation of vipers, and compared them to a "cage of unclean birds" and to a "whitened sepulcher." Such, then, was the moral condition of the Jewish nation at the time of the ministry of Christ. But what, I ask, was the moral condition of the gentile nations of the earth? Even the wisest and most upright men, celebrated philosophers, great politicians, renowned legislators and grave senators, were the blind worshipers of some demon, and bowed their knees before gods of gold, silver and marble. The wisest of the wise recognized as gods four-footed beasts, reptiles, creeping things, and even plants. They did not even blush to adore an adulterous Mars, a prostitute Venus, an incestuous Juno, or a Jupiter blackened by almost every kind of crime.

Rome, the then mistress of the world, had adopted all the superstitions of her subjugated colonies, and in proportion as she crowded into her sanctuaries foreign deities, was the increase of licentiousness among the people.

Athens, too, while she was enlightening the world with the torch of science and letters, was, like the rest of the nations, enveloped in the gloom of idolatry, and sitting in the shades of darkness. Her sages scrupled not to bow their knees to gods of their own creation, and to erect altars to gods unknown.

And then there was Egypt, once so famed for her researches in astronomy and other sciences calculated to raise the mind of man to its Author. Egypt, whose skill in architecture still stands in her pyramids, and which remain unimpaired and unshaken amid the wear and tear of ages. Yet her wise men, men of renown, bowed their knees before their god Apis, and wore mourning when he died; and even then engaged in the worship of the crocodiles of the Nile.

If such, then, was the condition of the wise men of the gentile nations, what must have been that of the populace? They were unacquainted with that Being on whose omnipotence the preservation of their lives depended. The only gods they knew were such as their wise men, priests and priestesses had taught them to adore. The only morality they understood was such as the character of their deities had exemplified; and their only hope of the future was such as the answers of the augurs, whose blood-stained hands smoked with the entrails of some devoted animal. The fables of the poets were put into their hands; the feats of gods and goddesses, of heroes and heroines, were set before them for their imitation, and as a license for the gratification of their natural propensities. With such a religion—a religion that catered to all the lusts and desires of the flesh—a religion that demanded no self-denial—is it supposable (without a divine power) that men would give it up to become the disciples of Christ, or that they would abandon their gods and submit to the yoke of a crucified Jesus? Yet the change has been effected. Before the soul-saving power of Christianity the flowery fabric of paganism withered away, and emperors and wise men have fallen in humble adoration at the feet of Jesus of Nazareth.

How extraordinary and how sudden was the revolution wrought by the spirit of Christianity! How miraculous its propagation in despite of the most formidable opposition! Had the religion of Jesus Christ been a religion of the senses, it would have been too congenially allied to that of the pagan world to have met with any opposition; but when we consider the incompatibility of its principles with all that nature holds dearest, and all that paganism had consecrated; when we see it inculcating humility, forgiveness, mortification, chastity, and awing the world with its denunciations against vice and immorality of every kind, who will not perceive the interposing authority of the great Head of the Church, and confess its divine origin?

Again, the aggressive power of the church was made manifest by bringing into captivity the prejudices and passions of pagans. No prejudices or passions are so strong, none so tenacious, as those with which man may be said to be born, which grow with his growth, mature with his years, and in some measure become incorporated with his nature. It would not appear strange if, with the populace, such prejudices and passions should be considered sacred. In the pagan world every nation, tribe and family had its peculiar deities, from Jupiter down to a rudely-carved block of wood, or from the Egyptian Apis down to a cat. One of the first objects presented to the infant's eye was that of the household god and the domestic sacrifices; and with its earliest ideas were commingled a sacred respect and veneration for the national and household gods. From the contemplation of these pagan deities men could find a license for every gratification, and a pattern for every crime. Yet these prejudices and passions were overcome not by carnal weapons, but those that "are mighty through God to the pulling down strongholds." By the power of the Holy Ghost, and the instrumentalities of the church, paganism was swept from its sandy foundation, and those who had been taught to worship at the shrine of heathen deities bowed their knees to a crucified Jesus. The shady groves and bowers, the haunts of the sylvan gods, were exchanged for the house of prayer. The youth laid aside every instrument of heathen pleasure, and took up the cross of Christ; the hero cast from his brow the prospect of a wreath of Apotheosis for the hope of an unfading crown in glory; and thus the church triumphed over pagan-ism, and proved to the world the divinity of the Christian religion.

ALL YE THAT LABOR.

BY NINA PROCTOR.

Christ said: "All ye that labor,
Come to me, and I will give you rest."
Oh! I'm so weary and heavy laden,
I'll go, and be folded to His breast.

My burden of sin and sorrow
I will cast off at His feet,
And in robes of celestial beauty
My new-born spirit He'll greet.

Then in the bright world where He lives
I'll find a home and eternal rest;
What honor and what joy for me
To be my Savior's guest!

Regeneration and Entire Sanctification.

MR. EDITOR: Are regeneration and entire sanctification the same thing? It seems that a considerable number of Methodists in our church believe that regeneration and sanctification are the same thing. And no doubt they are as honest in their belief as Dr. Summers is in his belief that they are not the same thing, and are as easy to be convinced that they are wrong as Dr. Summers is to be convinced that he is wrong. Well, now, let us suppose these honest Christian brethren, who are seeking to know the truth, and have manifested this desire by asking Dr. Summers to give them light on the subject, to be wrong. Do they not show a willing mind to be set right, and that by Dr. Summers himself? And if so, ought these honest Christian brethren to be expelled from the church for heresy? We think not. But we do think that Dr. Summers ought to come out with his strong scriptural arguments, and prove to those brethren that they are wrong. On the other hand, let us suppose Dr. Summers wrong (and this is a possible supposition, for I know the doctor too well to believe that he arrogates unto himself infallibility) in believing that regeneration and sanctification are not the same thing. Would not the doctor think hard of those brethren who differ with him in opinion if they were to charge him with heresy in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and proceed against him and sustain the charge, and expel him from the church? It would hurt him, and me too, very much, for them to do such a thing, because I would think they had done wrong in expelling the doctor from the church for his honest belief that regeneration and sanctification are not one and the same thing. So, likewise, I think it would be wrong to expel those brethren from the church who honestly believe that regeneration and sanctification are the same thing, because their belief will not destroy them if they live holy lives. Nor will the doctor's belief save him if he lives and dies a sinner against God. They have as much right to their opinion as the doctor has to his opinion, especially on the doctrine of sanctification, a subject so little understood by the Christian world. All agree that the Bible teaches the doctrine of sanctification, and that the term means purity of heart—a heart cleansed from all sin. But as to the time when this great work is done, the Christian world is divided. Some think it takes place in eternity; some think it takes place in death; others think it takes place in time—at some time between regeneration and death. Some think it is a progressive work; others think it is an instantaneous work, and others hold that it is both progressive and instantaneous. And last of all, there are some who believe—according to Dr. Abbey—that regeneration is entire sanctification. And now, Mr. Editor, I would ask, Why all this confusion among Christians about sanctification? We think it is because they do not understand the nature of the subject, as taught in the Scriptures. In the word of God we are taught that sanctification is a progressive work—it is a "growth in grace;" and if so, it has its degrees. In its lowest degree it takes place in regeneration, or the new birth, in which birth all the man's sins are forgiven and washed away, both inward and outward sins. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanses him from all sin." And if he was to die at that moment he would go to heaven. But this he could not do if sin remained in him, because sin cannot enter heaven. He is now a sanctified babe in Christ Jesus. "And there is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus that walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." If he "walks not after the flesh, but after the Spirit," he will grow to be a sanctified young man in the gospel, and from this degree of grace he grows to be a sanctified father in Israel; and he will continue to grow in grace, if he walks after the Spirit, until he dies and goes to heaven. And it is reasonable to suppose that he will grow in grace forever and ever. These are briefly my views of what the Bible teaches on the doctrines of regeneration and sanctification.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

MR. EDITOR: When I was a school-boy I learned the sentence: "Disappointments sink the heart of man, but the renewal of hope gives consolation." Though many years have rolled away since these words first impressed my mind, they are still fresh whenever disappointment comes.—Disappointment is common with mankind—few things come precisely as they are expected. But "tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed." In times of failure, bereavement, misfortune, disappointment, the well-founded hope is there to give consolation—there "as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast." There are many things which enter into a lifetime to make up a bright Christian experience, but in all these things

"Religion bears our spirits up,
While we expect that blessed hope,
The bright appearance of the Lord,
And faith stands leaning on His word."

To "be punctual" is a duty that is enjoined upon our preachers, and they are expected to be at their posts; and this is applicable to them in all their duties. The preacher who desires to do his duty will not disappoint his congregation if he can avoid it; but there are circumstances which justify him in failing to be at his appointment, and even then he is sorry he cannot meet with the people. But is it so with the people, whose duty it is to attend upon the ministry of the word? It is often the case that the preacher is disappointed in the size of the congregation, and the people who are there are disappointed because others are not there. Now if it is the duty of the preacher to be there it is also the duty of the people, especially the members of the church. If the experience of all the preachers could be heard on this subject but few of them, if any, would fail to tell of long travels and exposure in bad weather to reach an appointment, and members of the church residing within hearing of the church-bell failed to be there, and no excuse but the weather. Now, congregations which are made up of persons residing in the vicinity of the church, and who can attend with but little trouble, are disappointed when the preacher is not there, let them learn from their disappointment how to sympathize with the men who leave home, family, all, and travel long distances and in all sorts of weather to be at their appointments, and find but few persons there.

ANECDOTIAN.

PEACE-BREAKERS.—There are those that rouse up "strife and contention," that foment divisions, widen breaches, incense men against one another, and sow discord among brethren, by doing the work of him that is the accuser of the brethren. Strife and contentions that have laid asleep and begun to be forgotten, they awake and industriously rise up again, and blow up the sparks that were hid under the embers. Yet if "blessed are the peace-makers" cursed are such peace-breakers that make parties, and so make mischief that spreads farther and lasts longer than they can imagine. It is sad to see bad men warming their hands at those flames which are devouring all that is good in a nation, and stirring up the fire too.—Henry.

THE strongest minds are often those of whom the world hears less.

GIVING.

"said the little stream,
As it hurried down the hill,
"I am small, I know, but wherever I go
The flowers grow greener still,
Singing, singing all the day,
Give away, O give away.

"Give," said the little rain
As it fell upon the flowers;
"I will raise the drooping heads again,
And freshen the summer bowers."

"Give," said the violet sweet,
In its gentle, spring-like voice;
"From cot and hall they will hear my call;
They will bear me and rejoice."

"Give," said they all, "O give,
For our blessings come from heaven,
And we fain would give, yes, would only live
To give as God has given."

Give, then, for Jesus gave;
There is something all can give;
O, do as the streams and blossoms do,
And for God and others live."

SOCIAL REVOLUTION IN JAPAN.

We scarcely know anything in the social or political history of nations more remarkable than the quiet revolution which has been going on in Japan within the last two or three years. There are many marvels connected with it. It proceeds from the throne; it is destroying feudal authority, taking away from princes rank, power and fortune; it is in opposition to the traditions of centuries; it looks toward the immediate and permanent elevation of the people, and it is progressing rapidly, without the show of opposition. It is one of the most wonderful movements on record.

The embassy which has just reached this country represents not only the government, but the highest and most influential classes of the people. At its head is the man who stands in the same relation to the empire of Japan that Bismarck does to the German—that of chancellor or prime minister. He is a near relative of the Mikado. Other high officials are connected with the embassy, so that their representations of the plans and purposes of the government may be accepted with confidence. At a banquet given to these officials at San Francisco, on the twenty-third ultimo, a full statement of these plans was made. In response to the toast, "Our Distinguished Guests," Governor Ito said:

"Our mission, under special instructions from his majesty, the Emperor, while seeking to protect the rights and interests of our respective nations, will seek to unite them more closely in the future. I am convinced that we shall appreciate each other more when we know each other better. By reading, hearing, and by observing in foreign lands, our people have acquired a general knowledge of constitutions, habits and manners, as they exist in most foreign countries. Foreign customs are generally understood throughout Japan to-day, and it is the earnest wish, both of our government and people, to strive for the highest point of civilization enjoyed by the most enlightened countries. Looking to this end, we have adopted their military, naval, scientific and educational institutions, and knowledge has flowed to us freely in the wake of foreign commerce. Although our improvement has been rapid in material civilization, the mental improvement of our people has been far greater. While held in absolute obedience by despotic sovereigns through many thousand years, our people knew no freedom or liberty of thought. With our material improvement they learned to understand their rightful privileges, which for ages had been denied them. Civil war was but a temporary result. Our daimios magnanimously surrendered their principalities, and their voluntary action was accepted by the general government. Within a year a feudal system, firmly established many centuries ago, has been completely abolished without firing a gun or shedding a drop of blood; and the suggestions then made have been adopted, and some of them are now already in practical operation. In the Department of Public Works, now under my administration, the progress has been satisfactory. Railroads are being built, both in the eastern and western portions of the empire; telegraph wires are stretching over many hundred miles of our territory, and nearly one thousand miles will be completed within a few months. Lighthouses now line our coasts, and ship yards are active. By the education of our women we hope to insure greater intelligence in future generations, and with this in view our maidens have already commenced to come to you for their education. A year ago I examined minutely the financial system of the United States, and while in Washington received most valuable assistance from distinguished officers of your Treasury Department. Every detail learned was faithfully reported to my government. The red disc in the center of our own national flag shall no longer appear like a wafer over a sealed empire; but henceforth be in fact, what it is intended to be, the noble emblem of the rising sun, moving onward and upward amid the enlightened nations of the world."

The above, which has been put not only into English language but into English idiom, gives the most encouraging view of [illegible] of events in that distant part of the world, not so distant now as formerly. We hope that, in addition to these signs of advancement, we shall soon hear that the government has withdrawn the edicts against embracing Christianity, which are still in force. They are so opposed to the general policy of the new government that we cannot believe they will be allowed to remain in force or on the statute book.—New York Observer.

HEART-KEEPING.

"Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." As good "housekeeping" is essential to domestic comfort, so good heart-keeping is essential to healthful and happy piety.

The word of God represents the human heart as a dwelling. The unconverted heart is a habitation of the evil one, with his brood of unholy thoughts and sinful tastes and passions. When Jesus Christ first enters this dwelling-place of the evil one he finds it fearfully filthy and out of order. The first work of the Divine Spirit is to cleanse the house. Every room must be entered and purified. Into the stately and sumptuous drawing-room where pride held court, the lowly Savior enters and expels the occupant. From the walls of sensuality's chambers many wanton pictures have to be taken down. The deserted and cobwebbed closet of conscience is entered by the key of truth, and is thrown open to the daylight.

Memory is another apartment of the mind which the Holy Spirit renews for a higher and holier use. Ranged on its shelves he finds the stores which were brought in through the five doorways of the senses. Much of this accumulation is but rubbish. Christ does not destroy this faculty; he simply makes it henceforth a granary of truth. A sanctified memory is the soul's storeroom. We pity the man with whom this is but an empty garret or a confused lumber-room, heaped up with accumulated things, so hopelessly mingled that its owner can never lay hands on what he needs at the moment. With a devout believer the memory is a cabinet of curiosities of God's love. In no apartment does Jesus abide oftener than in this; here the alabaster box of gratitude is broken, and the room is filled with the sweet odor of the ointment.

There is also a chamber of taste, from whose window the lover of beauty looks out on magnificent landscapes; and at midnight up into the star-studded vaults of heaven. There is a lofty watch-tower where holy vigilance keeps guard to espy the approaches of the enemy. Woe unto the Christian when the sentinel falls asleep on the tower! Over the doorway to this turret the Spirit has written: "Watch unto prayer!" "Blessed is he whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching." From this tower faith often looks out through the spy-glass of the promises, and catches bright glimpses of the celestial city which lies at the end of the way.

"For glimpses such as these
My willing soul will bear
All thrill in darkest hours it sees
Of toil and pain and care."

We must not overlook one room in a converted heart, though it be ever so small or ever so secluded. It is the secret "closet" where faith holds sweet fellowship with God. It is fragrant with the presence of Jesus. Here stands the mercy-seat. To this inner sanctum faith keeps a golden key, inscribed: "Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; pray without ceasing." Over the door she reads the inviting words: "Enter into this closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." On the walls are inscriptions written in moments of devout intercourse with God, when the meditations of him were like the droppings of the honeycomb.

This is faith's stronghold; here she weapons herself for the daily conflict. Silence in that closet of prayer bespeaks death throughout all the house. When that door is suffered to rust on its hinges, and that chamber is deserted, then the heart-house is soon retaken by Satan, and evil spirits come in and dwell there.

To keep this house with all diligence is the primal duty of every one who bears the name of Christ. How to keep Jesus in the inner heart, and how to glorify Jesus in the outer life, is the two-fold secret of spiritual success and of final salvation.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

If we cannot abide to hear of our faults, we are not capable of amendment.

It is one of the worst errors to suppose that there is any other path of safety except of duty.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

Rev. John E. Todd, formerly of Boston, in an article on congregational singing, published in the Congregationalist, says:

Given the leadership of a good choir, and the words and melody properly arranged in the hands of every person, there is one thing more. There must be at least one brass (or silver) instrument to lead the people. A congregation wants a leader. Every one has noticed how much better the singing goes in a social meeting if there is some good, strong voice to lead. But in a great congregation, singing as they ought to sing, any human voice is lost. An organ cannot lead. It is a glorious instrument; it can sustain the harmony, blend the discords, smooth the roughness, supply the sub-bass, but it cannot lead. Its monotonous, gliding tones "take no note of time," and are too like the tones of the human voice to lead a multitude. In our praise service the organ could hardly be distinguished, although a large and powerful instrument.

It was the sharp, decisive, thrilling tones of that brass quartette which rose above the din, and inspired the people, and gave them courage, and measured out the time for them with beats as regular as those of a machine. More than one cultivated musician has since said to me: "I had no idea that brass instruments were such things to lead a multitude of voices. How splendidly those cornets rang out." Of course, Mr. Musician; and have you yet to learn why the great masters made such careful provision for brass instruments in their grand choruses? And have you only just found out that the secret of the congregational singing in Germany is, that in every church of any size they have at least one trumpet, or cornet, or trombone, or bugle to lead the people? The people want something to lead them, and if there is any voice or instrument other than brass which can lead a thousand voices, I should like to see it. If our people want congregational singing, such as they have in Germany, they must employ the same means. If our smaller congregations, instead of struggling to buy an old or a poor organ, or some wretched, wheezing reed instrument, would pay a good cornet player to come and lead them, they might have music. If our larger churches would conquer their prejudices, and condescend to learn a lesson of the kind of music, and introduce brass instruments into their service, we might yet be saved from sentimental twaddle in worship, and inspired with the breath of praise

THE SINGING CURE.

We can sing away our cares easier than we can reason them away. The birds are the earliest to sing in the morning; the birds are more without care than anything else I know of. Sing in the evening. Singing is the last thing that robbins do. When they have done their daily work—when they have flown their last flight, and picked up their last morsel of food, and cleansed their bills on a napkin of a bough—then on a top twig they sing one song of praise. I know they sleep sweeter for it. They dream music; for sometimes in the night they break forth in singing, and stop suddenly after the first note startled by their own voice. Oh! that we might sing evening and morning, and let song teach song all the way through.

As I was returning from the country, the other evening, between six and seven o'clock, bearing a basket of flowers, I met a man who was apparently the tender of a mason. He looked brick and mortar all over. He had worked the entire day, and had the appearance of a man that would not be afraid to work. He was walking on with a light step, and singing to himself as he passed down the street, though he had been working the whole day, and nearly the whole week. Were it not that my good thoughts always come too late, I should have given him a large allotment of my flowers. If he had not been out of sight when the idea occurred to me, I should have hailed him and said:

"Have you worked all day?"

"Of course—I have," he would have said.

"Are you singing?"

"Of course I am."

"Then take these flowers home and give them to your wife, and tell her what a blessing she has in you."

Oh! that we could put songs under our burdens. Oh! that we could extract the sense of sorrow by song. Then these things would not poison so much. Sing in the house. Teach your children to sing. When griefs arise, sing them down. Lift the voice of praise against cares. Praise God by singing; that will lift you above trials of every sort. They sing in heaven; and, among God's people upon earth, song is the appropriate language of Christian feeling.

As naughtiness is to rustiness, so labor excelleth idleness.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM.

Rev. William Arthur lately said in a speech: "The Lord founded a kingdom, very unlike any other kingdom. He founded it without drum, or trumpet, or banner, or scepter, or throne, or crown. He founded it without geographical limits—without fortress, without fleets. He founded it as a kingdom whose foundations were laid in thought; as a kingdom whose wars were to be carried on in thought; as a kingdom whose instruments were those of thought; whose sword was not the sword in hand, but the sword that 'proceedeth out of the mouth of God;' whose charter was the power of the word; whose battle-field was only and ever the battle-field of thought. Into this world of thought Christ's kingdom came, to attack all who opposed; and in its own calm, searching, but irresistible way, with a word, with a message, with an invitation, with an argument, with an exhortation, with an entreaty, with a continuous pointing upward—upward, as if it had a distinct connection with invisible powers, which it had; and 'bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ'—thoughts high, thoughts deep, thoughts old, thoughts built upon the foundations, as men supposed, of everlasting principles—thoughts certainly reared up with all the elaborate beauty of human genius and of vast national toil—thoughts consolidated by the suffrage of ages, and thoughts adorned and enriched by the splendor of empires! What was the result? Of all other powers none has the hold upon human thought that Christ has at this moment, and there is none advancing year by year as is the kingdom of the Lord Christ. The world has been always talking of its feebleness and failure, but where is the power that will venture at this moment to say: 'I will sweep Christ out of human thought?'"

HOW THE JEWS REGARD CHRIST.

Of Christ the Jews have no uniform opinion. The radicals regard him very much as a good many deists and atheists have before them—that is, they believe him either to have been a great reformer or a religious enthusiast; and the New Testament they suppose to have been written long after his death, and to have been made up, in part, of material taken from the Old Testament, the maxim, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," being considered an illustration of this. In fact, whatever opinions they may have on this subject they have formed by thinking for themselves over the writings of the great skeptics, just as many others have done who are not Jews; and this is the case as well with the most advanced of the conservatives; as no doubt also with many of the most advanced of the orthodox. Of the last, however, a very considerable majority have expended no thought whatever on the matter. Their notions about Christ are of the vaguest, and to some he is even veiled in mystery. What they know most clearly is his fate, and the persecution of themselves and their ancestors on account of it. They have a very peculiar name for him. It is not often they have occasion to allude to him; but when they do they call him ho-hai—the hanged one. He is rarely the subject of conversation among them; it would be a distasteful topic, and they would have no motive for bringing it up. There is, as I have said, no uniform sentiment entertained in regard to him; but one thing may nevertheless be safely asserted of the whole race: all expectation that they will ever come to regard him as anything but a man and a son of man is based on desire only.

Longevity is an inherited quality, as much as the make of the body or the size of the brain. Sir William Herschel, the greatest astronomer of his age, lived eighty-four years; his son, Sir John, died at seventy-nine; his aunt Caroline was ninety-eight; many similar cases can be given where persons of the connection lived to a great old age. But descendants of long-lived persons should only calculate on living as long themselves by living pretty much in the same manner: regularly, temperately, equably; cultivating especially serenity of mind, deliberation of thought and action; avoiding as much as possible shocks and bodily exposure to hardships and to all extremes. The tortoise overtook the hare long before the close of the day; prudent, thoughtful, careful people, who hold on the equable tenor of their way, far outlive the quick, the thoughtless, the nervous and unsteady. But longevity may be cultivated by a life of steady industry, of habitual temperance and regularity, combined with the conscientious performance of all the duties of life.

Blessed are the girls who have no beaux, for they pass no sleepless nights.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The New Testament revisers have got to the second chapter of Luke, and hope to finish their work in six years.

The professors of the Faculty of Theology, of Paris, recently held their first meeting since the late great events. Their first step was to enter upon the register the act of adhesion to the dogma of infallibility.

The increase in the clergy of the Protestant Episcopal Church for 1871 was sixty-two, being a little more than two per cent. The increase in the number of members was seventeen thousand, or a ratio of eight per cent. The amount of contributions for 1871 was $5,544,574.81, or more than $4 to each communicant.

In the city of Zacatecas, Mexico, which has a population of thirty thousand souls, it is said the people are fully ripe for a gospel harvest. The city of Cos has a stone church edifice capable of accommodating four hundred hearers, and a Protestant church numbering one hundred and seventy-one members—all converts from Romanism. In the city of Mexico and at some other points the Protestant Christians are cruelly persecuted.

Dr. Dollinger is preparing for speedy publication an essay on the "Moral Theology of Liguori," moved to do so by the step which the Pope took in one of the early months of last year, when he conferred on Liguori the title which positively commits the church of Rome to the whole of his teaching. The immorality of this "moral theology" is well known, and the great historian will, no doubt, give us a trenchant volume.—Independent.

The "Christadelphians" flourish in Worcester, and one of them writes a letter to the Gazette of that city, in which he sets forth their creed as follows: "The Christadelphians believe in one Deity, who is the author of the Bible, announcing to the world his word by the prophets, Christ, and the apostles; who also is one God, not three, as the clergy teach. They believe in the restoration again of the kingdom of Israel, which, by right, is the Deity's kingdom, and that the Jews are his peculiar people. They also believe that man is the possessor of no such treasure as an immortal soul; but that man was made a living soul, and not an immortal soul, as the clergy teach."

Rev. Dr. Jacobs, of Alleghany, in a speech delivered recently in Philadelphia on "Ministerial Sustentation," said that he had been chairman of a committee of the General Assembly which had addressed letters to twenty-seven hundred churches and ministers, collecting statistics—such as salaries of ministers, method of raising the salaries, number of communicants, etc.—and the result was the discovery that one-half or two-thirds of the ministers of the church received salaries of less than one thousand dollars, and one-third less than six hundred dollars. In the letters he received many of them related sad facts in relation to the difficulty encountered by the ministers in supporting their families, many of them having to add to their income by some kind of manual labor.

The reports from the mission fields, except in China and Africa, are of progress. In China the missions have not recovered from the effects of the violent popular outbreak of last year, and suffer under the apprehension that the outrages may be renewed. Some of the missions in Africa languish under various causes, the principal of which is the unhealthiness of the climate. A great stimulus has been given to the missions in India and in Mohammedan countries by the enterprise of the Woman's Missionary Societies, whose laborers are welcomed where other missionaries are excluded. The labors of the London Missionary Society in Madagascar continue uninterrupted. The zeal shown by the Japanese in seeking Western education, and in inviting Western enterprise, betokens well for the ultimate success of missions in that country. The missionaries are treated with respect, and the women sent out by one of the Woman's Missionary Societies have been received with gladness. The receipts of the societies continue good, but their enterprises extend more rapidly than their means increase, and there is a general call for more laborers.—Methodist.

The following are the chief provisions of the new religious laws drawn up by the Hungarian government: "1. Every Hungarian is permitted to exercise the rites of his own religion without prejudice to his civil rights; but this must not interfere with his duties to the State. 2. Each religious creed is allowed full liberty to arrange its own ecclesiastical organization, the State reserving to itself the right of supervision. Any question arising between the Church and State authorities is to be settled by the government, with the concurrence of the Hungarian Parliament. The rights at present exercised by the State in regard to the Roman Catholic and Greek churches are to continue in force until these churches shall have established their internal organization and taken possession of the property hitherto administered by the State. 3. Every Hungarian who has completed the age of eighteen is to be allowed to select his own religion. 4. Marriage is to be regarded by the State as a civil contract, whatever may be the religion to which the husband or wife belongs. 5. Parents may bring up their children in any religion they please; if the father and mother are not agreed on this point, sons are to follow the religion of the father and daughters that of the mother."

The Missionary Herald says: "It is now twenty-five years since the first Protestant missionary, Mr. Johnson, of the American Board, entered Foo Chow, China. The Methodists soon followed, and then the English Church Missionary Society. An equitable division of the field was made, and the three societies have worked together in harmony; yet the force employed by each has been quite inadequate to the necessities of the work and its growing demands. During the past year the Church Missionary Society has had two men in the field, the Methodist five, and the American Board three, including a missionary physician. More than a thousand communicants are connected with the different churches; an efficient body of native helpers is already in the field, and more are in preparation. The press is a power. It issued the past year over twenty different publications, numbering two millions of pages. Though it belongs to the Methodist mission, it is at the service of all. Valuable works have recently been published, that will be of great service to young missionaries in learning the language, such as an alphabetical dictionary, and a thousand of the phrases used in common life.

Madagascar.—There is something wonderful in the intelligence and power of the Christians of Madagascar. The most severe persecutions in vain have attempted to overcome their faith. The Presbyterian gives the following striking statements concerning a part only of the island: The November number of the London Missionary Chronicle gives some account of a meeting of the Congregational Union of Imerina, which was held on the seventh of June last, at Faravohitra. It was held in the "Childreds Memorial Church," which seats one thousand persons, and the house was crowded. It must be remembered that Imerina is only one province of the island—less in geographical extent than many of our Presbyterian synods or Congregational associations. Yet over two hundred churches were represented. What synod or association among us could boast of such an attendance? The day was occupied with earnest discussions on various topics, such as the following: Character of Native Preachers; Church Discipline; Relation of the Church to the State; Department in the House of God; Marriage. The whole occasion, so far as numbers and enthusiasm were concerned, would compare well with a meeting of our General Assembly, or an anniversary of the American Board. What hath God wrought?

The Conference of the Congregational Churches of Brooklyn, New York and vicinity, was held in Plymouth church on Thursday, January 18, at three o'clock P. M. The meeting was one of great interest. Reports from the churches were made, indicating generally harmony, prosperity and progress. After this the delegates to the National Council at Oberlin made their report, stating what was in fact done, and proving that the establishment of a triennial council involved no departure from the first principles of Congregationalism, since its action is not binding, as legislative or judicial, but moral, acting by illumination, and the expression of opinion and argument, leaving the churches free from all authority to follow the weightiest reasons for action. The new doctrinal departure spoken of was not in fact a new departure, but a return to old first principles. It made evangelical Christianity the basis of church union, and not the peculiarities of Calvinism, as opposed to Arminianism, or the outward forms of any denomination. No one familiar with the fathers of Congregationalism will find anything new in this. Indeed the earliest practice was to organize a church simply on a covenant to live a holy life in obedience to the word of God. Those who were received satisfied the church by individual statements that they were truly regenerated believers in Christ, who were determined to lead with them a holy life, making the word of God their standard of faith and practice. We understand the council to have assumed substantially the same principle as a basis of general fellowship.—Christian Union.

Address of the Publishing Committee.

The Publisher—The Editor—The Local Organ—The Advertising Columns—The Family Paper—The Religious Journal—Advocate the Advocate.

The Publishing Committee of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE met in New Orleans on Wednesday, the fourteenth instant. The Rev. Dr. Wadsworth represented the Alabama Conference, Rev. Dr. Watkins and Rev. J. G. Jones the Mississippi, and the three members of the committee for the Louisiana Conference were present.

Matters were before the committee which it was ordered should be reported in the form of an address to our people of the patronizing Conferences through the columns of the paper.

1. We are entirely satisfied with the publication and management of the paper by Rev. R. J. Harp, publisher. We approve his action in reducing the subscription price to $2. The paper has had financial prosperity during the past year. It is clear of debt. It has reached a point where it meets the actual expense of publication. It aspires to attain a success which shall enable it to suitably remunerate the publisher and editor for their services, which have been gratuitous entirely. Its subscription list is now rapidly approaching six thousand in number. Its advertisements are multiplying in proportion. Its prospects are flattering. Bro. Harp is the right man in the right place.

2. We think that in Dr. Parker the paper has a sound, sagacious and successful editor. His able editorials, and the news, literary and religious contents will commend this judgment to all who habitually read and examine the ADVOCATE. His labor of love is equaled only by his labor of zeal and devotion to the church. We hear of the weekly visits of the paper being anxiously looked for "in the regions beyond," as far as to Virginia and Maryland. We hope that his invitations through the columns to able brethren will be promptly heeded to contribute papers and correspondence, in the spirit of earnest co-operation to make the paper a grand success; the articles being also always left cheerfully to his discretion to curtail or to decline.

3. As a local organ the paper is invaluable for its general information, of matters domestic and foreign, literary and commercial. If persons can afford but one paper, this will do for all the secular purposes of life. Its price current is a careful digest of the state of the market up to the latest moment of going to press. Its news columns, though only two, are perhaps too many for the readers of the daily papers, but are important to rural subscribers, and often necessarily contain even for them more than it is profitable for one to know who would govern himself by the rule of the upright man, "that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil." Its literary critiques are suggestive and valuable to the reader of books. Its "Farm and Garden" contains useful hints that may save to the farmer his horse, his corn or his cotton, to the housewife her fowls, to the gardener his turnips, strawberries or grapes.

4. The advertising columns of our paper are interesting. As we have proposed that the ADVOCATE shall do for all purposes of those who can afford only one paper, the inevitable advertisement must appear. But the publisher is knowing and sharp to accept of the offered only those which may be of importance to his readers. He rejects advertisements constantly on the ground of quackery, vanity or falsehood. He knows the things that his patrons need, and advertises accordingly. Look at his columns. Here are eyes for the blind, stoves for the cold, pianos for the musical, sewing machines for weary fingers, cotton ties for the planter, legs and arms for the unfortunate, and organs for Sunday schools and churches. Here are business cards of doctors and undertakers, lawyers and soap manufacturers, commission merchants and bankers. Here are dry goods and drier books; in short, a series to which we need not give any more free space, for the information is before your eyes.

5. Our paper furnishes a variety of entertaining and instructive reading for the family. The editor culls the roses from the garden of the press, passing by the deadly nightshade. He has facilities, if space could be allowed him, for presenting a very choice selection of the flowers and fruits of literature. Let, then, those preachers who shake their heads sadly, and mourn to find on center-tables and at firesides the sensational sheet of the man whose chief glory is that he owns the fastest horse in the world, exercise themselves unto godly assiduity in so multiplying patrons of our paper as to encourage the enlargement of our sheet. The taste for other than strictly religious reading is proper, and must be recognized. It is sheer cruelty and nonsense to denounce it. It ought to be gratified and educated. Our young people are plucking Dead Sea apples that turn to ashes on their lips. A wide field opens here, but the sad reality is only too plain and familiar to every thoughtful observer to require elaborate illustration. The secular weeklies are, many of them, deserts of dry sands, and hot airs, in whose sterility and simooms the plants of modest virtue perish, and their wasted elements go to swell the mighty waste of vice. Every good man must work to counteract, to destroy the baleful influence. Let him labor, therefore, to make the religious press acceptable to all elegant tastes, and for the circulation of the paper whose weekly visits to his family he is glad to welcome. In the quiet, pious country home our ADVOCATE can supply all the periodical reading which care and time will allow.

6. The next thing is our paper as a religious journal—the last and most important. In this department our editor is at home. He knows, according to the rule of the doctrine, that it is of God, and so affirms. Affirming, he is also able to defend it—the doctrine of our apostolic Methodism, which is the thing that needs much to be done in these days. Methodists everywhere, in city and country, need to be instructed by all means or methods of discourse, by the pulpit and the press, in the doctrines, discipline and usages of the church. The press is a pulpit, a rostrum which we are not at liberty to dispense with. "The poor have the gospel preached unto them." The press is a herald. Our children need to be taken hold of in earliest years, and at least initiated for induction by degrees into the divine mysteries. A child's eye that can read is very likely to find some blessed truth in the paper which from the pulpit would have escaped his ear. The eye is the more lively organ.

Many of our people do not own the Discipline. The religious paper importantly supplements the teaching of the pulpit. Our ADVOCATE deals with those fundamental truths which are able to make men wise unto salvation. The ground which we have here entered upon can only be covered in successive editorials and contributions ad infinitum.

The thing is now to get this paper into every family of the patronizing Conferences. Let us aim at this first, ministers and laymen—ministers with their congregations in private and in public, laymen with their next-door neighbors. What say you, brethren, and sisters too—aye, the sisters who love the church papers; aye, they do? Let us give you a case.

One of the pastors of this city tells us of a young lady who came to him with a request on one Sunday night recently. Her residence is Kentucky, and she is a Methodist and of a Methodist family. She is visiting a Presbyterian family in this city. She begged the minister to put her in the way of obtaining weekly the Nashville Advocate and the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist papers, which had become a necessity to her from their weekly perusal at home, and she could not live even a few weeks without them! This is the kind of attachment which let every minister and lover of the church endeavor to cultivate among our people for our religious journals, and particularly in our bounds, for our own ADVOCATE. You can do it. How long before responses to this appeal will come flowing in?

Take a rough draft of solicitation: Brother, do you take our ADVOCATE? Here's a copy. Look at it for a moment. Fine material it is printed on. Type is large and plain. Look at this first page—news of the day; here's a sweet anecdote; there's a little stroke of amusement for your boys; here's a fine thing. Don't you want books sometimes? Here's a very commendatory notice of Tyerman's Life of Wesley; it is a glorious book; you might never have heard of it if this paper had not accidentally, or of set purpose on my part, come in your way; you will not stop reading till you have finished it, if you get it, I'll underwrite. See these pages following—valuable correspondence, splendid editorial. Look at these revival notices—it will cheer your heart to read them; and at these obituaries—they can almost make us wish to die. Thus to die, O glorious hope.

Advocate the ADVOCATE one moment, and you will have a subscriber the next.

Finally, as you hate false doctrine, and the error which is contagiously rife in this day to make rationalists and pantheists and infidels of ever description, quickly alarmed, and actually trembling before the awful facts, labor to save, labor by any means to save some, and among other means by this not the least efficient, the circulation of a religious paper whose teachings and contents all you can serenely indorse as being of the truth unto salvation.

W. V. TUDOR,
For the Committee.

CONVERSION.

How momentous an event is the conversion of a soul!—turning it from darkness to light, from the power of Satan to God. How varied and how great are the facts and influences connected with the impressive hour! The Son of God has come down and bled to win the sinner's love—has tasted death that he may live. The Bible has come and taught the sinner the will of God and the way to heaven. The gospel has poured its trumpet voice to warn him of impending doom, and then, in strains as sweet as angels use, has persuaded him to come to Jesus. The Holy Spirit has attended all these instrumentalities, and made them powerfully efficacious to illuminate and awaken the benighted and slumbering soul.—The sinner, startled from his long and guilty sleep, arouses to the dread realities of his state, and cries: "Oh! wretched man that I am. God be merciful to me a sinner." But the great and implacable enemy does not willingly nor easily give up his "captive." He is near to damp the ardor of his zeal, and to lull him into false security, or else to gather clouds and darkness about his soul, to discourage hope, and tell him it is vain to pray—mercy is closed forever. But the minister of the cross, who is sent to bind up the broken heart, cries: "Behold, behold, the Lamb!" The church, in the sympathy of Christian love, in the agony of prayerful earnestness, cries: "Lord, save the purchase of thy blood. Let the ransomed sinner live." The sinner thus surrounded, struggling with the carnality and enmity of his nature, his mind rides like the moon in a sky overcast with whirling clouds—the light and shadow, the hope and fear constantly mingling, and following each other in swift succession. Heaven, earth and hell ply him with tremendous motives. Angels hover nigh, and wait around to bear the news, and raise a shout in heaven: "A sinner repents—an heir of glory's born!" Oh, upon the slender thread of an hour hang everlasting things! But grace, all-conquering grace, aids him to win the hard-fought field. He comes to feel: none but Jesus, none but Jesus can do me good; but he can save me to the uttermost, and save me now.

"Faith lends its realizing light,
The clouds disperse, the shadows fly,
Th' invisible appears in sight,
And God is seen by mortal eye."

His dungeon flames with light, his chains fall off, his heart is free. Oh, how humble, and oh, how glad! —"Love and grief his heart dividing." What a great fight has been fought! How glorious the field that has been won! 'Twill be the theme of heaven's unending days.

Perhaps, reader, the time is long past and the scene is afar, but hallowed, forever hallowed will be the hour of your birth divine, when you became a child of God, a brother of the Lord, and the heir of heaven.

Circulation of Methodist Periodicals, North and South.

Under this head the Southern Christian Advocate sets the Methodist right about figures and conclusions. Pettengill & Co. were wide of the mark in their statement. Our weeklies alone very much exceed the circulation for which they give us credit; and since the refutation by Dr. Harrison, mentioned by the Southern, our publications have made large advances. We quote from the Southern Christian Advocate as follows:

The New York Methodist reproduces, as the basis of some disparaging remarks of its own, the slander of Southern Methodism published about a year ago by Pettengill & Co., in their "Advertisers' Hand Book." So far as the reliability of that publication is concerned, it is immaterial whether the slander was intentional, or was the result of imperfect information. Either supposition is fatal to a claim for trustworthiness as to the facts it proposes to furnish. It is matter of surprise and regret that the Methodist, which, among the religious journals of its section, has maintained an exceptional reputation for fairness in treating of matters connected with the Church South, should have assumed the correctness of so discreditable a showing, and indulged the comments it saw proper to make, without endeavoring to ascertain the truthfulness of its text.

According to the statistics of the "Hand Book," the number of periodicals printed by the Methodist Episcopal Church is 875,000 copies; by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, 40,000 copies; the ratio to membership, in the former, 1 to every 1.44; in the latter, 1 to every 13.50. From such data the relative "intellectual status" of the Church South is very readily and complacently determined by the Methodist.

Nearly a year ago Dr. Harrison, of the New Monthly Magazine, refuted the slander of these figures by showing that "the circulation of the periodicals of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, by actual examination on the day this article is written, amount to 141,800." He then estimates the circulation of the other fifteen papers issued by the press of the Southern Methodist Church at the low figure of 56,000 copies, which gives 197,000 as the total issue, changing the ratio to 1 to every 2.88, and proving us to be, even amid the lingering shadows of slavery, at least half as enlightened as our highly illuminated neighbors. And we venture to suggest that unprejudiced minds will find in the relative circumstances of the two sections a more satisfactory explanation of the disparity than the intellectual inferiority of Southern Methodists.

The Methodist, we take it for granted, was misled by false statistics, and hence we entertain the hope that it will cheerfully and promptly correct the misrepresentation which it has given currency. We shall see.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHING.

The uniform lessons, as prepared and published by Dr. Haygood, are, as far as we have noticed, well selected and arranged with care. This plan is now substantially in operation in nearly all the Protestant churches, with no considerable variation in the general details. The uniformity secured is of value in the operations of a school, and the judicious selection of the lessons, and the notes and questions supplied, are of great assistance to the teachers. We regard it, however, as an unfortunate circumstance that the uniform lessons should displace a thorough and systematic course of catechetical instruction. We do not think this result was ever contemplated by the originators of the plan, nor is it necessary. Our schools should be well drilled in the catechism. By no other means will the children and youth of the church obtain a connected and systematic knowledge of the doctrines of the Bible and of the polity of our church. If our choice lay between the uniform lessons or the catechisms, we should take the latter. Both should be in use at the same time, and both receive due prominence and attention. We fear that the use of catechisms is becoming nearly obsolete in many of our schools, and that our young people are in great danger of growing up without a thorough and comprehensive view of Christian doctrines. What the Western Christian Advocate says of their Berean Series is suggestive, though not justly applicable to our system. Says the editor of the Western:

To call the Berean Series a system is a mild misnomer. It is a congeries of pictures; a kaleidoscopic shifting of scriptural scenes and characters; a groping for the zest of versatility, with a fair substance of facts, much beauty of fancy, some aptness at permutation, and an appreciable element of pure fiction. Dr. Vincent and his colleagues have done a noble pioneer work, for which the church owes them the thanks of all its generations; but it is a pioneer work only. Possibly under the law of progress every work is relatively pioneer. But this is not the place to theorize. The Berean plan has its great and peculiar merits, but it presents no tenacious logical order, no scientifically developed body of doctrines. Is the gospel incumbered with supernumerary and superserviceable doctrines? If not, we are teaching too narrowly, and by methods as unscientific as charlatanry itself. The quantity of information may indeed be considerable, but for want of classification and statement it is of little use; and when the light reading of the day is heaped upon it like mountains of chaff and bran, the labor of finding it discourages the use, and these religious sciolists helplessly abandon themselves to the winds and currents.

Beyond all controversy there ought to be provided a complete interpretation of the doctrines of God our Savior, from a Methodistic standpoint, enriched with every legitimate attraction which genius, art and industry can supply, in forms convenient for instant use in Sabbath schools and families, at the same time that the weekly, monthly, quarterly and annual issues, as the case may be, shall be prepared for binding into one complete body of divinity, or family commentary, for permanent and universal study. The system of instructions should be made to embrace, incidentally, our rules, usages and polity, in order that our people may be generally and thoroughly intelligent in these matters. Our denominational self-respect could not fail to be advantaged, while the piety, liberality and evangelizing efficiency of the church would improve by the largest per cent.

WE ARE INDEBTED to Rev. B. B. Ross, secretary, for a copy of the Minutes of the Alabama Conference, held at Mobile, November 29 to December 4. The copy was, of course, prepared by Bro. Ross, and his work is done with thoroughness and accuracy.

The statistics are admirably tabulated for reference. The printing is a good job, and done at the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tennessee. Every adult member of the Methodist Church in the bounds of the Conference should have a copy.

WHO WILL GO?

The Pacific Methodist contains the following paragraph about a resident Bishop. The facilities of reaching the Pacific are such now that the necessity is not as great as it once was, and when the Southern road to California is constructed the matter will be still less important. But we hope our brethren on the coast may have a Bishop in their midst in due time, and a commodious home prepared for him. The instincts of Methodists seem to demand a Bishop in every section, and they are as restless as a hive of bees without a queen until the demand is met. Says the Pacific Methodist:

Two of our correspondents have recently written in reference to the needs of our church on this coast, giving especial attention to episcopal visitations. We are not surprised that this interest is manifested. The advent of one of our Bishops among us has always resulted in a forward movement, and it is altogether natural that we should long for more of that which we know to be for our good. We have no doubt but that the College of Bishops at their next meeting will seriously consider the question of appointing one of their number as a resident Bishop on this coast. Whoever he may be, he will be hailed with joy. In good season something will be done toward building an episcopal residence in some favorable locality.

BURNING OF THE BOOK CONCERN.

Telegrams of the fifteenth instant announce the burning of the Southern Methodist Publishing House at Nashville, Tennessee, on the night of the fourteenth.

The following telegram was received from Rev. Dr. Redford by Robert J. Harp, agent, on the sixteenth, viz.: "Loss, twenty-five thousand. A few gentlemen have subscribed eleven. Nashville will give fifty thousand." The full particulars of the fire have not yet reached us. The most satisfactory account of the losses is taken from the Nashville Union and American of the sixteenth, which we give below for the benefit of our readers:

The loss by the fire to the Southern Methodist Publishing Company is not so large as at first supposed. With the exception of a few half completed plates, stored in the upper room, the presses and stereotypes, valued at $100,000, were saved, together with a large stock of books and stationery. A good deal of sheet stock in the bindery was lost. The value of Mr. John Locken's property in the bindery was a little over $15,000; on which he suffered a loss of not over $3,000, saving most of the machinery.

The minutes of the Tennessee Conference from the time of its organization, going back to the beginning of the present century, as also the minutes of the General Conference, dating back from 1845, the time of the split between the Church North and South, were deposited in the room occupied by Dr. Summers. Yesterday morning Rev. Dr. Young and Rev. Mr. Brown went in search of these precious documents and found them partly in a charred condition, but, with the exception of those of the last Conference, it is thought they can be transcribed.

Rev. Dr. Summers' library, containing valuable books and rare manuscripts, which cannot be replaced, was utterly destroyed.

The entire loss to the Publishing House is estimated at $25,000. On the whole building, Rev. Dr. Redford had an insurance in various companies of $70,000, of which sum $5,000 in the Imperial was on that part of the building used as a bindery by Mr. Locken. Owing to the little danger of fire in the part of the building burned, the insurance on it was less, being placed on the stock and that part of the building most liable to fire. The Book Committee meet this morning at ten o'clock, to take into consideration the disaster, and take such action as may seem best under existing circumstances, to repair the buildings, and commence operations again.

The Advocate will not be suspended, but will be issued on its regular day, and the employees, numbering one hundred or more, will be at work as usual within a few days. This is gratifying intelligence, and we hope to see the company on as firm a basis, and enjoying the prosperous career which has characterized its existence heretofore under the efficient management of its faithful agent, Rev. Dr. Redford.

A printed slip from the Publishing House, containing full details, reaches us too late for this issue. It will appear next week.

ANANIAS and Saphira were not killed for keeping back part of the price, but for lying about it.

MASONIC.

On Thursday, the fifteenth instant, the Masons of New Orleans laid the corner-stone of their new temple, which is to be built on St. Charles street. We were not able to be present to witness the impressive ceremonies, nor to hear the addresses. The proceedings, as given in the daily papers, must have been exceedingly interesting to the large audience assembled. The principal address was delivered by Rev. W. V. Tudor, the closing part of which we give, as follows:

The Masons' great quest is light. If we look up at night we see shining upon us with a distinct brightness orbs and worlds, far, far beyond the point where our sun can lend them any radiance. They are not lit up by his beams, and yet they shine. How is this? Science explains it. It has discovered a luminous element which it calls ether, which encompasses all the worlds that our eyes behold. The element is invisible, impalpable, imponderable, immeasurable. It is a sea of light, irradiating every sun and bathing in splendor every star. Destroy or dissipate it, and our sun would go out in Stygian darkness, and not a star would beam in the firmament. Suns and stars drink deep of the invisible glory, and then themselves become fountains of light, which roll no waves, that in swift succession and with immense rapidity traverse in all directions the unfathomable sea. In the ethereal elements of truth which God has poured like a flood upon our intelligent being, Masonry would bathe itself that it may become itself a fountain and source of light to those that sit in darkness.

As the light of the sun gives unity to the works of God, and kindles them into beauty, clothes every landscape with its rich and varied loveliness, imparts to every gem its luster, to every star its blazing radiance, so is it the light of truth alone that gives unity, beauty and excellence to the Mason's lodge.

Truth, like light, is stainlessly pure. The ray that discovers the mote in the air is not infected by it, nor defiled by the stain that it reveals only that it may be removed.

Light shines and creation rejoices. Verdure clothes the earth, and flowers adorn it; lakes and rivers become polished mirrors under its delicate touch, and ocean laughs to its very depths under the sweet and powerful influence, as day mounts the heavens. Life in a thousand forms renews its activity; the groves become vocal with innumerable songs, the petals of the flowers unfold to Aurora's roseate fingers and cast forth their perfume, the beast of the field rises from his grassy couch, and the monarch of all goes forth to his labor. Such animation, beauty and joy is truth, received in the love of it, to the soul of man.

The virtues taught in Masonry are the white light of truth refracted into the colors of the rainbow.

The light of truth in Masonry is the light of life and immortality. "Death is an eternal sleep;" they wrote it on their tombstones and cemeteries in ancient times. Truth, with pencil of light, has written on our graves: "Resting in hope."

"Who follows truth carries his star in his brain."

The corner-stone will now be laid with ample ceremony. It will receive at the hands of the grand officers a tribute of corn, and wine, and oil—symbols, respectively: the corn of nourishment, the wine of refreshment, and the oil of the joy which the fraternity wishes this community, in the midst of which it is planted.

The foundation-stone placed in position, let the temple rise if the work be of God; if not, let the confusion of Babel seize the builders, and the work itself come to nought.

Let the temple rise; the expression in the union of its parts and the solidity of its structure, of concord, harmony and brotherly love yet abiding on earth, though the nations be embroiled in strife; just as the institution which it shall cover has often been a refuge and comfort for enemies in war.

Let the temple rise; let it reel the firmer to its base for every earthquake, and shine the brighter for every tongue of fire that licks it; let the destructions of war spare it; and whenever time of judgment, as one or the other must, shall reveal the contents of the box now to be inclosed in the corner-stone, may documents and papers discover by contrast a better, purer, happier state of society than now then existing; the murder, and fraud, and corruptions in public life, of which the journals of to-day tell the story, passed away forever, and the race well advanced toward perfect goodness and happiness.

Let the temple rise.

It is the quaint conceit of a wild modern poet that the precious stones of our earth are the remains of a temple built by angels in Eden, to the worship of God. The foundations of the temple were bright and beaten gold, tower and roof and pinnacle without were solid diamond, and the dome was eye-blue sapphire studded with golden stars; the floor was emerald, veined with gold and silver; marble and mineral of every hue were in its walls, the columns were of alabaster, the altar was one ruby, heartlike; and where all things were magnificent, the meanest thing was gold, the plainest. Man fell and joined the hosts of hell, black-bannered, on the very day when he should have met God and his angels there, and immediately also fell that bright fane. No death-doomed eye gazed on its glory. Earthquakes gulped it down. The Temple of the Angels lay in its grave; till at the flood it burst like a shell and scattered east and west, and far and wide its fragments, that are the diamonds and rubies, and emeralds and sapphires of this world's costly merchandise.

The temple of a perfect human nature has been wrecked. Yet benevolence, truth, justice, mercy, love, are scattered like fragmentary jewels in separate human characters.

Let it be our nobler Masonry to rebuild the Temple of the Lord in the perfect man, until he shall stand forth himself again, the jewels once again in combination, love ever beating in the heart, truth ever speaking from the tongue, justice ever reigning in the mind, benevolence ever giving from the hand, righteousness ever in the path of the feet, kindness ever beaming from the eye, gentleness curving every limb, honor crowning the head, and goodness unqualified the description of the life.

Let the temple rise; the constant admonition to us particularly, brethren, of that fairer, nobler edifice of character in godliness and grace, that can only be built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone.

Our readers will be sure to peruse an excellent sketch of Dr. Bonnell, by Rev. F. M. Grace, which appears on our second page this week.

Great Britain has 3,600,000 scholars and 635,000 teachers in her Sunday schools; and the United States has 4,000,000 scholars and nearly 400,000 teachers.

God does not give us light for two steps at a time.

Obituaries.

Died, near Magnolia, Mississippi, January 6, 1872, Hugh Murray, son of Rev. Wesley and the late Mrs. Louisa Sandell, aged fourteen years.

The circumstances attending his death were extremely painful. He attempted to drive a team through a gate. The wagon struck the gate and threw Murray down, and the wheels passed over his body. He lived but a few days. He testified to the religion of Jesus, and exhorted those present to meet him in heaven. He was the only child to gladden his father's home, who anticipated for him a bright future. It is hard to realize that he who was loved so dearly, and who but a few days since was with his friends, full of the activity of youth, is now sleeping in the silent tomb. The father's mind never dwelt on such a sudden and irreparable separation; but his belief in that God who ordained all things for the best will reconcile him to his great loss, which is Murray's eternal gain.

M. L. J. H.

Josiah Garlington was born in South Carolina in 1798, and departed this life in Wilcox county, Alabama, October 28, 1871. He moved to Alabama in the year 1818, and by hard labor and economy he accumulated a sufficiency for his declining years; but the war swept it from him, after which his mind began to gradually give way under the pressure of circumstances, and soon his health began to fail, and continued to grow worse until death took him from us.

He joined the Methodist Church South when quite young, and lived a faithful, zealous member. He filled the various offices of the church, as they were enjoined upon him, successfully. He seemed to adhere greatly to the old primitive style of Methodism. He reflected the true light of the gospel by which many mariners have been brought to port in safety. The fruits of his holiness may be seen in the children whom he has left behind to mourn his loss and battle with the conflicts of life.

He was a true friend to the church, and always delighted in and prayed for her prosperity. His house was a home for the weary itinerants, and his cordial greeting always made them feel welcome. He was always pleased to have them engage with him and his household in prayer and praise to God. In all the varied relations of life—as husband, father, brother, friend and citizen—he was affectionate, kind, devoted and true. In the death of Bro. Garlington the community has lost a valuable citizen, and the Methodist Episcopal Church South one of her most humble and devout members. But, thank God, we do not part nor weep as those who have no hope. With the eye of faith we see the loved form, cold in death, coming up from his tomb on the resurrection morn; and in this blessed faith we are enabled to sing:

"In this world of sin and pain
We only meet to part again:
But when we reach that heavenly shore,
We then shall meet to part no more."

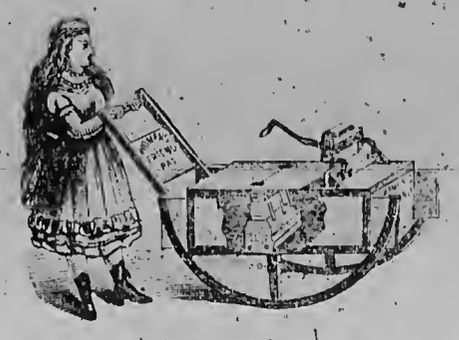
SAVE YOUR CLOTHING! SAVE YOUR LABOR!

ITEMS OF IMPORTANCE TO EVERY HOUSEKEEPER.

THE WOMAN'S FRIEND

WASHING MACHINE!



Only four months since it was first introduced to the New Orleans public, and large numbers have been sold.

It washes by beating, instead of rubbing—the only true principle as time has demonstrated.

A Home-manufactured Article.

THE UNDERSIGNED offers this Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating instead of rubbing. It will wash 16 shirts or 25 ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will Thoroughly Wash, Rinse and Blue two pieces ordinary clothing in FORTY-FIVE MINUTES, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread. The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it.

WITHOUT THE LEAST INJURY.

It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years, with care, and cost less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every machine will do what is represented if the directions are followed.

To verify what is stated, I have obtained a few certificates from responsible parties, which are annexed hereto.

PRICE, $12. WITH WRINGER, $18.

EDWARD THOMPSON, Manufacturer and Proprietor,

fe22 1m 184 PETERS STREET, NEAR JULIA, NEW ORLEANS.

GREENSBURG, La., November 1, 1871.

I hereby certify that I have one of the "Rocker or Woman's Friend Washing Machines," and have found it the Machine for country use, as it will wash dirty clothes, such as farm laborers wear rolling logs, etc. Any machine will wash clothes that are slightly soiled. A. W. CARRUTH.

Mr. Carruth, in a letter accompanying this certificate, makes the following statement: "My wife, who understands fully the principles and process of washing, says it is useless to wash ordinarily soiled clothes through more than one hot water, but I could not well embody this in a certificate."

NEW ORLEANS, November 8, 1871.

I take pleasure in stating that the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," purchased of Mr. Thompson in September last, gives me excellent satisfaction. I have used it personally, and can say that it will wash the dirtiest clothes and give them a grass-bleached whiteness. I have washed Swiss muslin dresses with it without the least injury. I have washed blankets with it and found (as stated in the circulars) that it gives them a new appearance and feeling. One week, during a temporary illness, my little girl twelve and boy ten years of age done the entire washing. I simply put in the water and soap. I will give any further information I may possess to those interested, by calling at my residence. MRS. A. BOUCHEREAU,
232 Eighth street,

NEW ORLEANS, November 18, 1871.

Mr. E. Thompson: Dear Sir: I have used your Washer for the last three months, and as a practical man (scouring daily) I pronounce it the best in the market; I could not spare it. I will explain its merits to any one by applying to P. VOLNEY,
Dyer and Scourer, 88 Bienville street.

NEW ORLEANS, November 7, 1871.

I certify that the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," purchased of Mr. Thompson last June, has done the entire washing of my hotel, from the largest quilt and blanket to the smallest dollar, ever since, to my entire satisfaction. It will wash clean the dirtiest pieces, and will not damage the most delicate. It has saved me a great amount of labor. Any one can see it in operation at my hotel on Monday of each week.

Mr. E. Thompson: Dear Sir: Having used for over two months your "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," and tested it most thoroughly under my own eye, I am prepared to say with confidence that it does all you claim for it, if the simple and plain directions are followed. The Wringer, especially is a great success. Altogether the Machine and Wringer are wonderful labor-saving machines, and the machine is very properly called "Woman's Friend."

Without it, not less than double our present number of servants would be required to do our work hence the economy of it is evident. Every family should have one. Yours truly, J. S. PAGAUD.

"HAPPY-GO-LUCKY."

BY GEORGE COOPER.

Happy-Go-Lucky has cheeks rosy red,
Ten times a day he will stand on his head.
Happy-Go-Lucky is brimful of fun,
Up in the morning as soon as the sun,
Sliding on banisters, all the way down,
Playing at circus and hunting his crown,
When he has shook all the house with affright,
Off he goes, screaming with roguish delight!

Happy-Go-Lucky once climbed up a tree,
Just to look round and see what he could see.
Crack went the bough! such a terrible fall!
Didn't hurt Happy-Go-Lucky at all!
Maybe the fairies, with some potent charm,
Because he's so cheerful, have kept him from harm.
Mother so wishes that he would be still,
Only for once; but the rogue never will!

Happy-Go-Lucky runs out in the streets,
Asks in to dinner each beggar he meets;
Happy-Go-Lucky—now, just think of that—
Tied Granny's spectacles on the poor cat!
When he knows Mother is going to scold,
Up he runs gravely, in fears, I am told;
Then he will kiss her and hug her with joy:
Any one got such an out-and-out boy?

HERMIT LIFE.

"I can imagine how people should think to gain heaven by works of charity and mercy, but wherein consists the peculiar sanctity of dirt and degradation?"

The young man who spoke looked up from the book he was reading, and, closing it, threw it with contempt on the table.

"What are you talking about, Tom?" exclaimed his father.

"You will upset the inkstand," said his mother, taking up the book from the pens upon which it had fallen.

Little Jack came to see if there were any pictures, but that which he had mistaken for a picture was only a map, so he was about to return to his volume of Arabian Nights when Brother Tom said: "Come, sit down here by me, Jack, and I will tell you and Anne something about what was thought to be a Christian life in the fourteenth century and later."

Jack and Anne came quickly, and father laid down the evening paper, and taking off his spectacles, he settled himself comfortably in his large chair to listen.

Seeing that father proposed to be one of his auditors, Brother Tom explained to him that he had been reading a history of the Spanish Conquest in America, and that he had been led, by sketches in it of Dominican and Franciscan monks, to wonder at their singular views of a holy life.

"Now, tell me," he said, addressing the children, "if you knew of a man who was thought to be so good that he was called a saint, in what kind of works would you think he was engaged?"

"In helping every one," "In being good to the poor," "In working very industriously," were the various answers given.

"On the contrary, this man, this 'holy man,' as he was called, found a miserable barren island, on which there was a cave which he used as his cell. From the roof of this subterranean cave the water oozed during the greater part of the year."

"What good could he do there?" exclaimed both children at once.

"That is just what I want to know myself. There were no human beings there for him to benefit, and such a life affects the mind as well as the body. All these old hermits began invariably to think that they were subjected to peculiar temptations and visitations of the devil. The poor fellow of whom I am now telling you became perfectly gray, while he was living in this wretched hole, when he was only twenty-five years old."

"Who was this of whom you are telling the children?" asked their father.

"He was one of those monks who came to this country to convert the Indians, after the Spaniards had shown them what sort of men the Roman Catholic religion could make. He was a Dominican named Betanzos."

"Did he always live in the cave? Tell me about him," asked Jack.

"After a time he bethought him to pay a visit to an old friend of his who was in a convent in Salamanca, and to beg his way thither."

"To beg?" exclaimed Jack. "He should have been ashamed to beg. Why did he not work?"

"Hush, Jack; you have the honest pride of an American. Those old saints were quite willing to let others work while they begged for bread. On his way to Salamanca he passed through the city where his parents, who were wealthy, resided. As he was about to knock at the door of his father's house, his father came out on horseback, attended by his servants. The son recognized his father. 'For the love of Jesus Christ, give some charity to this poor stranger,' said Betanzos. But his father, seeing that the man asking for alms was capable of work, although he was gray, said with a loud voice: 'It would be far better for you to seek an employer, and to work, than to go about in the idleness of this vagabond life.' And when the master had passed on, the servants were not slow to improve upon his comments. When he reached Salamanca he was very anxious to have his friend, whom he found there in a Dominican convent, join him in a hermit life, assigning as a reason the great sanctity at which several great hermits had arrived, and among others his favorite saint, Mary Magdalene."

"Was Mary Magdalene a hermit? The Bible does not say so."

"The Romanist accepts the traditions of the church as readily as the teachings of the Bible. Not to lengthen my story—I might easily do so—Betanzos was at last overcome by the arguments of the Dominicans, and concluded to remain with them and join the fraternity as Brother Domingo de Betanzos."

"When did this man come to America?" asked father.

"In 1514," replied Tom; "and it was the account of the rules of their order which made me exclaim, just now, against their uncleanliness, which was mistaken for piety, and their severity, which passed for Christianity. Just let me read this passage for you, father;" and Tom took up the book once more and read as follows: "The dress of the monks was a linen tunic, and over it a coarse serge robe; but even this miserable clothing was not to be washed, without permission from the prelate. The bedding consisted of a mat and two blankets; the pillow was the outer garment, worn by day, rolled up. It was profanity—such are the words—to imagine that any ornament was to be permitted in the cell, or any table cloth upon the table, or any curtain in the doorway, or any blind at the window. The refection on the fast-days, which extended over seven months in the year, and all the Fridays, was only a bit of bread; on the days of the fasts of the church the only thing put on the table was a jar of water." Tom closed the book. "Their life was miserable indeed; but still not so hard as the monks of La Trappe. Life to the Trappist must have been a hideous, delirious dream. Where do they get any such ideas of a religious life, father?"

"I think, my son, because the traditions of men outweigh with them the teachings of God's holy word. Let us read our Bible more and thank God for his words of love therein, for man's laws are hard indeed."

"No wonder that our noble old church fought against such teachings as those. Isn't it pleasant to think that while these same Spaniards were teaching such false views of life, our good Dutch fathers were standing up protesting against them, and building up a church of pure doctrine, founded upon God's word, and not upon these priest-given rules of life."—The Sower and the Gospel Field.

THE LITTLE BOY'S PRAYER.

During a season of special religious interest in one of the manufacturing villages of Rhode Island, a little boy some ten or eleven years of age was observed to be the object of serious and powerful impressions. His countenance indicated his deep concern, and as he went sadly to the house of God, the praying souls who were gathered there longed and waited for the hour when he should confess his Savior, and enter into rest through faith in Christ.

They waited long, the child shrinking from the cross which rested on him, till at length he went alone to a secret place and prayed:

"Lord, I want to go forward, but I am not big enough to go alone. Send father to go with me and I will go."

The little fellow went to the next meeting, and, when an opportunity offered, to his glad surprise the father arose in tears and broken-heartedness, saying to the assembled saints: "I am ready to go—I want you to pray for me."

Instantly the little boy was on his feet, exclaiming: "I can go now. Father has gone forward. I have prayed the Lord to send father to go with me. Now I can go."

It was a joyful hour when father and son both entered upon the heavenly path; and when the meeting closed the little boy hurried off home without waiting for his father, and, full of joyfulness, exclaimed as he entered the dwelling:

"Mother, did you ever know the Lord to answer prayer?"

"I don't know," said the mother, hesitatingly.

"Well," said he, "I have; for I asked the Lord to send my father to go with me to serve the Lord, and he has started; and I know the Lord hears prayer."

Father and son still walk the heavenly road, rejoicing that he who hears and answers prayer is also willing to grant grace to help in every time of need.—The Christian.

IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

I once heard a preacher trying to teach young children that the soul would live after they were all dead. They listened, but did not understand what he was saying. But at last, taking his watch from his pocket, he said:

"James, what is this I am holding in my hand?"

"A watch, sir."

"Do you all see it?"

"Yes, sir."

"How do you know it is a watch?"

"It ticks, sir."

"Very well; can any of you hear it tick? All listen now."

After a pause—

"Yes, sir, we hear it."

He then took off the case, and held the case in one hand and the watch in the other.

"Now, children, which is the watch? You see there are two which look like watches."

"The little one in your right hand, sir."

"Very well again; now I will lay the case aside, and put it away down there in my hat. Now let us see if you can hear the watch tick."

"Yes, sir, we hear it," exclaimed several voices.

"Well, the watch can tick, and go, and keep time, you see, when the case is taken off and put in my hat. The watch goes just as well. So it is with you, children. Your body is nothing but the case; your soul is inside. The case—the body—may be taken off and buried in the ground, and the soul will live and think just as well as the watch will go, as you see, when the case is off!"

"PLAGUE TAKE IT!"—"What was that you said, Willie?" "Nothing, Cousin John; I was only playing." "But what did you say in play? I want you to say those words over again." Willie muttered: "I just said 'Plague take it,' just 'cause this old no-account horse wouldn't stand up." "You are a young swearer, my little boy." "Swearer! Why, Cousin John, everybody says 'plague take it' when they get mad. That isn't anything." "One of the trifles, Willie, that gets more and more important every year, until at last it becomes so powerful as to be able to destroy the soul. A little word may appear trifling now, but it will grow upon you like the flakes of snow upon the mountain, and may drag you down into an endless night. A drop has made many a drunkard—a light, thoughtless word made many a swearer. Avoid trifling sins."

The Farm and Garden.

HOW TO BE A GOOD FARMER.

Here is the secret of good farming: You cannot take from the land more than you restore to it, in some shape or other, without ruining it, and so destroying your capital. Different soils require different modes of treatment and cropping, but in every variety of soil these are the golden rules to be observed: Drain until you find that the water that falls from heaven does not stagnate on the soil, but runs through it, and off of it freely. Turn up and till the land until your foot sinks into a loose powdery loam, through which the air and heat will readily penetrate. Let no weed occupy the place where a useful plant could possibly grow. Collect every particle of manure that can be obtained, either liquid or solid. Let nothing on the farm go to waste. Put in your crops in that course which experience has shown to lead to success in their growth, and to an enrichment and not an impoverishment of the land. Give every plant room to spread its roots in the soil. And in all your operations endeavor to be a little ahead of your neighbors.

THE FRUIT ORCHARD FOR FEBRUARY.—Set out the peach, the plum, the apple, the pear, the quince, the fig, the pomegranate, the grape, the strawberry, the raspberry and all other kinds of desirable fruit and ornamental trees and vines. Examine peach trees for the worm, and apple trees for the borer, and dig these depredators from their hiding place with the sharp end of your knife. Heap leached ashes around your peach trees, from the collar to the height of two or three inches above the surface of the ground, or pour boiling water around them. Work around all your fruit trees, stirring the ground well a little further than the branches extend, and apply a good top-dressing of manure. Cover the surface around newly planted and all delicate trees and shrubs, with leaves, pine straw or loose manure, to the depth of four or five inches, so that the roots may be protected. Frequent applications of soap suds to all newly-transplanted fruit trees, grape vines, strawberry plants, etc., will be of great and lasting benefit.

APPLYING ASHES TO FRUIT TREES.—Make use of ashes around trees as often as once a year; it is of immense benefit to them. Do not apply them in contact with the body of the tree unless they have been leached, as they become moistened and form lye too strong for the growing wood. Use about one quart of ashes to a tree, scattering it around them as far as the roots are supposed to extend underneath. Large trees, in bearing ten or twelve years, should receive an application of from six to eight quarts of unleached ashes to each tree, scattered in the same manner. Never permit the ashes to lie upon the ground in any place more than one inch in depth.

CHARCOAL FOR SICK CATTLE.

Nearly all cattle become sick from improper eating. In nine cases out of ten the digestion is wrong. Charcoal is the most efficient and rapid corrective. It will cure in a majority of cases, if properly administered. An example of its use: the hired man came in with the intelligence that one of the finest cows was very sick, and a kind neighbor proposed the usual drugs and poisons. The owner being ill, and unable to examine the cow, concluded that the trouble came from some over-eating, and ordered a teacup of pulverized charcoal given in water. It was mixed, placed in a junk bottle, the head held upward, and the water with its charcoal poured downward. In five minutes an improvement was visible, and in a few hours the animal was in the pasture quietly eating grass. Another instance of equal success occurred with a young heifer which became badly bloated by eating green apples after a hard wind. The bloat was so severe that the sides were almost as hard as a barrel. The old remedy, saleratus, was tried for the purpose of correcting the acidity. But the attempt to put it down always caused coughing, and it did little good. Half a teacupful of fresh powdered charcoal was next given. In six hours all appearance of bloat had gone, and the heifer was well.—Country Gentleman.

WATERING HOUSE PLANTS.

"How often should house plants be watered?" is a question frequently asked by those who have had little or no experience in their culture. There certainly cannot be any particular rule given in regard to time, for some species require more water than others, and plants in large pots will need it less frequently than those in small ones. The temperature of the room has also a powerful effect upon the evaporation of moisture; if very warm, the plants will require more than if it is cool. There are, however, two very essential things relating to house culture of plants which should not be overlooked: First, never supply cold water from a cistern or well, but let it be somewhere about the temperature of the air in which the plants are grown. Very cold water is sure to check the growth of the plants. Second, when the plants are watered give the soil in the pots a good soaking, and then omit watering again until the soil shows that it is needed. A little at a time, and very often, is too generally the practice with the novice.—Rural New Yorker.

POTASH AS A FERTILIZER.

Potash forms one of the most essential constituents of a fertile soil, and one of the most important of all the fertilizing agents within reach of the agriculturist. In many plants it constitutes more than one-half of their ash, and in most at least one-third. In neutralizing acids in the soil and in the liberation of ammonia it acts in the same manner as lime; but when it is desired to simply effect these last-mentioned objects, the latter should be used, as being cheaper, and potash, generally available in the form of ashes, should be applied as a manure, using the word in its strictest sense, to indicate a substance that contributes directly to the building up the structure of the plants. But considerable care should be exercised in the use of ashes; and they should never, as is the practice with some in manuring corn in the hill, be mixed with guano or the refuse of the hen roost, inasmuch as the first rain that dissolves them will cause the potash to displace the ammonia in the same manner that lime displaces it from barn-yard manure and similar manures, as we have just mentioned.

FEEDING STRAW.

Straw, if properly managed, can be made to serve a more profitable purpose than mere littering, or to add bulk to the manure pile. In England, and among the English farmers in Canada, most of the bullocks are fed and fattened on straw, with roots and meal. No hay is used, that being kept for the horses. Thus a larger number of stock can be fed. Straw cut, wetted and sprinkled with ground feed or oil-meal, will carry cattle very well through the winter. Oat, barley, rye and wheat straw are proportionately valuable in the order in which they are placed. Pea-straw is more valuable than oat-straw.—Hearth and Home.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

BROWN BREAD.—One pint of Graham flour, one pint of Indian meal, one pint of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda and a teacup of molasses. Boil or steam three hours, and then bake it in the tin it has been boiled in for one hour. Boil five hours instead of baking, if you prefer it.

TO REMOVE SCORCH MARKS.—Peel and slice two onions, and extract the juice by squeezing or pounding. Then cut up half an ounce of white soap and two ounces of fuller's earth, and mix them with the onion juice and half a pint of vinegar. Boil this composition well; then spread it, when cool, over the scorched part of the linen, and let it dry on. Afterward wash out the linen, and if it has not penetrated the fabric so as to damage the texture, the mark will be found to have been removed.

SCALLOPED TOMATOES.—Peel as many large, ripe tomatoes as you wish to prepare; cut them in slices a quarter of an inch thick; pack in a pudding-dish first a layer of tomatoes, then a thick layer of bread crumbs, pepper, salt, a little white sugar and a teaspoonful of butter; then a layer of tomatoes, then bread crumbs, etc., till the dish is nearly full, having tomatoes last. Now dust over pepper, a little sugar and more butter; strew the top with bread crumbs, and bake, covered, half an hour, then remove the cover, and bake brown, but be careful not to scorch.

TO COOK ASPARAGUS.—Wash clean, but do not leave it in water. Cut off all of the white ends that are woody and tough, and when ready to boil tie up the stalks in a neat bunch, lay them in a saucepan, and sprinkle over as much salt as is needed to season, then just cover over the bunch, or bunches, with boiling water. Cook twenty minutes. When done take the asparagus out, and with a sharp knife cut off any part that has not been cooked tender, and throw away. Then cut the stalks up into pieces half an inch long and put it back into the saucepan with two tablespoonfuls of butter to one good-sized bunch, a little pepper, one cup of good cream, and enough finely-rolled bread crumbs to thicken it a little, say two tablespoonfuls, only even full. If there is enough water left after boiling to make the dish too liquid, pour off part of it before returning the asparagus, cream and bread crumbs to the saucepan. Let it all boil up for two or three minutes, then dish and send to the table hot.

Scientific.

A new mountain peak was added to the list of high summits by the second German Arctic Expedition. On the discovery of the great fiord of the east coast of Greenland, the explorers entered and ascended its course for seventy miles, amid scenery of the grandest character; cliffs thousands of feet high rose directly from the water's edge; water falls bounded from ledge to ledge down the precipices; glaciers filled the valleys, and as they came down into the fiord, gave off icebergs. As they proceeded toward the west the mountains increased in number and height, until, in longitude 26 degrees 30 minutes west, Lieutenant Payer ascended one of them 7,000 feet in altitude, from which he saw rising beyond the western extremity of the fiord a lofty snowy ridge, culminating in a sharp pyramid, whose point he estimated to be 14,000 feet above the level of the sea. The expedition's greatest discovery appropriately takes the name of its distinguished originator; and Petermann Spitze will hereafter rank with the high mountains of the world.

How Leather is Made.—Everybody knows, we presume, that leather is made by steeping hides in an infusion of certain vegetable substances which contain a compound called tannin. The cheapest source of this tanning principle is oak bark, but it is found in greater or less quantity in many other plants, as in the grape, the hop, coffee, tea, etc., and from these it can be dissolved out with water. The skins of animals consist mainly of albumen and gelatine; indeed these substances are abundant in all animal matter. In the blood and in milk the albumen is merely suspended, as it were, in the water which constitutes by far the larger portion of these fluids. Tannin and albumen have a remarkable affinity for each other, and unite as soon as they are brought in contact. The result of their union is the insoluble, tough material which gives leather its distinctive character. When the hide is steeped in the infusion of oak bark, the albumen of the former thus combines with the tannin of the latter, and the loose, soft tissue of the skin is converted into hard, tough leather.—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

Prof. St. Clair Gray has succeeded in verifying the existence of an electric current in the nerve power, in a truly remarkable way. Among the constituent elements of the human body, he conjectured that sulphur and phosphorus might be the originators electrically of nerve force. The predominance of phosphorus in the brain and of sulphur in the liver, with the circulation of an alkaline fluid, the blood between, suggested the construction of a sulphur-phosphorus cell, having a caustic potassa solution for the acting medium. In this apparatus an electro-motive power was developed, greater than that of a Daniell's element, the proportion being as four to three when registered by Thomson's electrometer. This success attained, the problem became the proving of the existence of an electric current between the brain and the liver. For this purpose a rabbit was taken and placed under the influence of an anæsthetic. Through an incision made in the abdominal walls of the right hypochondriac region an insulated copper wire was passed into the body of the liver; an eyeball was pierced in like manner, for carrying a second insulated wire through the optic foramen, until it penetrated the brain. No sooner were the ends of these copper wires brought into contact with the exposed sciatic nerve of a frog's leg as a galvanoscope than powerful convulsions were induced throughout the muscles of the limb. The existence of an electric current thus established, in view of the results of the first experiment, points clearly to the action of the alkaline blood on the phosphorus of the brain and the sulphur of the liver, together with its character as a connecting fluid, as its source. Although this action may not be the only source of nervo-motive power, yet it is indicated to be the greatest of all, by the fact that over seventy grains of phosphoric acid are excreted daily by the kidneys, in phosphates of soda, lime, potash, ammonia, with nearly one hundred grains of sulphuric acid, in sulphates of soda and potash, which, as oxidation products, must be derived mainly from those organs in which they abound. In the opinion of Dr. Gray, these results not only throw light on the source of nerve force, but indicate the great sympathetic nerve as the possessor of the function of controlling and regulating the involuntary movements of muscles and organs; and that the serous cavities, the peritoneum, pleura, pericardium, and those of the encephalon may resemble Leyden jars in many particulars.

The Evening Post says: "Old sailors are never so much at sea as when they are on shore."

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. "A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement, and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mind drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present time.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscles; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Wilcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot, recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

You save $8 to $10 by purchasing Sewing Machines here.

Also, a large assortment of LADIES' READY-MADE SUITS, all colors and styles, manufactured on our celebrated Sewing Machines.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

(From The New Orleans Price Current.)

The general market has been rather quiet since our last issue. The interruption to navigation by ice above Cairo, and the insufficient supply of rolling stock on the Iron Mountain railroad, for which the managers should be severely censured by the St. Louis press, have restricted our receipts of Western produce, the sales of which have consequently been of limited extent, at full prices, with the exception of corn, which, with a better supply, has declined nearly 15c. ₮ bushel. Sugar has ruled at about previous rates, except for fair to prime, which have ruled ¼c. dearer. Molasses has been in good request and commanded higher prices.

The falling off in the receipts of cotton, looked for later in the month, appears to have already commenced.

The river is 14 feet below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the sixteenth instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi, bales	22,239
Lake	96
Mobile	168
Arkansas	1,088
Texas	87
Total	23,678

On Saturday the movement was commenced with considerable animation, and although checked by moderate supplies—many factors refusing to offer their stocks—yet 8,600 bales changed hands at irregular prices, the closing quotations showing an advance of ⅛c. in good ordinary and ¼c. in low middling. On Monday, under the stimulus of the Liverpool accounts and the receipt of additional and more liberal orders, buyers came forward with still more spirit, and, although factors raised their pretensions ¼@⅜c., the sales summed up 17,800 bales—much the heaviest business this year—partly at Saturday's improvement, but mostly at a further irregular advance of ⅛@¼c. and even ⅜c., good ordinary closing at 21@21⅛c., low middling at 21⅝@22c., middling at 22¼c., strict middling at 22⅛@22⅝c., and good middling at 23@23¼c. On Tuesday buyers again came forward with a fair degree of spirit, and, notwithstanding the reduction in the supply from the previous business and the high pretensions of factors, took 7,600 bales, partly at Monday's advance and partly at a further improvement of ⅛c.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 727,244 bales, against 919,651 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 560,402 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 130,350 to France, and a decrease of 436,849 to Great Britain, and of 103,175 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

Ordinary	19¾ @ 20¼
Good ordinary	21¼ @ 21½
Low middling	21¾ @ 22
Middling	22¼ @ 22⅜
Strict middling	22⅝ @ 22⅞

PORK.—There is none in first hands. The stock is light and held by dealers at $17 ₮ bbl. for large lots of mess, though 20 bbls. sold on Monday at $16.50, and another small lot at $16.75, and 25 bbls. on Tuesday at $16.75.

DRY SALT MEAT.—The stock is in the hands of dealers, and the market is quiet but firm. A retail business is doing at 6½c. for shoulders, 8¼c. for clear rib sides, and 9½c. for clear sides. On Tuesday a lot of 40,000 lbs. shoulders sold at 6c., and some in casks were held at 6¼c. ₮ lb.

LARD.—On Tuesday tierces were quoted at 9½c. for packers', and 9¾@10c. for refined; kegs, 10¾@11c. ₮ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON.—Choice Western continues scarce and in demand, and commands 11½@12c. ₮ lb. Northern is also scarce, and commands 11¾@12c. On Monday 10 boxes New York sold at 11¾c.

MONETARY.

Gold has been in fair request. It opened on Tuesday at 109⅞@110⅛, (against 110⅜ at New York,) and closed at 110@110⅛, (against 110⅜ at New York.)

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

COUNCIL, BLUFFS, Feb. 21.—The railroad bridge over the Mississippi river, at this place, has been completed. It is the largest structure in the world on the high bridge system.

MEMPHIS, Feb. 22.—The stockholders of the Memphis and Charleston railroad this morning ratified the lease of that road to Colonel Tom Scott and the Southern Security Company for ninety-nine years.

The officers of the Memphis and Little Rock and Little Rock and Fort Smith railroads, having agreed upon the terms of consolidation, those roads adjourned to meet in Little Rock to-morrow for the purpose of signing articles of consolidation.

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—A letter from Florence, Italy, January 24, says a fire there the day previous rendered two hundred families houseless and dependent upon charity for sustenance.

CHEYENNE, Feb. 23.—The first through train from San Francisco for the East on schedule time since the snow blockade reached here this afternoon. The road is reported clear. The Japanese embassy will be here in time to take the eastern train to-morrow.

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—The German Democratic General Committee of New York have adopted strong resolutions complimentary of General Schurz.

A special from Berlin says the Germans are again arming in view of a change in the French government. Prussia claims the right to control a change, upon the points as to whether the succeeding government by disinclination or inability will probably fail to execute the treaty and discharge the obligations of France to Germany. Should Prussia decide either point adversely to the approaching change in the French government, a reinvasion of French territory will follow.

HOMER, LA., Feb. 24.—The Claiborne Advocate announces that the delinquent list, embracing fully one-fifth of the real estate of Claiborne parish, has been ordered to be sold for taxes. Other parishes are in a worse condition.

The situation of the people, unless reform of some sort is inaugurated during the coming year, will be deplorable, and emigration from this section unprecedented.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—A Matamoras special says General Quairroga writes from Camargo, on the twenty-third, that General Trevino is marching on San Luis Potosi with a thousand men. General Rocha, with fifteen hundred men, was at San Phillippi, two days' march from San Luis Potosi.

Four hundred government troops were at San Miguel, marching on San Luis Potosi. The fate of the city depends upon the celerity of the respective forces, and the result of a battle which will inevitably decide the fate of Mexico.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 27.—Very Rev. Henry Benedict Coskery, vicar general and administrator of the archdiocese of Baltimore, died to-day at the arch-episcopal residence, after several weeks' illness, aged sixty-four years.

FOREIGN.

ROME, Feb. 21.—The Pope has asked the permission of England and Austria for the meeting of the Ecumenical Council in their dominions.

ROME, Feb. 22.—Several bishops urge the Pope to hold the Ecumenical Council at Trent. The Austrian government is, however, indisposed to allow the council within Austria. Should the council occur the Pope will remain in Rome and be represented by a cardinal.

The Pope has convened the cardinals for to-morrow to elect a bishop for Russia.

LONDON, Feb. 22.—The gathering of Legitimists at Antwerp is increasing daily, and becoming formidable. It is confined to no nationality, although the French have preponderance in numbers. The German and Spanish Legitimists are well represented.

The King of Hanover arrived yesterday with a large body of supporters.

The Ultramontanists from Italy, Germany and France are also flocking to Italy. It is rumored all are acting together harmoniously, and the chiefs are deliberating over plans for the restoration of all deposed sovereigns.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—A mail steamer from the Cape of Good Hope has arrived. Encouraging reports from the diamond fields continued to reach Cape Town. Diamonds were selling at auction at a decline of twenty-five per cent. on the prices reported by the previous steamer. Good order has been restored among the miners. Several persons who were prominently engaged in lynching operations had been arrested and punished.

ROME, Feb. 23.—The Pope in a consistory yesterday recognized twenty-eight bishops, including four for dioceses in America.

HAVANA, Feb. 23.—The insurgent general Manuel Agramonte, who surrendered to the Spanish authorities, has issued a document to his late companions in arms, which deprecates the continuance of the war, and asks them to surrender to the Spaniards and allow his manifesto to circulate among the Cubans in the revolutionary districts. Agramonte offers to receive any Cubans who are desirous of surrendering for that purpose; he will accompany the Spanish column of troops, but should they refuse to surrender, he threatens to organize the Cubans who surrendered with him and march against the persisting revolutionists. The manifesto concludes by saying there is no longer any reason why the revolution should continue.

LONDON, Feb. 25.—Disraeli will deliver two addresses in Manchester during the Easter holidays.

Five distinct shocks of an earthquake were felt at Leghorn on Saturday night. They caused much alarm, but no damage was done.

Dispatches from Dundee give accounts of a widespread, devastating flood in the valley of the Tay. The waters of the Firth and the rise of the Tay overflowed their banks last night, and poured into the plains on both sides, sweeping everything before them.

LONDON, Feb. 26.—The Society for the Suppression of Vice and Immorality have succeeded in suppressing the Day's Doings and modifying other papers of like tendency.

ANTWERP, Feb. 26.—Count de Chambord refuses to publish the manifesto of the Monarchists in the French Assembly.

Chambord received delegations from a number of French towns today.

The streets are again thronged by strangers and citizens, and great excitement prevails.

The gens d'armes dispersed several crowds, bayoneting some persons.

Later.—The excitement is increasing. The citizens are arming, and making threatening demonstrations against the strangers. The authorities are apprehensive, and are making extensive preparations to suppress rioting.

ANTWERP, Feb. 26, evening.—A deputation from Metz arrived and was received by Count de Chambord. Deputations from other places continue to arrive.

PARIS, Feb. 27.—The Pope has written the French bishops asking them to support Count de Chambord for French ruler.

It is reported that Chambord will leave Antwerp to-night.

HOW TO PUT THE CHILDREN TO BED. Not with a reproof for any of that day's sins of omission or commission. Take any other time but bedtime for that. If you ever heard a little creature sighing or sobbing in its sleep, you could never do this. Seal their closing eyelids with a kiss and a blessing. The time will come, all too soon, when they will lay their heads upon their pillows lacking both. Let them then at least have this sweet memory of a happy childhood, of which no future sorrow or trouble can rob them. Give them their rosy youth. Nor need this involve wild license. The judicious parent will not so mistake my meaning. If you have ever met the man, or the woman, whose eyes have suddenly filled when a little child has crept trustingly to its mother's breast, you may have seen one in whose childhood's home "Dignity" and "Severity" stood where Love and Pity should have been. Too much indulgence has ruined thousands of children; too much love not one.

SPEAKING of rewarding virtue, the Norwich Bulletin says: "A well-known justice of the peace subscribed $5 to the relief fund recently, and upon returning to his office immediately, received the amount for marrying a couple. This is virtue rewarded. Another man was requested to contribute, but declined, and within two hours heard that his mother-in-law had come to stay a month with him.

A CORRECTION.

We have already noticed the mistake of the Methodist in its estimate of the extent of circulation of our periodical literature. Referring to the correction published by the Western Methodist, the Methodist makes the amende, as follows:

We gave lately a table of "periodical circulation," showing the ratio of such circulation, in each leading denomination, to its membership. The table showed badly for the Roman Catholics and the Methodist Episcopal Church South. We copied it from the Pittsburg Advocate, which took it from Pettengill's Advertisers' Hand-Book. The Western Methodist, of Memphis, corrects the showing of this table, by the aid of the New Monthly Magazine. It is due our Southern brethren that we copy the correction, and we do so with pleasure. The Magazine, cited by the Western, says:

"Now, the circulation of the periodicals of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, by actual examination on the day this article is written, amounts to 141,800, and there are fifteen other papers published by the religious press of the Southern Methodist Church. Our knowledge of these papers—three of which, we are assured, have a circulation of more than 20,000 copies—warrants us in placing the figures for the whole fifteen at 56,000 copies. Let us amend these figures, then, and we have the following table, more nearly correct, we believe, than the one above quoted:

		One to each
Meth. Epis. (North)	875,000	1.44 mem.
Baptist	475,000	2.37 "
Presbyterian	225,000	3.33 "
Roman Catholic	100,000	10.00 "
Congregational	130,000	2.06 "
Episcopal	65,600	2.82 "
Meth. Epis. South	197,000	2.88 "

"There is no great value in such a table as this, it is true, as more than half of all these figures represent papers published exclusively for children, who are not counted in the column of members; but whatever of importance may belong to the table, we beg that the Southern Methodist Church may be treated precisely as other denominations. We certainly have nothing of which to boast, so far as the circulation of our periodicals is concerned, but we demand a fair hearing when we are charged with such inexcusable and deplorable ignorance as the Advertisers' Hand-Book charges upon us."

The above statement is not at all discreditable to the Southern Methodists. Considering the recency and greatness of the devastations of that section of the country, the exhibit is highly creditable. We are inclined to think it the most creditable on the list. It shows how effectively their periodicals may be circulated, with proper effort, now that their people are fast recovering from the war.

PAPAL EDUCATION.

A contributor of the Methodist speaks of this matter as follows:

The predominance of crime in Roman Catholic countries does not speak favorably of the elevating tendency of their schools. From the most authentic sources it appears that, while in England there are annually four murders to a million of inhabitants, in Papal France there are thirty-one; in Lombardy, forty-five; in Sicily, ninety; in the Papal States, under the immediate watch and control of the Pope, one hundred to a million; and in Naples, equally under him, two hundred—that is, just fifty times as many as there are in Protestant England. The Roman Catholic nations of Europe and South America present a similar record. Surely our secular schools, though denounced as "godless" and "heathen," are more moral than those papal religious institutions which curse those lands in which they have the controlling influence.

The priests in France made an effort, a few years since, to procure an act of the General Assembly restoring to the clergy the entire instruction and control of the national schools. Before the time of Napoleon Bonaparte every school, even the primaries, was instructed by a priest; and very little was taught in them except the creed and the elements of the papal faith. This system was entirely changed by the Emperor, and every priest was removed from the schools. The Bourbons, at their restoration, restored the priests; but the last revolution set the schools free again. The recent effort to bring them again under subjection to the church called forth some caustic utterances from the eloquent Victor Hugo. He said to the priests: "Ah! we know you! We know the clerical party. It is an old party. This it is which has found for the truth those two marvelous supporters, ignorance and error! This it is which forbids to science and genius the going beyond the Missal, and which wishes to cloister thought in dogmas. Every step which the intelligence of Europe has taken has been in spite of it! Its history is written in the history of human progress, but it is written on the back of the leaf." After showing how the great scientific discoverers of the past were persecuted by the popes, this earnest French patriot thus addressed the priests: "For a long time already you have tried to put a gag upon the human intellect. You wish to be the masters of education; and there is not a poet, not an author, not a philosopher, not a thinker that you accept. All that has been written, found, dreamed, deduced, inspired, imagined, invented by genius, the treasure of civilization, the venerable inheritance of generations, the common patrimony of knowledge, you reject." The fearless orator then referred to their opposition to the Bible, and closed with these significant facts: "And you claim the liberty of teaching. Stop, be sincere; let us understand the liberty which you claim. It is the liberty of not teaching. You wish us to give you the people to instruct. Very well. Let us see your pupils! Let us see those you have produced. What have you done for Italy? What have you done for Spain? For centuries you have kept in your hands, at your discretion, at your school, these two great nations, illustrious among the illustrious. What have you done for them? I am going to tell you. Thanks to you, Italy, whose name no man who thinks can any longer pronounce without an inexpressible filial emotion—Italy, mother of genius and of nations, which has spread over the universe all the most brilliant marvels of poetry and the arts—Italy, which has taught mankind to read, now knows not how to read. Yes; Italy is, of all the States of Europe, that where the smallest number of natives know how to read. In Spain the same dark picture presents itself."

How a Religio-Political Movement was Defeated.

In a calm and sensible article, appearing in the Detroit Tribune of the eighteenth ultimo, says the New York World, we find what we surmise to be about the truth of the recent Senatorial canvass in Iowa, resulting in the defeat of Mr. Harlan for a re-election. The Tribune says that Mr. Harlan was obnoxious by seeking to hold on to his seat too long; by seeking to use the Methodist Church to secure his re-election; by being a high-protectionist, which Mr. Allison, his successful competitor, is not; and by failing to explain financial irregularities alleged against him. It is further said: "The Federal officeholders were favorable to Mr. Harlan, and it was generally understood that, on the whole, he was General Grant's choice. That he was the decided preference of the coterie of politicians who claim to have the President under their control, was not left in doubt for a moment." The religious point above mentioned is this: Last summer Rev. Dr. Newman, chaplain of the United States Senate, sent a confidential circular to the Methodist clergy of Iowa, urging them to use their influence to re-elect Bro. Harlan, as being high in Mr. Grant's favor, a strong friend of the Santo Domingo job, and sure to do something handsome for the church if given another term. This leaked out, and, in conjunction with Mr. Harlan's unsavory reputation in money matters, and the disgust of the decent Republicans of Iowa at administration dictation, secured the brother's defeat. A fitting rebuke to a sneaking hypocrite.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

A REMARKABLE DIAGRAM has been prepared by Dr. Toner, the statistician, which gives at a glance the facts of each census in regard to the relative longevity of the two sexes; also another curious table, showing the number of children born to each thousand women between the ages of fifteen and fifty at each census. This table reveals the startling fact that what is held up as the peculiar shame of Massachusetts, is equally true of all her sister States. It is shown that only one-half as many children are now born to each one thousand women as in 1800, and that there has been a regular decrease from one decade of years to another.

LETTER FROM MONTANA.

DIAMOND CITY, MONTANA TERRITORY, January 17, 1872.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow me a place in your paper to say a few words to my fathers and brothers of the Mississippi Conference? If so, insert the following.

I have many reasons, brethren, to be very grateful to you for the kind admonitions you gave, and the sympathy you had for me while a member of your Conference. Now I am out here in this far-off field of labor, entirely separated from you, though laboring for the same cause. I feel that I have your sympathy and your prayers to God for me.

Owing to the lateness of the fall when we left Mississippi, we came in contact with very cold weather; but our little band of missionaries—thirteen in all—were not easy to be discouraged. Our trust being in God, we followed our guide, believing that all things work together for good to them that love God. True, we suffered more or less from the fierceness of the snow storms which we encountered in going from Corinne, Utah, to Helena, Montana, a distance of four hundred and fifty miles. This being the most difficult part of our journey, we had previously prepared ourselves with buffalo robes, blankets, shawls, etc., so that we were pretty well prepared for the emergency; and while many others were frost-bitten, and several persons frozen to death, by the kind providence of God we escaped unhurt. Not one of our number was frosted in the least.

Having arrived at Helena on the second of December, 1871, Dr. Curtiss entered immediately into the work to which he was assigned, viz., Helena. I reported to Rev. L. B. Statler, the presiding elder of Helena district, and he gave me the Diamond City circuit, or rather mission, as my field of labor for the remainder of this Conference year, which closes about July next, at which time we hope to be able to organize an Annual Conference at Helena, Montana Territory.

Diamond City is a mining town of about three hundred inhabitants. There is no church organization here, and but few persons members of any church; consequently there is no church-house. The Good Templars have a large hall, in which we have preaching. The congregations are large and attentive. I must say I have never seen a people more prodigal with their means than they are here. When I arrived, and the people learned that I was sent to preach for them, they kindly opened their hearts and purses to receive me and contribute to my wants, (for I had spent all my means in getting out here, save a few dollars,) and to purchase a house in which to live. This was done in a few days. The money was raised, the house paid for, the deed drawn in my name, and all presented to me, with $50 in greenbacks. Now I am comfortably situated. I made considerable sacrifice to get here, and now I am being repaid. Oh! how precious is that promise of Jesus, in the gospel by Mark, x, 29, 30. Look at it, brethren, and think how many precious, immortal souls in this Western country, for whom Christ died, are begging for the gospel; and many are dying without it. Come and help us, you who can.

The ADVOCATE is a welcome messenger, and reaches me about fifteen days after being mailed. My post office is Diamond City, Montana Territory. Pray for us.

Yours in the bonds of the gospel,

THOS. W. FLOWERS.

THERE is as little in common between the church and the world as there was between Israel and the sand of the desert. The most brilliant attractions and bewitching fascinations of the world are to the church of God what the serpents and scorpions, and the ten thousand other dangers were to Israel.

COMMENTARY ON THE GOSPELS. By Thomas O. Summers, D. D. Volume IV. St. John. Nashville, Tennessee: Published by A. H. Redford, agent, for the Methodist Episcopal Church South, 1872. 12mo, 312 pages.

This is Dr. Summers' commentary on the greatest and most difficult of the gospels, and in it we think he has achieved his greatest success. It fell to our lot to notice his Commentary on Matthew when it first appeared, and also of Mark and Luke. They were good, but we think this the best of all. The notes are a wonder of condensation, embracing everything material to the text, and at the same time containing abundant indications of the most laborious and critical research. The notes on John are more expanded than those on the other gospels, and sufficiently so for the end contemplated, although our brethren of the ministry will generally regret that the doctor's plan did not admit of still greater amplification. As excellent specimens of clear, concise and complete exegesis, let our readers turn to the notes on chapter xiv, verse 16, where Paraklos, as applied to the Holy Spirit, is explained, and also to the twenty-eighth verse of the same chapter, where "For my Father is greater than I" receives its only true exposition. These are, perhaps, not the best specimens; but are such as have caught our eye in turning here and there. There are no hold and abstruse speculations, nothing particularly novel or startling, but a thoroughly judicious and candid statement of the mind of the Spirit. Dr. Summers evidently prefers the older authorities and critics, though the new are evidently in his reach, and not altogether unheeded. In this respect his work is somewhat in contrast with Whedon's. He has carefully weighed the results of modern criticism, and where they have been set aside it has been done of set purpose. Many, perhaps, will not agree with him in his estimate of the Codex Sinaiticus, or of Schaff and Lange; but all will coincide with us in the opinion that he has given to the church a safe, convenient and valuable commentary, and emphatically "a help to the better understanding of the sacred writings." For ourselves we could wish that the little volume of questions accompanying the commentary might come into general use; but with our uniform lesson system this cannot be generally realized in our Sunday schools. The Commentary on John is appropriately dedicated to our venerable senior Bishop, Robert Paine, D. D.

THE LAND OF DESOLATION: Being a personal narrative of observation and adventure in Greenland. By Isaac I. Hayes, M. D. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers, 1872.

This volume is the record of a visit to Greenland, made in the summer of 1869, by the author, with a small party of friends, in the steam yacht of Mr. William Bradford, an artist whose pictures of arctic scenery have been widely commended. The style is lively, and the matter entertaining and instructive. Much scientific information is contained in the book, and many graphic delineations of scenery and society as they exist in the land of desolation. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

THE JUNIOR CLERK, edited by Dr. Haygood and published by Dr. Redford, Nashville, is a beautiful little volume, and the very book for boys. Our lads have devoured it, and loaned it out already. The entire edition ought to be sold in a week, and would be if its merits were generally known.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL VISITOR for March has been received. They are first-rate numbers. "Waiting for a Bite" is a very expressive and taking picture, and true to nature. Let all of our families and Sunday schools supply themselves liberally with the Visitor, and take some to give away.

MORTON'S MONTHLY HOME AND SCHOOL JOURNAL OF POPULAR EDUCATION is published by John P. Morton & Co., Louisville, Kentucky. Price, $1.50 per annum. We have received the February number, and are favorably impressed with its contents.

CHURCH'S MUSICAL VISITOR for February has reached our table, and is certainly the best and handsomest number yet issued of this valuable art journal. The frontispiece is adorned by a full-page portrait of Christian Nilsson.

"AS A LEAF."

BY KETTIE M. ARNOLD.

The leaf presents to God
Its finished story,
Receiving at his hand
Its meed of glory;
And floating gently down,
With mission ended,
Molders beneath the bough,
Its life defended.

Freely it gave its all
The tree to nourish,
That by its tiny power
The oak might flourish.
For 'tis the blossomed branch
Whose vital juices,
Fed by the to large dense,
The fruit produces.

So God delights to teach
This lesson ever,
That his success depends
On our endeavor;
That, lovingly performed,
Each lowly duty
Adds to the inner strength
And outer beauty.

Yet are we slow to learn
That death is glorious
Only to those who rise
O'er self victorious;
Only to those who find
The bliss of living
Is ever, like the leaf,
Receiving, giving.

To such life's autumn day
Yields rich completeness,
Whose mellow splendors dim
Youth's early sweetness;
And when to false and true
Rewards are meted,
With Jesus' sweet "Well done!"
They shall be greeted.

GOD AND HIS WORSHIP.

In hie offices God is creator, lawgiver, judge; in his attributes he ie eternal, omniscient, omnipotent, omnipresent; in his substance he is spirit. His spiritual substance underlies the theology of the Jewish dispensation, but under shadows. In the teaching of Christ it was brought out unvailed when he declared to the woman of Samaria: "God is a spirit." The circumstances emphasize the term spirit. "God is a spirit" is a literal truth, and the most sublime truth ever uttered by the great Teacher.

God is a spirit as opposed to matter. Matter is that which may be seen or tasted or felt by the physical senses. God is not matter: the eye cannot see him, nor the ear hear him, nor the physical sense feel him. He is spirit, not as wanting substance. Substance ie being, reality. Spirit is the highest form of being. The soul is a higher being than the body. Materiality ie limitation to being. The material connection of the soul hinders it. It will be greater without the body than in the body. That which is constituted of matter, or limited by material connection, is necessarily limited to space and in power. God is a spirit, not as wanting substance, but as being of highest substance.

Some imagine that as a spirit God is unreal—only ideal, a principle, an objective conception. God is not earth, nor wood, nor flesh, therefore nothing. But is man's soul nothing? Is that which thinks, and feels, and worships, and drives the whole material world, nothing? Is it not the man, all of the man? Is it not the being, the only indestructible being? What, then, is God, the infinite spirit?

As a spirit God ie a person, not a thing. There is no personality where there is no spirit. God is not a machine driven by law; a machine is but a thing. Hence God is not bound by an attribute or by fate, by foreknowledge or material necessity. If so he would be a thing, a material thing, or may be, if such a thought is not absurd, a spiritual thing.

As a spirit God is not an animal. An animal is led by mere instinct, without deliberation, and independent of reason, to do spontaneously whatever is necessary for its preservation. As an animal the child draws nourishment from its mother's breast; as a person he deliberates and wills. God ie not a being of instinct.

God is a person. The qualities of personality are intelligence, will and action. God is intelligent. He knows all things. His intelligence is universal and profound to the depths of the universe. He wills—is not a creature governed by irresistible law, either material or spiritual—that would make him a thing; not by instinct—that would make him an animal. He doeth according to his will in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. God is active. A mere negation is nothing, a vacuum is nothing. An intelligent being with will, but no action, is a chimera. A God who has nothing to do with his creation is no God, has ceased to be God.

Opposed to God's spirituality is the idea that God is a spiritual ether—matter so refined as to be next to nothing. Some minds conceive of spirit as ether, and of God as the most refined ether.

Opposed to God's spirituality is materialism in all its forms—the idea that the universe is God, or natural law is God, or an idol is God. What is there in the universe to constitute it God! Or what is in natural law out of which to make a God! What is law? Is it anything or nothing? Ie it not the mere decree of authority, or the way in which an intelligent being exercises himself? Take away the intelligent actor and all law ceases.

We need to be often reminded that God is a spirit, and that a spirit is real—that as an intelligent spirit, having will, he is active; that as an infinite spirit he is everywhere, omniscient, omnipotent. We need to be reminded that spirit implies personality. We need often to look upon the person God as judging nations, sending fire and flood and famine and pestilence, as blessing the earth with its increase, as hearing the prayer and saving the soul of the good, and as banishing the wicked. What though as an infinite spirit God ie incomprehensible! Who has not felt his inability to comprehend, to define God? We cannot comprehend his creatures, even ourselves. We are not called on to comprehend God, but simply to believe on him as he has declared himself; not to distort him, nor degrade him into an idol or host, or likeness of man, or any other matter.

The grand promise is: "God is a spirit." The necessary and practical conclusion flowing from this premise is: "They that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." This the Savior declared to be the conclusion flowing from the premise. His argument may be thrown into the syllogistic form. All we here need ie the first premise. We can supply the second and draw the conclusion. As an infinite spirit he is entitled to worship. We admire the beautiful, we respect the great, we should worship the infinite. But, growing out of his own nature, that worship alone is acceptable which is in spirit and in truth. To move matter material force is applied; to move a parsimonious mind bribery is used; so to worship the infinite Spirit it must be a sincere and earnest spirit worshiping spirit. If God was a mere intelligence, an orthodox creed would satisfy him; if he was a mere ceremony, imposing rites and pompous ritualism would do; if he was a physical being, prostrations of body and sounding words would fill his demand; if he was a material body and confined to one place, he would appoint, after the manner of earthly monarchs, priests to hear confessions and pardon sins. But God is a spirit, and as such can be worshiped only by spirit: the whole spirit man, intellect, sensibility and will, worships the whole spirit God. Hence wherever there is a spirit, whether in Jerusalem or on Mount Gerizim, or wherever else, there God may be worshiped.

Following the fact that God is a spirit, his worship must come from a spirit, as a living spirit his worship must come from a spirit interested, in earnest. God cannot be pleased with mere artistic singing, or rhetorical forms of prayer, or fanciful mental conceptions, or manipulations and genuflections, or an intellectual orthodoxy, or a dead formalism. Studied bowing at specified names, ringing bells, and the whole silly and circus-like performances of ritualism ie but an attempt to play with God for the amusement of simple spectators.

THE MONEY QUESTION.

MR. EDITOR: There are few questions more perplexing in theory and more difficult to manage than that of money; and there are none pertaining to the business of this life which possess more vitality and enchantment. Doubtless you have seen congregations grow dull and listless while the able divine was discussing some of the fundamental principles of moral obligation and rectitude; and then you have seen the same once somnolent assembly grow wakeful and bright as the same minister spoke to them in reference to some enterprise of the church which needed money, actual cash, in order to its success. And not only would they become wakeful, but when it began to approach the rub, many faces would reach a wonderful elongation, and many brows would knit an intense expression that bordered upon the painful. Well, if the public presentation of the money question does no other good, it affords a grand occasion for study. A church member, not liberal in views and feelings, will do more hard thinking in one minute under the money pressure than otherwise in one month. The sanctified wisdom of the land has been brought to bear upon this fundamental and pervading question from age to age, and from year to year, and still it remains the Gordian knot. It is as fresh and vigorous to-day as it was in the days of the ancients. Our General Conferences, from session to session, discuss it and devise plans and ways whereby the difficulty may be banished; and the Annual, District and Quarterly Conferences, in their respective spheres, try their skilled hands in the art of untying and tying; and, after all, the church cannot command and control the requisite funds to carry forward to completion and success her grand enterprises for the prosperity of the country and the glory of God.

Why can the church not control the money she needs? Is it because it is not in the country? The only answer that can be given is, that there is universal lack of a proper appreciation of the enterprises of the church of the living God. Men love darkness rather than light. Facts can be adduced sustaining the position. In other departments and in other pursuits the money can be commanded. To set this subject in its proper light it will be necessary to set down figures, showing the amounts expended in secular departments and official vocations of life. In the United States the entire clergy cost the people, in money, $12,000,000; lawyers, $80,000,000; the military establishment, $31,000,000; the navy, $19,000,000; the Federal judiciary, $4,000,000; criminals, $40,000,000; whisky and other intoxicating drinks, $700,000,000; coffee, $80,000,000; tobacco, $100,000,000.

Thus it is shown by facts and figures that the primary reason of the deficiency of money in the church ie an unwillingness to aid by those who have the money; and, alas! many of these are church members. Year before last the celebrated John Robinson's show passed through this section of country, and the people, with the help of the different churches, paid, for the privilege and benefit of attending the circus and menagerie, the neat little sum of about $15,000; and the same section of country paid to the different churches, for all purposes, the sum of about $8,000. Now the service that Mr. Robinson rendered was of one week's continuance, while the services of the churches were of twelve months' duration. The old saying is yet true: "Where there ie a will there is a way."

Now, Mr. Editor, just glance over the above figures, and see the contrast? Just think of the appreciation of the gospel in this Christian country! The ministry received $12,000,000, and the lawyers $80,000,000. Mark you, I do not object to the practice of law—look upon lawyers, in the main, as a body of first-class gentlemen; but, noble and worthy as lawyers are, they are no more worthy and noble than the ministers. According to talents, service and numbers, the ministry is the poorest paid class of official men upon the face of this land. And yet Jesus says: "But whoso shall offend one of those little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." A further consideration of the above figures shows that the people pay $3 for criminals where they pay $1 for the ministry. And do you wonder, when the people pay $58 to sing alcohol where they pay $1 for the gospel! Why, sir, the money expended for coffee and tobacco, for a less time than two days, would endow the proposed university of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and put it, as a whole, into full and successful operation. The money wasted, and, worse than wasted, for intoxicating drinks, would educate in high schools and colleges, annually, thirty-five millions of the youth of the country—lacking but four millions of embracing the entire population of the United States.

These facts indicate the vast amount of work that is yet to be enterprised by the church of the living God, in this land of Bibles and churches, before we can justly wear the title of a Christian country.

OZARK, ALA., Feb. 8, 1872.

A STRANGE COINCIDENCE.

MR. EDITOR: In the year 1854 the writer traveled the Black Hawk circuit, Mississippi Conference. We had a good work all around the circuit. Rev. J. I. E. Byrd, of precious memory, resided near Black Hawk. He was the sweetest-spirited man of his age I ever met (for old men are too apt to be soured unless very watchful.) There was in Black Hawk a good female college, of which Prof. Y. was president. He was a polished, dignified gentleman; truly moral, respectful to church services, and a regular and attentive hearer of the word. We had protracted services at Black Hawk. The professor and his pupils were regular attendants. The word often reached his heart perceptibly, but he strove against it and threw it off. He was brought to his knees twice during this meeting of ten nights and days. Bro. Byrd and myself, on the Friday following, drove up to the village of E. to commence a meeting. The first man we met at the church was Prof. Y. "Well," we exclaimed, "the Lord is surely at work with thee." But though respectful and attentive to the word, and though many were converted, yet he made no apparent advancement in this direction. The next place we met him was at a camp meeting at Enon, near Salem. There was much water there. (Salem was a Baptist church on a high, dry ridge.) The professor was one of the first on the ground. The power of God was present from beginning to end to kill and to make alive. Saturday night came, and I had almost forgotten Prof. Y. Only when I prayed he would rise before me. But while laboring with mourners at the altar come one called my attention to a person kneeling at the foot of the pulpit. I found to my joy that it was he, praying in agony of spirit. I labored with him from time to time, and after great weariness I raised him up and set him down to rest. But no sooner had I left him than he was on his knees, often with his head on the ground. The services closed at a late hour. All retired; but he said: "I'll never leave here till God forgives my sins or kills me for my rebellion." He made no noise; but O what agony of soul! I ceased to talk, but continued kneeling with him. About two o'clock A. M. he arose to his knees, head erect, and told the Lord that he had been so great a sinner that he despaired of mercy, but that he was better than all his fears in forgiving his sins. "And now," said he, "in this silent hour let thy Spirit find my wife." Now he prayed for the pastor. He thanked God that he had sent his servant there to be plain and pointed. (O how I resolved never to choose my own work, for it was not my choice.) Next day and night he was laboring with the mourners. I called on him to pray, and he did so with the spirit and power.

But the most singular of all about it is this: Bro. Byrd was tented on the ground at which he staid during the day, returning home every night for the treatment of an affliction that could not be done on the camp ground. This morning, as soon as his wife awoke, he said: "I had a dream, and still it does not seem to be a dream. It was this: We returned to the camp ground. The first person we met was Prof. Y., who said: 'Good morning, Father Byrd. The Lord has converted my soul.'" All of which was literally fulfilled.

He did not join the church for a month. He gave as his reason, when he joined, that he was raised a Presbyterian, but was totally ignorant of the doctrines of that church, and more so of other churches, and that he had been reading the confessions of faith, and that he believed that the Methodist Church was nearer the apostolic than any other, and that God had, for Christ's sake, forgiven his wonderful sins. Now, if they would allow him a place among them, he wished it above all things. He was received. I always thought he ought to preach; but he had objections. I know not where he is now. I trust that he knows his duty and is doing it.

Yours in Christ,

J. NICHOLSON.

Greensboro District, Alabama Conference

MR. EDITOR: I don't propose to write a newspaper article; but you may call it a paragraph, an item, or something else, and if you choose to do so you can give it to your readers, or make any other disposition of it you may deem proper.

At our late Conference the Bishop thought proper to have me returned to the Greensboro district, and I am now on my first round of quarterly visitations, having filled about half the appointments. I am happy to be able to report the preachers all at their work, and in good health and cheerful spirits; and I think I may say we are all anticipating a happy and prosperous year. May the great Head of the Church make it so for his name's sake.

Last Saturday and Sunday I was at Greensboro, and, religiously and spiritually, I confess my visit was not altogether satisfactory. The weather was cold, the congregation was small, and a number of our people were off at a Catholic funeral. How liberal, how unsectarian are many of our people! I like catholicity, but at the same time I admire self-respect, and have no objections to a smattering of denominational pride. But while things looked a little dark religiously, they wore a bright and hopeful aspect educationally. The University, I am happy to report, is on rising ground. The numbers in attendance, I believe, are as large, perhaps larger, than at any previous period of its history. The young men, as a class, have no superiors anywhere, especially those preparing for the ministry; and there is a large class of them—not less than ten or a dozen. The new professors too, I am happy to know, are measuring up to the standard of full-grown men in their several departments. We thought we were ruined when we lost their predecessors; and noble men they were. But don't you see, Mr. Editor, that God and his church can do without any of us? But adieu, or I shall have an article in length, if in nothing else.

A. H. MITCHELL.

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., Feb. 14, 1872.

Our Prayer Meetings are All Suspended!

I say prayer meetings, Mr. Editor, using the plural form, because the weekly prayer meetings of all the Protestant churches in our town have been suspended ever since November last. I at first thought they were discontinued temporarily because our ministers were absent in attendance on their annual conventions; but though they returned before Christmas, our prayer meetings are still suspended, and one of our pastors told us the other Sabbath that they would not be revived until the weather got more suitable. I am distressed at this state of things. When I call to mind the great importance which the Supreme Head of the Church has attached to the social and united prayers of his people, I fear we are losing immensely by the suspension of our prayer meetings. And what makes it look so very discouraging is that nothing else about town is suspended on account of the wintry weather. The lawyers, doctors, merchants, clerks, mechanics and artisans are all at their usual places of business, and actively engaged, notwithstanding the unsettled state of the weather. The day schools and Sabbath schools, I notice, are all kept up, and the congregations, except in very foul weather, attend preaching every Sabbath morning and evening, and spend more than an hour at a time in church—long enough, in all conscience, for any ordinary prayer meeting; but the weather is too unsettled to revive our ill-fated prayer meetings! The steamboats, railroad cars and mails come and go with great precision; the skating rink is in regular operation several afternoons and evenings every week; the social parties of the young folks are kept up, and even the drinking saloons, billiard tables and gambling dens are constantly occupied by their usual patrons, though the weather is, at times, very unsettled. But it won't do to call on even the most zealous members of the church to turn out to a prayer meeting in such foul weather. It is true the weather is very pleasant sometimes on the day we have usually held our weekly prayer meeting, and in case it should be a little damp or cold we have the means of warming our prayer meeting room; but then it is not prudent to be running risks. The day might turn out to be unfavorable, and somebody might take cold, and a cold taken by going to prayer meeting is deprecated as the worst sort of a cold. I see that the great evil of sin, in all its usual forms, has not been suspended on account of the weather, and Satan has refused an armistice for a single hour. Day and night, notwithstanding bad weather, he has been "going about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." It is true I have not seen his satanic majesty, but I know he is about by the evidences of his presence which I am compelled to witness on all hands.

Mr. Editor, I am in trouble! What are we to do about our suspended prayer meetings, when our whole official boards and even our ministers consent to their suspension? I once heard of a preacher up in Mississippi who preached the funeral of a defunct prayer meeting, and wrote and published its obituary. But no arrangements have been made for the obsequies of our prayer meetings, as their present disappearance is only looked upon as a matter of suspended animation, and it is hoped with the return of spring they may awake from their long hibernation. I hope they may! It is a reproach to us, as Christians, that our prayer meetings are suspended, while everything else around us is in motion, regardless of our winter weather.

PRAYER MEETING MAN.

FEBRUARY 13, 1872.

ANECDOTE OF ANDREW FULLER.—In a private party one evening, at which the late Andrew Fuller was present, the conversation turned on the subject of preaching, when one of the party said, preaching without notes was the hardest work in the world. Mr. Fuller said it was easy enough if they went to work in the right way. "Now," he said, "if I was to tell my hired girl to go to the store and get some sugar and blue, some coffee and starch, some cakes, some soap and some almonds, some candles and spice, some nuts and some tea, some potash and butter, she would say: 'O! dear, sir, I never can think of all that.' Well, look here, Betty, you know to-morrow your mistress is going to have a large wash, and she will want some blue and soap, candles and potash; the next day she will have company, and will want some tea and coffee, sugar, spice, nuts, cakes, butter and almonds."

"'Thank you, sir; now I can think of them all.' So it is in preaching with good arrangement."

FEED THE PEOPLE.—From the deck of an Austrian gunboat we threw into the Lago Garda a succession of little pieces of bread, and presently small fishes came in shoals, till they seemed to be, as the old proverb puts it, "more fish than water." They came to feed, and needed no music. Let the preacher give his people food, and they will flock around him even if the sounding brass of rhetoric and the tinkling cymbals of oratory are silent.

DR. CUMMING thinks it is a sad thing to be blessed by the Pope. This is the way it works, as he sees it: "The blessing showered on the Emperor of Austria had ended in Sadowa; the Queen of Spain, who had received the Golden Rose, was soon a fugitive; Maximilian, who had been blessed, was shot; Victor Emanuel, who had been cursed in the severest manner, was now King of Italy, his son King of Spain, and his daughter Queen of Portugal."

GONE BEFORE.

There's a beautiful face in the silent air,
Which follows me ever and near,
With smiling eyes and amber hair,
With voiceless lips, yet with breath of prayer,
That I feel but cannot hear.

The dimpled hand and ringlet of gold
Lie low in a marble sleep;
I stretch my hand for a clasp of old,
But the empty air is strangely cold,
And my vigil alone I keep.

There's a stiffless brow with a radiant crown,
And a cross laid down in the dust;
There's a smile where never a shade comes now,
And tears no more from those dear eyes flow,
So sweet in their innocent trust.

Ah, well! and summer is come again,
Singing her same old songs;
But, oh! it sounds like a sob of pain,
As it floats in the sunshine and rain,
O'er the hearts of the world's great throng.

There's a beautiful region above the skies,
And I long to reach its shore,
For I know I shall find my treasure there,
The laughing eyes and amber hair
Of the loved one gone before.

'Twas but a breath—
And yet a woman's fair name is wilted,
And friends once warm grew cold and stilled,
And life was worse than death.

One venomed word,
That struck its coward, poisoned blow
In craven whispers hushed and low,
And yet the wide world heard.

'Twas but one whispered—one—
That muttered low for very shame,
That thing the slanderer dare not name,
Yet its work was done.

A hint so slight,
And yet so mighty in its power,
A human soul, in one short hour,
Lies crushed beneath its weight.

THE SINAITIC MANUSCRIPT.

An able address, on the genuineness and authenticity of the gospels, was delivered before the Rockville (Connecticut) Bible Society, September 10, by Rev. George I. Wood, of Ellington, from which we copy a few paragraphs concerning the discovery of what is known as the Sinaitic manuscript. A copy of the Russian edition of this manuscript, referred to here, is in the library of the American Bible Society.

The grandest, however, of all the discoveries of modern times in the world of letters was that made by Tischendorf, of what is called the Sinaitic manuscript—the oldest known copy of the whole Bible, especially of the New Testament, in one volume. Tischendorf is a very eminent and ripe German scholar who has spent the last thirty years of his life in the study of the New Testament writings, to construct a Greek Testament, the text of which should be in the nearest possible accord with the original manuscripts of the evangelists and apostles—for there can be no question that in the numberless copyings and translations of these writings made before the art of printing, there must have been occasional unintentional deviations from the very words and letters of the sacred writers. His account of the discovery of this great treasure is written with such scholarly enthusiasm that if I had the time, and your patience and interest would hold out, I would give you the whole account in his own words. But all I can do is to condense what I have to say in the smallest possible compass. We shall see that the very part of Europe which has made the fiercest and most persistent attacks upon Christianity (that is Germany) has at length furnished a writer whose discoveries have done more than those of any other writer to silence the objections of the infidel world against the New Testament.

In trying to carry out the great aim of his life, of which I have spoken, he has spent many of the last thirty years in searching for old manuscripts through all the great libraries of Paris, London, Switzerland, Egypt, the Coptic convents in the Libyan deserts, and in the region near Mount Sinai, as well as in Jerusalem and Patmos, and in many other places.

In the year 1859 he was making a second visit to the Convent of St. Catherine, near the foot of Mount Sinai, and in one room, amid baskets of old moth-eaten and moldy manuscripts, which were just about to be carried out and burned, he discovered a few disconnected leaves of what seemed to him the oldest manuscript he had ever seen. With his curiosity and hope greatly excited by this discovery, he continued his researches till he discovered a much greater treasure—what is now known and celebrated throughout the world as the Sinaitic manuscript, the oldest known manuscript copy of the whole Bible in Greek; and in company with it, what had been sought for many hundred years in vain, the Epistle of Barnabas—of which I have already spoken—in the original Greek. His joy at this discovery cannot be imagined. You should read it for yourselves, in a little volume published by the American Tract Society in 1866.

In the year 1862, having succeeded in getting possession of this treasure, which he says he valued more than he should the Kohinoor itself in the possession of Victoria, he repaired to St. Petersburg and presented his discovery to the Emperor of Russia, who had greatly aided and encouraged him in his expensive explorations. At the Emperor's expense the whole of this manuscript Bible was printed in a superb edition of four folio volumes, and published, and is now spread abroad and deposited in all the great libraries of Christendom. This is the most ancient, the most complete, and the most valuable manuscript copy of the entire New Testament that has as yet been known; being older than the Alexandrian manuscript, and even than the Vatican, which were both written in the forepart of the fourth century. This is the only ancient manuscript which contains the Greek text of the whole New Testament entire, without the loss of a single leaf. The manuscript is written in the style of the most ancient writings, without punctuation, without any division of sentences or words (of course, without chapters and verses.) It is a matter of great interest to all friends of the Bible to know that this most ancient of all the known copies of the New Testament embraces just what we have in our New Testament—the four Gospels, the Acts, and all the Epistles, and the Book of Revelation.

A fact of great interest and value in its bearing on the question of the genuineness and authenticity of the New Testament writings is that of which I have spoken—that in company with these canonical writings of the New Testament was found a copy of the Epistle of Barnabas in the original Greek. The first few pages of this epistle had been known for a very long period only in the Latin tongue; and that expression (of which I have spoken) "it is written," never having been seen in the original Greek text of Barnabas, infidels had claimed that the expression had probably been put in by the Latin translators. But the discovery of the original Greek copy of this epistle, in the year 1862, has settled the very important point that Barnabas himself, in the very first century, quotes the New Testament writings, and quotes them with the same reverence which was and had long been shown to the sacred writings of the Old Testament.

So that when these men who have been clamoring for years that the gospels as we have them were not written by eye-witnesses in the apostolic age, but many years afterward, by men claiming to be Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, are here confronted (through Tischendorf's discovery) with the unimpeachable testimony of Barnabas to the fact that those gospels were in existence in the first century.—Bible Society Record.

POLITE CHILDREN.

"Thank you, Charlie," said Mrs Brown, as her little son handed her a paper he was requested to bring.

"Thank you, Bridget," said the little fellow a few hours after, as he received a glass of water from his nurse.

"Well, Mrs. Brown, you have the best-mannered children I ever saw," said a neighbor. "I should be thankful if mine were as polite to me as yours are to the servants. You never spend half as much time on your children's clothes as I do, and yet every one notices them, they are so well-behaved."

"We always try to treat our children politely," was the quiet reply.

This was the whole secret. When I hear parents grumbling about the ill-manners of their children, I always wish to ask: "Have you always treated them with politeness?" I once knew a man, considered quite a gentleman in society, who would speak to his children in a manner that a well-instructed dog would resent. He would order them with a growl to bring him his slippers or perform some other little service; and yet he complained of the rudeness and disobedience of his children.

Many parents who are polite and polished in their manners toward the world at large are perfect boors inside the home circle. What wonder if the children are the same? If they should accidentally brush against another in the streets an apology would be sure to follow; but whoever thinks of offering an excuse to the little people, whose rights are constantly being violated by their careless elders? If a stranger offer the slightest service he is gratefully thanked; but whoever remembers to thus reward the little tireless feet that are traveling all day long up stairs, and down, on countless errands for somebody? It would be policy for parents to treat their children politely for the sake of obtaining more cheerful obedience, if for no other reason. The costless use of an "If you please," and "I thank you," now and then, will go far to lighten an otherwise burdensome task. Say to your son, "John, shut the door," and with a scowl he will move slowly toward it, and shut it with a bang. The next time say, "John, will you shut the door, please?" and he will hasten with a pleasant smile to do your bidding.

Many children, as they grow older, are obliged to learn the rules of politeness as they would a lesson. The consequence is, when they appear in society they are awkward and blundering. On the other hand, children who have been accustomed to politeness at home are at their ease in the most polished circles, and are saved that confusion and bitter self-condemnation which are sure to follow any breach of the rules of etiquette.

Some children, learning from their parents, seem to consider politeness at home affectation! Brothers who would jump up with alacrity to give an easy chair to some dashing miss of their acquaintance will appropriate it to themselves when at home, without the slightest apparent consciousness of the presence of a sister or perhaps a mother.

"My brother is as polite to me as any one else, when I go out with him," said a girl promptly to a companion. What a reflection on his manners at home! A sister will perhaps accidentally knock over some of the tools with which her brother is busy. An apology involuntarily arises to her lips, but she stifles it on considering that it is only Jack; and all the satisfaction he is offered for disordered plans is a blunt "Oh!" Angry reproaches are sure to follow. "You are real ugly, Jack, to talk so about such a thing; you know I didn't mean to," is the equally angry rejoinder. Why did she not say so? Two words would have saved all the trouble. Want of politeness is the cause of more quarreling among brothers and sisters than anything else. In their plays children are constantly meeting with little accidents, for which they should be taught to apologize. I have seen the cheeks of a child flush with anger, his eyes flash, and a little hand raised to strike the unfortunate breaker of a toy, when, as if by magic, the blow was arrested by these words: "Excuse me; I did not mean to."

Polish is not everything. It is, however, something. It is better to have a black kettle that is sound than a bright one with a hole in the bottom; but there is no reason why the sound one should not be bright too.

It is of the first importance that children should possess those sterling qualities which fit them for battle with temptation and sin; but do not send them out in the world in great clod-hopper boots. Shine them up, and both happiness and influence will be increased.—Advance.

Sadness of Washington's Countenance.

Having occasion to work from Houdon's bust, I for the first time began to feel an air of sadness which impressed me. The longer I studied its traits the more it grew upon me; until at last my interest was so much excited by what had become the dominant expression that I reviewed his life, and was deeply impressed by the innumerable causes for melancholy that lay hidden behind the splendid achievements of the man. Professional jealousies, treachery, the want of comprehension and sympathy, the violation and destruction of many sentiments natural to one who was humane, loyal, law-respecting and social—such were among the causes of sadness to this childless hero; and as I remembered the toils and struggles of his checkered career, I could not but see abundant cause for unhappiness as the normal condition of his countenance. True, he had survived and conquered, but traces of his suffering are plainly visible in the portraits taken immediately after the war. It is only later by twelve years, when Stuart's portrait was executed, that we see the softening effects of a dignified advanced age, and stern sadness gives way to a venerable benevolence that makes one grateful that his life was prolonged to the attainment of repose and peace of soul.

I know of no argument against war so instructive and convincing as a careful study of the face of Washington at the close of the Revolution. Though it speaks of will and the power of endurance, though we know that his laurels were purer and brighter than those won by any other commander, we cannot but realize that his soul had been tortured, and his spirit outraged so that human glory had become a weariness and a vanity.

Irresistibly led to such unlooked-for and unwelcome conclusions by observation of Houdon's bust, I could not but feel that there was an element in Washington which had not been sufficiently accented in the estimates of his character. I refer to his faith, not speaking in the sectarian sense, but in view of what constituted the religious and moral atmosphere by which his spiritual blood was purified and his soul strengthened to do its work.—R. S. Greenough, in Old and New.

HOW THEY LIVE IN SWEDEN.

A writer visiting the residences of the people in Sweden speaks warmly of the comfortable manner in which they live:

"The houses are warm, being built of strong, thick walls, generally of brick, with high stone foundations. They are small, commonly of one story, and meant for but one family. Their houses are not so very simple; but they are simply furnished, there often being, especially in the northern part, where the houses are frequently of logs, and covered with turf or straw, no more than one room in the house, and that with only the coarsest home-made furniture. The sleeping room (there is rarely more than one) is provided with ranges of beds in tiers, one above the other, the women generally sleeping below, and the men above. You rarely see any carpet, but the floors are sprinkled with a clean, white sand, which dries up moisture, gives off no dust, and may easily be removed. Sometimes the floors, as in Germany, are painted or of wood mosaic; though this luxury, except in large mansions, is very rarely indulged in. Occasionally the best rooms will have a little carpet; but never more than two strips, which cross each other in the center. The land is generally good, and four-fifths of all the people subsist by agriculture. Great quantities of wheat, rye and barley are raised, the stubble fields being now seen stretching out in every direction. Much of this grain is exported to Germany and Great Britain. Large droves of cattle, sheep, geese and ducks may also be seen in the fields, though the stock is far inferior to that of Denmark, where it was a real pleasure to see the magnificent droves in their pastures. The cattle and poultry are commonly kept in the same field, the ducks and geese being in and around the ponds, while the sheep and cows are scattered through the meadows, a shepherd boy commonly sleeping in some fence-corner. In the evening these flocks are all driven to the barnyard, where they present a lively scene for a few hours after sunset. I spent a little time at the country residence of a large land owner, in this neighborhood where the noise of the ducks and geese in his barnyard was like a perpetual horse-fiddle serenade."

Those Evening Bells.—In the Rev. Dr. Adams' book of "Thanksgiving Memories" occurs the narrative of the following touching incident:

"In the Cathedral of Limerick there hangs a chime of bells, which was cast in Italy by an enthusiast in his trade, who fixed his home near the monastery where they were first hung, that he might daily enjoy their sweet and solemn music. In some political revolution the bells were taken away to some distant land, and their maker himself became a refugee and an exile. His wanderings brought him, after many years, to Ireland. On a calm and beautiful evening, as the vessel which bore him floated on the placid bosom of the Shannon, suddenly the evening chimes pealed from the cathedral towers. His practiced ear caught the sweet sound, and he knew that his lost treasures were found. His early home, his old friends, his beloved native land, all the best associations of his life, were in those sounds. He laid himself back in the boat, crossed his arms upon his breast, and listened to the music. The boat reached the wharf, but still he lay there, silent and motionless. They spoke to him, but he did not answer. They went to him, but his spirit had fled. The tide of memories that came vibrating through his heart at that well-known chime had snapped its strings!" It was this incident that suggested to Moore his song of "The Evening Bells."

Three Dog Stories.—Old Zack, my brother John's dog, was a large watchdog, partly mastiff, partly bulldog. One day a large stray dog walking slowly up the avenue, Zack came out of his kennel, showed the stranger in, brought him a bone, and gave him of his food for two days, sleeping outside near by; and when the stranger was well recruited, he walked down to the gate with him and showed him out.

Basker, Stella's dog, came up to mother's, and looking up and around the room, began to growl in a threatening manner, fixing his eyes on the portrait of my father. He soon jumped up on the sofa which stood under the picture, and looking attentively at it, seemed to be satisfied that it was not a man; he then lay quietly down and never again greeted the picture in that manner.

Beauty, a black-and-tan terrier, being reproved for barking in the cellar, and told sharply there were no rats there, kept up his watch, and in the course of an hour caught a large rat, which he insisted resolutely upon taking up stairs, and laid down triumphantly before his mistress.—Hearth and Home.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The evangelical schools at Naples, Italy, under the control of a joint committee of various denominations, had, by the last report, about four hundred scholars enrolled. The number is increasing.

—Among the Indians.—The Southern Presbyterian Church has four missionaries among the Choctaws, one among the Creeks, and two ordained missionaries among the Cherokees. Rev. H. H. Spaulding, a venerable missionary to the Nez Perces, at Lapevai, in Idaho Territory, a companion and cotemporary of Dr. Whitman up to the time of his massacre, November 29, 1847, reports that he has received one hundred and ten into the church within a few months, and that about thirty others have been examined preparatory to their union with the church.

"In Boston alone there are nearly 60 priests, and over 100,000 Catholics. There are in the diocese, which, instead of comprising all New England, is now only half of Massachusetts, 160 priests, and nearly 300,000 Roman Catholics. In the whole of Massachusetts there are now over 200 priests, and 400,000 Catholics. In the original diocese of Boston (all New England) there are over 300 priests, and probably over 600,000 Roman Catholics." This boast looks big, but one denomination of Protestants equals it all. The Methodists have more preachers by a hundred in Massachusetts than the Roman Catholics, and, counting her population as they do, more population. The Baptists have as many, and the Congregationalists twice as many. Christianity has nothing to fear yet in New England from its foes, whether of infidelity or superstition.—Zion's Herald.

The National Reform Church of France.—The Church of the Huguenots was once a glorious church, and held its national synods. But from 1660 it has held none. The year before the war with Germany a decree was passed authorizing a synod, and the present government confirms the decree. There are twenty-one provincial synods to be represented. There is to be one delegate to every six pastors, one half to be laymen. It is believed that the majority in the synod will be decidedly evangelical, and therefore the Rationalists are opposed to the assembling of the synod. Evangelical Christendom says that it will be the turning-point of national French Protestantism. It is causing great excitement throughout France, and other evangelical bodies sympathize with the true defenders of the gospel, and pray for their abundant prosperity and success. Certainly no country is more in need of a revival of the true gospel in its genuine power than France.

The Bible in Madagascar.—Read the following description of what the Bible has done in Madagascar. Read, rejoice and give God the glory. "Mr. Ellis, who translated the Bible for the people of Madagascar, at the last meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society, said that thirty-eight years ago Christianity had been introduced into Madagascar, and then persecution had driven away the missionaries. The native Christians were persecuted, but there had not been one apostate. After twenty-eight years, when the missionaries came back, they found Christianity flourishing; and now there were 350,000 worshipers, 20,000 in fellowship, and 2,000 native teachers, and 600 congregations. This had been effected in a great measure by the written word alone, and not by teaching. There was one copy which had been buried in the time of persecution, and had effected such great good that it had been put under a glass case."

The work of the gospel with the Baptists in Italy goes forward with encouraging success. There are fifty-six baptized converts in the city of Rome, and the meetings are well attended. The residue of the members of the once Pedobaptist church on the shore of the Adriatic have been baptized. An officer of the government, a convert, leads the meetings when the pastor is absent. An ex-superintendent of a monastery is also an active member of the church. An important movement has sprung up in a place about sixty miles from Rome, a day laborer having commenced a small meeting in his own room for reading the Bible. The matter grew; a larger room became necessary, hundreds of Bibles have been distributed, and a request has come from several persons of respectability and distinction that an evangelist may be sent them. In another place the municipal authorities have twice placed the public hall at the service of a young Baptist evangelist. A popular preacher, a Mr. Latas, has risen up in Greece, and crowds of hearers attend his ministrations in the city of Athens. He is modest and gifted, and ascribes his success only to God. An American Episcopal clergyman reports that he held an audience of two thousand five hundred at Athens spell-bound for nearly two hours, while in a most effective way he set forth the power of the gospel and Jesus as a Savior.

The Old Catholic War in Bavaria the High Papal party are endeavoring to compel the government to recede from the defense of the Old Catholics, and to carry out the papal excommunication. Dollinger is still at work, and in union with Reinkens, of Breslau, is preparing six lectures on the Reform, to be delivered in January. The progress of the cause, and the extension of fellowship by the Presbyterians to the Old Catholics, are pleasantly set forth in the following statements: "The grounding of Alt Catholic congregations goes on, progressing surely. The body at Ried, in Upper Austria, have now been able to procure a minister for themselves. In the Tyrol the Archbishop of Salzburg has not proceeded further than the Dean of Kufstein and his clergy; but solitary congregations are stealing out to join the movement, such as at Simbach, in the valley of the Inn, where a body of four hundred have established themselves. In Hungary the primate has excommunicated Dr. Hatala, professor of biblical exegesis in the University of Pesth, who, as editor of a newspaper, the Free Church, has been advocating the cause of the Alt Catholics. From Kaiserslautern, in the Palatinate, comes a pleasing piece of news. The new Alt Catholic body, shut out from their own church, have asked the Protestants to lend them theirs, and the presbytery of the town has consented. The matter is referred to the consistory at Spires for their ratification.

The committee of the Protestant Society of Germany, whose president is the eminent German priest, Dr. Bluntschli, has issued a manifesto, declaring that in their opposition to the Society of Jesuits they do not make warfare upon individuals, but against "a hostile power, which should be driven from the German soil." A Jesuit is the slave of his superior. "Civil rights, the laws of the State, temporal power, and the interests of his country have no authority over him if they are at variance with the authority of his general. * * * When a Jesuit yields to the authority of the State, he does this not because he respects the power of law, but only because and so long as the general of the order directs him to yield. * * * The history of all the States in which the Jesuits have labored has shown beyond a doubt that the order has everywhere provoked religious dissensions, hindered the free development of science and intellectual life, promoted superstition, and striven to raise the hierarchy above sovereigns and governments. Pope Clement the Fourteenth himself has given public testimony to this historical truth by saying that 'it will be impossible to maintain peace in the church so long as the Society of Jesus exists.'" All this is undoubtedly true; yet it does not furnish a sufficient reason for the political ostracism of the Jesuits. It is perfectly safe for the German government to punish their overt offenses, and let them plot what mischief they will in secret.

Thiers and the Protestants.—The pastors of the Reformed churches went to Versailles to thank M. Thiers for having restored its Synodal and Presbyterian constitution. We give a part of his reply: "I thank you for the testimony you have given me, and which deeply touches me. Overwhelmed with work, and often with sorrows, I am upheld only by the hope of having with me the sympathies of all honest men; and in listening to you, all so honored and honorable, I could not doubt it for a moment. Be assured that, foreign to all parties, a Frenchman solely employed in raising France out of her misfortunes, I have no thought, constancy or courage, but for her. As to what concerns the interests of your form of worship, I am penetrated with the deepest reverence for the human conscience, and I shall apply myself constantly to maintain religious liberty in all its integrity." He then proceeded to say that while he thus shows his regard for religious liberty, he earnestly hopes that they will use it for the peace of France, and not let religious divisions add to the political divisions that agitate her. He expresses his confidence that they will do it. In conclusion he says of himself: "The simple and humble magistrate of the French republic, I can attribute to myself no influence over your religious convictions; but if my intervention can in any degree help you in accomplishing your mission of peace, you may depend upon my loyal and disinterested aid. What is good in all things and under all forms—such is my wish, my aim, my one anxiety. Help me, and I will help you."

"The servant is not above his Lord." Then we should be ashamed to complain of our sacrifices when we remember what Jesus, our Master, endured for us.

LIKE PASSIONS.

The example of eminent and holy persons is weakened by the disposition to regard them as somehow removed from the ordinary sphere of human experience. They are, like the fixed stars, so amazingly remote that we have scarcely a spectroscopic hint of the fact that their elementary constitution is like our own. Distance heightens the impression of their grandeur and stability, while it conceals the perturbations and convulsions which are going on within them. Take up almost any of the great characters of the inspired history, and this tendency to place them in orbits very different and very far from those in which we move is apparent. Such patience as Job had, such faith as Abraham illustrated, such love as John attained, such zeal as Paul exhibited, are regarded as exceptional, and as connected with conditions which can be realized by few.

The opinion was common a century ago, and has always obtained to some extent among religious people, that the assurance of pardon is given to only a favored few. So thought Susannah Wesley's father, so thought Dr. Samuel Johnson. Paul may have enjoyed the witness of the Spirit, and the participators in the scenes of Pentecost had in them the Spirit of adoption, crying Abba Father. But there are abundance of people who never think of bringing these comforts and blessings home to themselves as a part of their spiritual heritage. To them they are things as far off as the fires of Sirius, and as little known as the chemistry of Aldebaran. To them that brilliant galaxy of heroes and heroines, displayed in the eleventh of Hebrews as stretching across the entire firmament of inspired history, is an unresolved nebula of luminous but impracticable communications. These illustrious names are hardly conceived of as standing for real human creatures, and as representing men and women constituted like themselves.

To be profited and encouraged we must bring these examples of piety and faith near to us, and look upon them as moving in our own plane of experience. The impartiality of the divine record is helpful in this respect, not only vindicating the truth of the narrative, but revealing the likeness of those celebrated men to ourselves. The little lines which tell us that the sun and stars are made of the same materials as the earth, are not more instructive than are those occasional strokes which afford glimpses of human passion and infirmity in those we have been wont to place above the condition of ordinary mortals. It is something that James thought worth while to tell us in connection with the story of Elias' faith, that he "was a man subject to like passions as we are." The history shows this as it describes him in his flight from Jezreel, in his vexation and despair by the way, and in the cave of Horeb. But we might forget all this in the affair with the priests of Baal, and in the singularly glorious scene of the translation. When he shut the heavens, when the clouds came at his bidding, and when he was about to step into the chariot, he was all the time "a man subject to like passions as we are," naturally weak and infirm, but exalted and glorified by the grace of God.

It shows not what God can make out of angels, or what he might have made out of sinless and perfect men, but what he can make out of our fallen humanity. As modified by circumstances, it exhibits a standard of common attainment in which the weakest and humblest has a personal concern. Longfellow has rendered the lesson in its less important application:

Lives of great men all remind us
We may make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time;
Footprints that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main,
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again.

It must have been an incident of peculiar comfort to John when, amidst the unfoldings of the apocalyptic vision, his act of worship was arrested by the admonition: "See thou do it not; I am thy fellow-servant; and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus." Here was one who had been like himself, already invested with shining robes and gloriously resplendent in the world of light. It is of such humanity as ours, with its frailty and infirmities, that saints are fashioned here, and upon which a crown of glory is placed in heaven. What the grace of God has done for others it is able to do for us. We may follow in the footprints of a greater than Elias, and sit down with him on his throne at last.

WHERE TO GO.

It is rumored that the Pope intends to reassemble the Ecumenical Council somewhere else than at Rome. Nearly every week the wires bring the old story about the holy father's purpose to leave the Vatican and Italy. Where will he go? We doubt whether he has any serious idea of leaving. He and Cardinal Antonelli both know very well that they are better treated and every way more comfortable where they are than they can hope to be elsewhere. No other government will grant the Pope such a munificent allowance. It would be a great saving to Victor Emanuel's exchequer, and a relief to Rome and Italy, if the Pope would go. But this is all talk about leaving Rome, and for the purpose of exciting the sympathy of the faithful. It brings in the pence and keeps up the notion of persecution. If, however, the Pope is really looking out for quarters, the suggestion of our correspondent, published more than a year ago, is still worth considering. North Carolina is yet open to his holiness, with its almost boundless stretches of aromatic and resinous forests. God's first temples are there—more roomy than St. Peter's—and the illuminating elements are abundant. The Pope's organ, Unita Cattolica, talks like the long-threatened move was about to take place. It says "that it holds itself in readiness to change the place of its publication, and to follow the holy father wherever he may go. Should he proceed to France, Switzerland or Germany, it will accompany him; and wherever he takes up his abode, there the Unita Cattolica will be printed and sent to subscribers without extra charge. 'And perhaps,' adds the journal, 'the very patient Pius may be compelled to leave Rome sooner than is expected.'"

RESPONSE NO. 5.

FEBRUARY 26, 1872.

MR. EDITOR: Having paid another visit to Centenary, I have many hopeful things to say of it to the friends of Methodism in the Southwest. But, lest I be further tedious, this is the sum: the workmen on the center building are crying steadily for more mortar and money. The iron lintels are in place, the architrave is going up, and the whole begins to have an expression of strength and finish in admirable contrast with the appearance of things but a month since. Further responses are as follows:

Judge John McVea, of Clinton	$100 00
R. W. Rayne, New Orleans	100 00
R. L. Walmsley, New Orleans	200 00
Isaac Randolph	100 00

BISHOP MARVIN IN TEXAS.

Bishop Marvin cultivates the episcopal districts assigned him without stint of labor or time. It is now about two months since holding his last Conference, and since October he has been in Texas, engaged in constant work. Writing to the St. Louis Christian Advocate from Corpus Christi, he says:

Corpus Christi I found to be a larger place than I had supposed. Its business extends over a large part of southwestern Texas, and extends far out into Mexico. There is an immense trade carried on in wool and hides; the wool business is very large. Sheep-growing is a large business in northern Mexico. Then there is a large wholesale business here in dry goods and groceries. Besides the wool and hides sold here, a great deal of specie is brought from the mining region in Mexico for the purchase of goods. There are a good many wholesale houses here, doing a large business.

The situation of the town is very pretty. In front is the Corpus Christi Bay, a broad sheet of water, separated from the gulf by one of the series of long, narrow islands that fringe this entire coast. North of the town is the Nueces Bay, which is an arm of the Corpus Christi Bay, projecting inland a few miles, and receiving the water of the Nueces river. The greater part of the town is situated on low ground, along the bay; but there are some residences and two churches on the elevated ground, which sets in two hundred yards, perhaps, back from the beach. The earth under the hill is a bank of sea shells, so that the streets are natural shell roads, very smooth, making but little dust, and never becoming muddy.

The entire country, for which this is the commercial center, is devoted to grazing. There is no farming at all—at least none to speak of. Horses, cattle and sheep, living on the range the year round, constitute the wealth of the country. I do not know what the possibilities of the country are in the way of agriculture. No doubt the droughts that so often prevail here render it to a great extent an uncertain business. Even the range is sometimes so short from this cause that stock suffers. Indeed, in some years great numbers of cattle perish.

It was here that General Taylor landed his troops for the invasion of Mexico. His old entrenchments still remind one of the heroes of the Mexican war, whose names were dear to the whole nation. They never turned their arms against their own people. War is a "horrid trade" at best; doubly so when a sectional fanaticism wields the brand.

Our church is the only one which has maintained a continuous existence here. Others have had an intermittent history. At present there are four Protestant organizations in the place, none of them very strong. The Episcopal Church is the leader of fashionable pleasures in the community. They have all sorts of fandangoes for church purposes. This makes the maintenance of godly discipline in other churches somewhat difficult, though I think that the evil is showing a tendency to cure itself. It is carried to an excess that shocks the moral sense of all who are at all earnest in their religious convictions.

None of the congregations are large. Ours is scarcely able to support a preacher with a family. But there are noble spirits here, who illustrate the Christian virtues in their lives, and do all in their power to sustain the cause of God. I trust a better day is dawning.

Up to within a few years past the education of the young here was wholly in the hands of the Catholics. Our brethren at last built an excellent school house, and opened a school of high grade, with fine prospects. But the public school system recently inaugurated in Texas has broken up this, as it has also many other private and church schools. Compelled to pay a heavy school tax, the people feel unable to pay for the tuition of their children besides. As the only thing that could be done, our brethren have rented their house to the public school. At present, so far as this place is concerned, it works very well. The school is in charge of Mrs. Richardson, the daughter of our Bro. Perham, of precious memory, who is in every way qualified for the post, and administers the government of the school admirably. She is assisted by three other ladies. The school is much larger than it could be made under denominational auspices. There is one drawback, however—the school history they are compelled to use is not very palatable to Southern people. In plain terms, the public schools of Texas are administered, as far as possible, in the interests of Radicalism.

THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL.

We give below an extended extract from a communication of Bishop Doggett, addressed to Dr. Green, in reply to an invitation to be present at the meeting held at Memphis in January. The misgivings of the Bishop about the University are shared by many who would be glad to have a theological school. The church, however, cannot be committed to either, as we think, except by General Conference action. Bishop Doggett says:

Whatever may have been the policy or the successes of Methodism on this subject in the past, (on which I have no animadversions to make,) the progress of improvement, the course of events, and the rapid development of skeptical theories, at present, are astonishing. They require, on our part, something more than was necessary, or even sufficient, in our early history. Human intelligence and social cultivation are at a vastly advanced stage from what they were then; while the intellectual status of a number of our junior preachers is not higher than was that of our fathers at the same period of life. They are, therefore, in many instances, worse adjusted to the necessities of the times than our fathers were when young. The majority of our young preachers come from the poorer orders of society, as a matter of course. They always come from that source, as a general fact. Originating thus, and about to come into contact with other grades, by their new position, it is the manifest duty of the church to enable them to grapple with new responsibilities. Besides, the high denominational attitude of Southern Methodism brings it face to face not only with the general cultivation of the age, but with the rival and arrogant pretensions of other denominations, in a manner never before confronted, except in the Calvinistic controversy of former times. This we now encounter less than other errors. Where circumstances allow, and without compromitting the immediate wants of the work, our self-preservation, and our appropriate influence, under God, oblige us to maintain our cause with at least equal ability.

These principles are recognized by the other sections of Methodism in Europe and America. They, in this respect, have been wise in observing the crisis which involved an adaptation in their ministerial agencies, without surrendering their Methodistic convictions. In this, all evangelical Christendom concurs. Can we safely ignore it, in the present posture of ecclesiastical affairs around us? I think it hazardous, unless we take the ground that special improvement is desirable, and special effort is indispensable, in every vocation, except that of the Christian ministry.

The objection that any institution specially devoted to the education of ministers will impair their piety, and endanger their zeal, I think preposterous. Certainly education, properly imparted, is not injurious to piety, and that invoked for young preachers provides against this very danger. I need not, therefore, advert any further to the objection.

The increasing propriety of a special effort on the part of the church, in this direction, is manifesting itself more and more in the great centers of population and of competition—I mean the towns and cities. What class of preachers is not only asked for, but needed, other things being equal? The most talented, if they be spiritual. Bishop McTyeire has borne a true and a faithful testimony to this unquestionable phase of our Methodism. I repeat it as my own. It bespeaks an exigency which we must meet, or we must gradually lose our ground, even where we once rejoiced in its uncontested possession. To what straits are we now, in some instances, reduced, and what will be the result, if we be not more provident of the future, with the ample resources which God has put in our hands?

The movement of the Tennessee and affiliated Conferences has, in my judgment, a solid foundation in truth, in history and in policy. And to speak plainly, I think it more auspicious to commence by spontaneous action than by any legal enactment of the General Conference. Let it evince itself as an outgrowth, rather than as superinduced by legislation. Let it thus commit to its issues only those who are prepared to foster it, and commend itself by its practical merits. I have no doubt that there is ability enough in its friends to inaugurate it on a scale sufficient to test its utility. Internal hostility will thus be eliminated, and the most favorable advantages secured.

I have not, as you perceive, spoken of a University as incorporating a theological department in it. And I confess that I am somewhat at fault, practically, as to that aspect of the subject. The conception is a grand one, and creditable to its originators. Could an institution so vast, complicated and costly be established, and rendered available in time to answer the purposes of its friends, and meet the wants of the church, nothing could be more desirable. But its dimensions, expensiveness and conflicting claims with other literary institutions will, it seems to me, embarrass its prosperity, and delay its operations too long. Whereas, an institution suited to the occasion, with such literary appendages as may be strictly necessary, is entirely practicable by the patronizing Conferences; may be gradually enlarged, fairly tested, and more or less immediately useful. But do what you may, in accordance with the views herein expressed, and I shall rejoice to give it the support of my approbation, such as it is.

DR. SUMMERS' LOSSES.

In another column will be found Dr. Redford's statement of the burning of the Publishing House. We give below an extract from Dr. Summers' account of his literary losses. The doctor has our sympathies. His loss is a calamity to the whole church. The doctor says:

Our loss cannot be computed, and we are in no mood to dwell upon it. Nevertheless, our friends want to know something about it. We lost, then, all our books, (except a handful at home,) which we valued at thousands of dollars. We have been collecting them all our life. Some were family heirlooms, brought across the sea—others were the companions of our early ministry. These were "saved through the fire," which burned us out at Charleston, between twenty and thirty years ago. Then we added to our stock until, ten years ago from this date, we were driven from our home into exile, and those who took possession of our house and office helped themselves to "all which they chose." Since the war we have been rehabilitating our library by such additions as we have been able to make. We had in it volumes very precious to us—some of them three centuries old—from the flimsy tract to the portly folio. We had read, and marked, and annotated many of them, and they were well-nigh as dear to us as "the ruddy drops that warm our heart." They were the tools of our trade, and with them we have tried to do some hard and honest work for the church. Some of our friends comfort us with the flattering thought that we have them all in our head. That is a great mistake. Our memory is not of that sort. We had mnemonic aids, which assisted us in referring to such subjects as we wanted to discuss—but they too are gone. We have long been habituated to the practice of precise quotation—that none may charge us with garbling an author, or otherwise misrepresenting him. What we print is printed with the assurance of correctness; hence we are not wont to defend it against those by whom it may be impugned. We have had our authorities for facts, dates, opinions, and the like—while our arguments speak for themselves. But our friends and counselors are forever gone! We had a rare hymnological collection, containing many volumes of sacred poetry published by the Wesleys—every one is consumed. So are all our old Methodist books, which gave us an insight into the origines of Methodism. We had some portfolios of autograph letters, and other papers of the Wesley family, and their contemporaries and successors, which we highly prized—many of them presented by Bishop Soule and his family, and Dr. Sargent—all are gone. We had kept a journal of our somewhat checkered, however unprofitable life, noting remarkable names and events, during the period of some forty years—and numbering several manuscript volumes—all are gone. We had a large mass of manuscripts, consisting of sermons, lectures, notes on various parts of the Bible, a work nearly finished on Relative Duties—another on the Stipulations of the Baptismal Vow—one on the Church and on Prelatical Successiou—one on Retribution (against Universalism) unfinished—one on Hymnology, in which we had sketches of nearly all the authors of the hymns in our collections, with criticisms, including the identification of phrases, figures, etc., with the like in other works, ancient and modern, the liturgical use of the hymns, etc.—and other writings, which we thought probably we might at some time prepare for the press—but fire moves faster than fingers and types—all are gone, except a few fragments at home.

THE PUBLISHING HOUSE FIRE.

On Thursday morning, February 15, at one o'clock, I was called from my bed by the announcement that the Publishing House was on fire.

With inexpressible sadness I hastily dressed, and hurried to the scene of the disaster. The fire, which had first been discovered in the bindery soon after twelve o'clock, had spread before my arrival all through the two upper stories of the transverse building, which forms the rear of the Publishing House, and also on the same floors through that part of the establishment that runs parallel with Bridge street, all of which were in flames. One of these stories was occupied as the bindery, and was under the management of Mr. John Locken, to whom the bindery belonged. The other story was used as a composition room and stereotype foundry—with the exception of a room which had been cut off in the northeast corner, which was occupied by Dr. Summers as his office, and in which was his large and valuable library.

I discovered at once that but little if anything could be saved in these departments, and urged that every effort that could be made should be directed toward the saving of the press-room, which was still below, and which was saved only by the most untiring exertions of the fire department.

All, however, was soon over, and the rear of our house, together with the compositors' room and stereotype foundry, lay in ruins.

We have estimated our loss at about $25,000, only $5,000 of which was protected by insurance.

The question has been asked: Why we were not better insured? In reply to this inquiry I beg leave to say that the house and stock are insured for $70,000—the larger portion of which is on that part of the house where, if a fire occurs, our loss would be the most disastrous. In the department where the fire took place there seemed but little danger, as that part of the house was heated by steam, and hence our insurance was lighter at that point.

After remaining sixteen hours among the ruins, I returned home, "cast down, but not destroyed."

We cannot tell how the fire originated. This, perhaps, will never be known.

There will be no suspension of our business, even if there should be a slight delay in filling orders. We appeal to our brethren everywhere to redouble their efforts in our behalf, and before we prepare our annual exhibit we hope to recover fully from this strange and unaccountable misfortune.

All persons indebted to the Southern Methodist Publishing House will please make payment immediately. We need the money.

A. H. REDFORD, Agent.

Meeting of the Book Committee.

The Book Committee met, February 16, at the Publishing House, pursuant to the call of the book agent.

Present: Dr. Green, Messrs. Morgan, Anderson, Weaver; also Bishop McTyeire, Drs. Redford, Summers, J. B. McFerrin, and J. F. Hughes, as visitors. The agent informed the committee that he had called them together to take some steps relative to repairing the ravages of the late disastrous fire. After a free conference, it was determined to make an effort not only to rebuild the burnt portion, but the entire house, making a fine front, looking to the expenditure of $50,000.

It was resolved that the committee will meet again, at three o'clock, and to which should be invited the brethren and citizens who will take a lively interest in this matter.

The meeting then adjourned to meet in the afternoon.

The committee met at three o'clock, Dr. Green in the chair; some thirty or forty leading citizens present.

Dr. Green made a short speech, setting forth the advantages and wants of the Publishing House. He was followed by Dr. Redford, Bishop McTyeire, Dr. J. B. McFerrin and Judge Whitworth.

Dr. Redford proposed that we now take up a subscription. Dr. Green said he would pledge $2,000 for his family.

Dr. Green, $2,000; D. Weaver, $1,000; A. H. Redford, $1,000; W. H. Evans, $1,000; Carrick, Hollins & Co., $1,000; Newton McClure, $500; J. B. McFerrin, $500; Anderson, Green & Co., $500; W. H. Morgan, $500; M. Kean, $500; Jas. Whitworth, $500; R. W. Jennings, $500; J. W. Manier, $500; J. F. Wheeless, $100; L. F. Benson, $100; John D. James, $100; Moorman & Hightower, $100; E. Gilliam, $100; Dr. A. G. Haygood, $100; T. O. Summers, $100; Dr. E. A. Herman, $100; J. D. Hamilton, $200; R. A. Young, $100; Cook, Settle & Co., ——; John Morrow & Son, ——; Manlove, Richards & Meadors, ——; Ewin, Pendleton & Co., ——.

The four blanks will be filled when partners are consulted.

It was moved and carried that a committee of ten be appointed by the Book Committee to solicit subscriptions for the benefit of the Publishing House. The following were appointed: D. Weaver, Dr. McFerrin, Dr. Redford, Dr. Young, A. B. Beech, James Whitworth, Irby Morgan, John P. White, Joseph D. Hamilton, T. D. Fite.

In addition to the above, making $11,000, $8,517 were subscribed by various parties, making in all $19,517.

RE-ELECTED.—We observe with pleasure that the Board of Directors of the Southwestern Book and Publishing Company have re-elected Logan D. Dameron president and business manager. On account of circumstances heretofore alluded to in our columns, Bro. Dameron retired from this position last summer. After a full investigation and acquittal by the church and the courts, he returns to the post of labor and responsibility where he has achieved so much for the church. Bro. Dameron has never lost the confidence of his brethren, and we are glad that after clearing up the cruel and groundless aspersions upon his character, he has consented to resume his duties as president and business manager. We congratulate the company in securing such an efficient officer, and heartily welcome Bro. Dameron's return to a service in which he has earned the gratitude and esteem of the entire church.

THE Rev. William P. Harrison, D.D., of Georgia, has been associated with the editorial management of the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist. We congratulate the Baltimore on so valuable an accession to its editorial staff.

THE last St. Louis Advocate announces the safe arrival of Bishop Marvin at home.

PERHAPS the silliest thing a young man can say is: "I have resolved never to marry." Even though the resolve were ever so proper, it is one with which others have no probable or obvious concern, and prochiming it is a virtual intimation that you are so attractive to the other sex that you are obliged to ward them off from a hopeless quest—a starward aspiration—whereby their peace is likely to suffer shipwreck.—Horace Greeley.

DO WITH trials as men do with new hats—put them on and wear them until they become easy.

Obituaries.

SISTER ELIZABETH WHITLOW was born in Caswell county, North Carolina, March 10, 1797, and died at Warrior Stand, Macon county, Alabama, January 18, 1872. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church in Clark county, Georgia, about 1830, and from that time till her death lived a consistent Christian.

A little over twelve months ago I formed her acquaintance—found her in deep poverty as it respects this world, but rich in faith and love to Jesus. I never heard her murmur or repine at her lot, but seemed to be submissive and grateful for the kindness shown her by the members of the church.

Her bodily sufferings were severe, yet she bore them with patience, and died in peace and triumph. May her only surviving child realize the comforts of Christianity in her bereavement, and meet her mother in the land "where the wicked cease to trouble, and the weary are at rest."

HER PASTOR.

Resolved, That a copy of the above be sent for publication to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and also to the bereaved family.

D. W. THOMPSON, Secretary.

MRS. JULIA ANN NORRELL was born in Wilkerson county, Mississippi, in 1809; and died near Rocky Springs, Claiborne county, Mississippi, January 25, 1872.

The earlier part of Sister Norrell's life was spent in Wilkerson county, from whence she moved to the home of her husband, in Rankin county, Mississippi. Here she resided for thirty years, during which time she lost her husband and was left a mother of several children. During all of the changes and trials for the past thirty years she has been a worthy and faithful follower of Christ as a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, leading a life, as is testified by those who knew her, perfectly consistent with her Christian profession, and which was rewarded even in this life by having grace given to destroy the "sting of death," and to enable her to rejoice in the hope of a home (then near at hand, and devoid of the many sorrows of this life) that the Lord would give to her who had served him so faithfully here below. There are many left to weep and mourn her loss as they pass off to life's near end. May they, by her good example and happy end, be led in the way that she has gone, to the "Land of pure delight,

Where saints immortal reign."

H. R. SINGLETON.

DIED, at his residence in Claiborne county, Mississippi, November 23, 1871, EDWARD U. POWELL, in the fifty-seventh year of his age. He was born and grew up to manhood in Worcester county, Maryland. His parents were Methodists of the olden style, and trained up their children to fear God and keep his commandments. As the result of this training Edward assumed the vows of church membership in his youth, and was converted at a protracted meeting held at Snow Hill, Maryland. His conversion was clear and satisfactory, from which time he generally lived in the sensible enjoyment of God's favor and love. When grown to manhood he moved to Drummondtown, Virginia, where, in 1835, he was married to Miss Sallie Drummon, who died a few years afterward, leaving him one child. After the death of his wife he emigrated to Mississippi, where he was again married—to Miss Susannah Burroughs, of Vicksburg, who still, with a numerous family of children, survives him. Bro. Powell was a consistent and reliable Christian. He availed himself of all the public and private means of grace, and was liberal in supporting the institutions of the church of his early love. At various times and places he filled the offices of class-leader and steward with acceptability and usefulness. The truly Christian hospitality of his house was often enjoyed by the itinerant pastors of his church, and many of their hearts will feel sad when this record of his death informs them that they shall see him no more on earth. His last sickness was long, and at times his sufferings were great, yet he bore all with Christian patience and uncomplaining resignation to the will of his Heavenly Father. When his family saw that the time of his departure from earth was evidently near, they could not always restrain those outward manifestations of sorrow which told of the desolation that reigned within. On such occasions he would affectionately entreat them to suppress their grief, assuring them that soon all would be well with him. Bro. Powell provided well both for the temporal and spiritual wants of his household, and as the result of his well-directed industry and consistent piety he has left the church and country the rich inheritance of an industrious, educated, refined and pious family. May they all follow him as he followed Christ!

BRO. THOMAS SCOTT was born in Marion district, South Carolina, October 10, 1808. He was born again in 1839, at a camp meeting below Hurleysville, on Little Pedee, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church the same year, and was licensed to exhort in said church about four or five years after. In 1852 he moved from South Carolina to Mississippi, and settled in Wayne county, and became a member of the church at Salem, near Frost's Bridge, in said county, and lived in the above-named county until 1871. He then moved to Clark county, Mississippi, but he did not move his membership from Wayne county until he died. He died in Clark county, August 12, 1871, full of faith and the Holy Ghost. The last word he was heard to say was: "Salvation, salvation." Thus lived and died Bro. Thomas Scott—a faithful and true member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He labored faithfully and cheerfully in the cause of Christ for forty-one years as a member, class-leader and exhorter, and fell at his post with his armor on, bright with recent light. He was taken sick at a protracted meeting in Choctaw county, Alabama, and was carried home and lived but a few days. I first became acquainted with Bro. Scott in the spring of 1857, in Wayne county, Mississippi, and was intimately acquainted with him to the day of his death; and, so far as I was capable of judging, I believed him to be a consistent, humble and useful Christian man. He was a man of sound mind—a mind well stored with scriptural knowledge. His exhortations and prayers were scriptural, and at times powerful. He loved the Methodist Church—both preachers and people. He loved her doctrines and discipline, and her ordinances and mode of worship. He delighted in going to church. He was as meek as any man I ever saw in my life. He was always at his post unless providentially hindered. He loved the Sunday school, and served in it as a teacher for many years. He loved his neighbors, and would do all he could at all times, night or day, to oblige them; hence all his neighbors loved him, and he loved them. He loved his family, and, being a poor man, he had to labor hard with his own hands to raise them. He learned them all to work with their own hands for a living. He was a kind husband, a good father, a beloved brother and good neighbor, and a strong pillar in the church of God. But we all have lost him, and we believe our loss is his eternal gain.

JAMES SHANKS.

MR. EDMUND HESTER.

The subject of this memoir was born in Bladen county, North Carolina, December 15, 1782, and departed this life December 24, 1871, at his son's residence in Citronelle, Mobile county, Alabama, aged eighty-nine years and nine days. In 1801, with a recommendation from the officials of his county, he left his native State to seek a home in the West. In 1808, in Effingham county, Georgia, he was married to Miss Edith Lanier, by whose prayers, walk and godly conversation, aided by the Holy Spirit, he was brought to seek the one thing needful. He soon found the pearl of great price, and joined the Methodist Church, in which he remained an acceptable member up to the day of his death. In 1816 the young Methodist family emigrated to the State of Mississippi. They finally settled in Harrison county, on the Bay of Biloxi, in 1833. They, with one other Methodist family, constituted the entire strength of Methodism in that then wilderness region. It was not long, however, before the itinerant minister found his way through those lonely pine woods to the house of the deceased. Soon a house of worship was erected, and a little church formed of those two Christian families. It was taken into the circuit. The little church prospered, and in 1841 they succeeded in holding a camp meeting at the little Sweet Water church, as it was called. For a half century, evening and morning, the voice of song and devout prayer was heard at his family altar. His religion was indeed an every-day religion. He took great care to train his children in the way they should go. In 1850 he was called upon to witness the departure of his beloved companion, who fell asleep on the ninth of February, leaving her husband and six children to mourn their loss; but their loss was her eternal gain.

In his last illness, which lasted only eight days, he was fully conscious of his condition, exhibiting the greatest amount of Christian patience, relating his mind up to the last moment. A few minutes before he breathed his last he said he had nothing to trouble his mind, and that he was satisfied. Though his children reside in different States, it is hoped they are all emulating the Christian character of their sainted parents.

As one by one they cross the river,
As one by one they pass away,
May to each a crown be given
In that bright eternal day. J. W. H.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—Mr. George John Wagner, corner of Dauphine and Ursulines streets, has a stock of boots, shoes and brogans at prices which it would be well for purchasers to examine. We recommend our readers to make themselves acquainted with his stock and prices. His advertisement is in another part of this paper.

NEVER GIVE UP.—If you have a severe cough, apply the remedies at once, and among these Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm occupies a high place in the esteem of physicians and those who have used it. It can be obtained of Mr. B. Laplace, Nos. 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street, or at any respectable drug store.

IN CALLING ATTENTION to the card of Mr. J. W. Price, published in another column, we would state that this gentleman is the inventor and proprietor of Price's celebrated stomach bitters, is a son of the late Dr. John Price, of Nashville, who was himself the discoverer of Price's Texas Tonic. Mr. J. W. Price is also the nephew of our late fellow-citizen, Thomas K. Price.

DANZIGER & SON.—This old established house has received a fresh supply of linens; white goods, dress goods, black grenadines, silks, mourning goods, etc., all of which they are offering at very low figures. Those in want of anything in the above line should take advantage of this opportunity. The Messrs. Danziger & Son have built up a large business through honest and fair dealing, and we recommend them to our patrons.

WOMAN'S FRIEND.—This is the appropriate name of a very meritorious washing machine advertised in this issue of our paper. Some months since the proprietor, an old resident of our city, made use of our columns to present the merits of this machine to our numerous readers. At that time we abstained from making any allusion to it, as is our usual custom in reference to all articles of the merits of which we are ignorant. During the interval that has elapsed, however, many of these machines have been sold and thoroughly tested, some of them by our most respected citizens and brethren, who speak in the highest terms of their merits in the saving of labor, time and clothing. We therefore do not hesitate to recommend this washer to all of our lady readers as an invaluable adjunct of every household where economy of time, labor and material are matters of serious consideration in its most regular and necessary occupation.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

The Great Vegetable Restorative.—"History," said Lord Bacon, "is philosophy teaching by example," and the records of the cures effected by PRICE'S CELEBRATED AROMATIC STOMACH BITTERS is nothing more or less than history. There is, however, this difference: all incidents and events are perpetuated by being incorporated in tomes; the ancients preserved their archives in appropriate depositories, but the cases actually relieved by Price's Bitters will live

"Within the book and volume of the brain;
Unmixed with baser matter."

They are memories that cannot die, for the patient who finds his strength recuperated, his vigor restored, his functions operating with accustomed regularity, and his whole physical nature renewed with fresh vitality, as if he had quaffed the elixir that is said to rejuvenate, cannot forget the agency that rid him of his ills, or the instrumentality by which his ailments were alleviated. Such indeed is Price's Aromatic Stomach Bitters; no quack concoction, drugged with palatable poisons, but pure vegetable matter, culled by the cunning hand of science, in the fresh prolific fields that heaven saws for the use and behoof of mankind. A splendid tonic, and a cheering stimulant, it falls with the gentle grace of a benefaction on suffering humanity.

LIKE THE FLOWERS.

May I like the ivy grow,
Growing up in modesty;
May I truly happy be
In showing forth humility.

May I like the lily grow,
Pure and spotless, white as snow;
May I ever thankful be
For the mercies granted me.

May I, like the dove, show
Content and patience where I go,
Always striving to possess
Some new mark of holiness:

Like the Rose of Sharon grow,
Do God's holy will below,
Gain his smile; then welcome peace
Shall till my soul, and never cease.

RIDDLE.

The celebrated Auntie Stewart left in her will a bequest of £50 to be given to the person who should solve this riddle:

The noblest object in the work of art,
The brightest gem that nature can impart:
The point essential in a lawyer's case,
The well-known signal in the time of peace:
The farmer's prompter when he drives the plow,
The soldier's duty and the lover's vow;
The planet seen between the earth and sun,
The prize that merit never yet has won;
The miser's treasure and the badge of Jews;
The wife's ambition and the parson's dues.
Now, if your noble spirit can divine
A corresponding word of every line,
By the first letters quickly will be shown
An ancient city of no small renown.

A BOY'S BARGAIN.

One snowy night, when Lombard had closed his shop, and was sitting in his back parlor over the smallest scrap of fire, eating a dry crust, there was a knocking at the outer door.

Old Lombard kept no servant, and had neither friend nor child beneath his roof; no one came to see him except on business, for he was not a man given to hospitality. When the knock was heard at the door, therefore, he knew very well it must be either an idle trick of some foolish boy to annoy him, or a customer; and, being economical of his own trouble as well as of everything else, he waited for the stranger to knock again.

"If it is only a mischievous boy," he said, "he'll not venture to knock twice; if it is a customer, he is sure to do so."

The knock was repeated, and old Lombard arose, and passing through his shop unbarred and unbolted the outer door, and looked out straight before him in the snowy street. He saw nothing, and was about to shut the door again, with an angry word, when a child's voice arrested his attention.

"Please you, good Master Lombard, it is me."

"Me!" said old Lombard, suddenly darting upon a small boy, who stood shivering on the snowy doorstep; "and who is me, that he should dare to disturb a quiet trader? Who says I never give to those who want? Tell them they speak false; you wanted a thrashing and I gave you that. Come here!" He seized the boy by the ear, but the lad struggled and released himself, saying:

"I did not come to play a trick on you, Master Lombard, but to ask you to make some medicine for my mother."

"Medicine for my mother?" Lombard repeated in a mocking voice. "And is my mother ill? High living is too much for her; let her try meager soup, or no soup at all!"

"Please you, Master Lombard, my mother is dying partially from want of food—you know she is very poor—partly from want of medicine; but this paper tells us what is sure to do for her all that medicine can do. It is in Latin, but you know all about it."

"Come in," said Lombard, and the boy followed him. He closed the door, went behind the counter, put on his spectacles, and, stooping down over a bit of lighted candle, read the paper very carefully which the boy had given him.

The boy watched the old man's face anxiously as he read, and when he ceased, asked whether it was a good remedy for such and such complaints, detailing his mother's ailments.

"Yes," said old Lombard, "the remedy is excellent; but it is dear; it would cost a golden piece."

"A golden piece!" cried the poor child in alarm. "Oh, what shall I do? I have but seven sous!"

"I don't know what you are to do, except to take yourself out of my shop as quickly as possible."

"Oh, Master Lombard, you know that ever since my father's death, sickness and distress have been in our home, and now my mother is dying!"

"That is no affair of mine," old Lombard answered.

"I implore you," cried the boy, "send me not away without the medicine! Please do this charity and God will reward you."

"I tell you," said old Lombard, "I will do no such thing. Money will buy medicine in this shop. Nothing for nothing; those are my terms."

"Give me the medicine," said the distracted boy, as the thought of his poor, suffering mother pressed itself on him and almost broke his heart. "Oh, good Master Lombard, I will be your servant, your slave. I will eat little, will work much. I will do anything, suffer anything, if you will help me now!"

Old Lombard seemed to hesitate. "You would be a valuable servant!" he said, in his mocking and malicious way; "you would eat of the best till you fell asleep, and sleep till you were hungry again. You would need a laced coat, like the noblemen at Versailles, and money in both pockets for your idle hands to play with! Out with you; I need no such help as you can give."

It was a hard trial to the boy to bear the cold cruelty of the old man, but he thought of his mother, and he looked to God.

"Master Lombard, if you will give me a trial I will come here on your own terms; I will work night and day, I will cheerfully eat black bread; I will never wrong you in any way; only give me, I beg of you, the medicine to restore my dying mother."

The boy spoke so earnestly that even old Lombard felt he spoke the truth. He made up the prescription, said he would come round and look at the patient, and that he would take the boy into his service. With warm gratitude the boy thanked him, and hastened to the bedside of his mother, while old Lombard returned to his scrap of fire and thought over his bargain. "I must have a boy to help me," so he said; "I can hire this boy for a tenth of what I must give to another; I can feed him sparely, work him hard—mopli—I might have done worse."

By the bedside of his mother the boy watched all through the night, and as the gray dawn appeared saw—and his heart leaped at the sight—his mother open her eyes, and heard her speak to him. She was better; the medicine had done its work. How grieved, and yet how grateful was she when she heard of her boy's bargain. She was sorry he would have so hard a master, pleased that he had accepted the service for her sake; and when she was well again, and he was to begin his duties in old Lombard's shop, she threw her arms about his neck and assured him that God would prosper a son who so honored and loved his mother.

And was it so? Yes; the work was very hard, the food was bad and scanty; a kind man would not lodge a dog as that boy was lodged, but he prospered. He was a studious, clever boy, and in that chemist's shop he learned enough to make him wish for wider information. Years passed, and he became a man, and found that a "good name was rather to be chosen than great riches." While everybody despised the rich miser, they esteemed the young doctor, who, in course of time, became one of the most celebrated men in Europe. He was appointed Inspector General of Health; was loaded with honors, and received a patent of nobility; for the poor boy was none other than Parmentier, the chemist!—School-day Visitor.

WHAT DOES JOHNNY READ?

"Oh, everything," says his father, proudly. "Johnny is a perfect bookworm, and we just have to drive him away from his book."

Sorry to hear it, Master Johnny; a live boy has no business to be a bookworm. It is no more a sign of a smart boy to be a great reader than it is of a strong man to be a great eater. One may read too much as well as eat too much, and the brain as well as the stomach be loaded with undigested food that is only an injury to it. It is not what you eat, but what you digest, that makes you strong. It is not the food in your stomach, but the food taken up by the wonderful machinery of your body and made over into blood and bone and nerve and sinew, that keeps up the daily growth of your body and builds you up into a man. And just so the food which you give your mind must be taken up and worked over, and become part of the mind itself, or it is good for nothing. If it has no nutrition in it, nothing to make new thoughts and new ideas, if it cannot give something to the mind, or waken something in it, then it is chaff, rubbish, poison, anything but food. Half a dozen lines of the right sort, read in the right way, are worth volumes of trash, or even of good sense carelessly read and then forgotten.

Don't throw away your books, Johnny, but learn to go through them as the miner goes through his panful of sand and quartz, watching for the gleam of gold, and carefully picking out the precious bits.

And we should like to say to Johnny's father and mother: do not rest satisfied while your boy "reads everything." It is a direful day for you if you have neglected to direct and cultivate his taste until he has come to be a mere devourer of the stories of wild, improbable adventure and exciting fiction, which is poured out like a flood for the destruction of our boys; but even yet you can do something to counteract the evil if you are willing to work for it—by taking your child with you into the fields of art, of history and of science, which may be made as charming to the unfolding mind as the regions of romance. Little Corporal.

A BEAUTIFUL INCIDENT.

In my family there resides an old man who has lived eighty-six years. He is a member of a Christian church, but for several years past he has been so feeble, both in body and mind, that he has not gone away from home even to attend church. His mind, once strong and vigorous, has become broken, and he is at present more like a little child, five or six years old, than like a vigorous man. But he will sit down, and take the Bible, and read whole chapters aloud. At such times he seems to understand not only what he is doing, but seems to enjoy it greatly.

One evening, after he had retired for the night, he called in his daughter, seeming to imagine that she was his mother. Said he: "Mother, come here by my bed, and hear me say my prayers before I go to sleep." His daughter obeyed, and stood by his bed. Then the old man clasped his hands with great reverence, and repeated that beautiful child's evening prayer:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take."

He was apparently a child again, saying his prayers at his mother's knee.

Don't you think, children, that God heard his prayer?—David Rice, M. D.

"NEVER forget the three whats. First, What from? Secondly, What by? And thirdly, What to? What from? Believers are redeemed from hell and destruction. What by? By the precious blood of Christ. What to? To an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away."

EVERY HEART has its secret sorrow, which the world knows not, and oftentimes we call a man cold when he is only sad.

REPENTANCE without amendment is like continual pumping in a ship without stopping the leaks.—Palmer.

The Farm and Garden.

MANGOLDS OR MANGEL WURTZEL.

This is a species of beet, and grows out of the ground like the rutabaga or Swedish-turnip. This root is considered better for stock than the turnip, containing more nutriment than either the white turnip or rutabaga. The cultivation of mangolds is rare in our section (middle Georgia). We grow fine beets in our gardens, and I cannot see why we cannot grow them as field crops. Mr. David Milne, if I mistake not, says fine mangolds can be raised in Georgia. I raised one year some that weighed eight pounds, in my garden. I sowed them in the spring; the same fall I sowed one-half acre in mangolds, one-half in carrots, and two or more in turnips. I sowed them in September, in new ground; it was too late, and the whole crop was a failure. The mangolds and carrots did as well as the turnips; this was my experience as a field crop. In my garden, at the same time, I sowed a few rows of mangolds and carrots. They did much better; the mangolds and carrots sowed in spring were very fine. Mangolds weighed four to eight pounds, carrots as large as a man's wrist. In September of this year (1871) I sowed a few mangolds at the same time and upon the same lands as I sowed my turnips. Few of the mangold seed came up. To-day, November 8, the mangolds are as large as the rutabagas, and look as well. From experience and observation I have concluded that I can raise fine mangolds here in middle Georgia. Instead of sowing as late as September, or as early as I did in my garden, I would sow them in June; I shall try it next spring.

Mangolds require better land than turnips. I should prepare the land and sow them as I did turnips. If sown in June they would require more work to keep them growing, etc. I would like for some of our farmers to try this new root (new to us.)

Value as Food, Yield per Acre, Etc.—Mangolds contain much more sugar than turnips, and are, therefore, more nutritive. 245 pounds Irish potatoes, 691 pounds carrots, 607 pounds parsnips, 251 pounds Jernsalem artichokes, 336 pounds sugar beets, 803 pounds Swedish turnips or rutabagas, 1,185 pounds common white turnips, 367 pounds mangolds, are equal to 100 pounds of superior English hay. From this analysis we see that mangolds are twice as nutritious as rutabagas, and three times as nutritious as the common white turnip; the common white turnip being the least nutritious of any of the root crops.

Dr. George B. Loring, of Salem, Massachusetts, raised on one and one-eighth acres 1,800 bushels of mangolds, or forty-eight tons, at a cost of nine cents per bushel. This was equal to twelve tons of hay. How is that compared to Northern hay (inferior at that) at $1.90 to $2 per hundred weight. Mr. William Birnie, of Springfield, Massachusetts, raised in 1859, on two and a half acres, 3,160 bushels of mangolds, at a cost of six and a half cents per bushel, equal to nine and a half tons of hay per acre; much better than raising cotton, even two bales to the acre, and then buying hay at $1.90 per hundred weight, or $38 per ton. The cotton at $90 per bale would be $180; the mangolds or hay would bring $361. Quite a difference, not to say anything of the cost of production, etc.—B. D. Lumsden, in Southern Farm and Home.

ROTATION OF CROPS.

The great Sir Humphrey Davy, writing on rotation of crops, describes the rationale of the operation as follows:

"It is a great advantage in the convertible system of cultivation that the whole of the manure is employed, and that those parts of it which are not fitted for one crop remain as nourishment for another. Thus if the turnip is the first in the order of succession, this crop, manured with fresh stable manure, immediately finds sufficient matter for its nourishment, and the heat produced in fermentation assists in the germination of the seed and the growth of the plant. If, after turnips, barley with grasses is sown, then the land having been little exhausted by the turnip crop, affords the soluble parts of the decomposing manure to the grain. The grasses and clover remain, which derive a small part only of their organized matter from the soil, and probably consume the gypsum in the manure, which would be useless to other crops. These plants likewise, by their large systems of leaves, absorb a considerable quantity of nourishment from the atmosphere, and when plowed in at the end of two years, the decay of their roots and leaves afford manure for the wheat crop; and at this period of the course the woody fiber of the farm-yard manure, which contains the phosphate of lime and the other parts which are soluble with difficulty, is broken down, and as soon as the most exhausting crop is taken, recent manure is again applied. Peas and beans, in all instances, seem well adapted to prepare ground for wheat, and in some rich lands they are raised in alternate crops for years together. Peas and beans contain a small quantity of a matter analogous to albumen; but it seems that the azote, which forms a constituent part of this matter, is derived from the atmosphere. The dry bean leaf, when burnt, yields a smell approaching to that of decomposing animal matter, and in its decay in the soil may furnish principles capable of becoming a part of the gluten of wheat. Though the general composition of plants is very analogous, yet the specific difference in the products of many of them proves that they must derive different materials from the soil; and though the vegetables having the smallest system of leaves will proportionably most exhaust the soil of common nutritive matter, yet particular vegetables, when their produce is carried off, will require peculiar principles to be supplied to the land in which they grew. Strawberries and potatoes at first produce luxuriantly in virgin mold recently turned up from pasture; but in a few years they degenerate and require a fresh soil. Lands, in the course of years, often cease to afford good cultivated grasses; they become, as is properly said, tired of them, and one of the probable causes of this is the exhaustion of the gypsum contained in the soil."

NUMBER OF EGGS IN A HEN.—It has been ascertained that the ovarium of a fowl is composed of six hundred ovules or eggs; therefore a hen during the whole of her life cannot possibly lay more than six hundred eggs, which, in the natural course, are distributed over nine years in the following proportion:

First year after birth.....	16 to 20
Second.....do.....	100 to 120
Third.....do.....	120 to 135
Fourth.....do.....	100 to 115
Fifth.....do.....	60 to 80
Sixth.....do.....	50 to 60
Seventh.....do.....	35 to 40
Eighth.....do.....	15 to 20
Ninth.....do.....	1 to 10

It follows that it would not be profitable to keep hens after the fourth year, as their produce would not pay for their keeping, except when they are of a valuable and scarce breed.—G. K. Gegelin, on Poultry Breeding.

HOUSEKEEPERS' DEPARTMENT.

POWERFUL DISINFECTANTS.—M. Bonjean, an eminent pharmacist of Chambery, Savoy, has published a book on the means of preventing cholera, etc. Of course his system rests on the use of disinfectants, among which he mentions charcoal, well pounded, two pounds; sulphate of iron, one pound. Two or three tablespoonfuls should be placed in the night vessels used by the sick.

DELICIOUS RICE WAFFLES.—Take one quart of sweet milk, two coffee-cups of boiled rice and three quarters of a cup of wheat flour; warm the milk; add half a teacup of home-made yeast, two tablespoonfuls of distillery yeast and half a teaspoonful of salt. Make at twelve o'clock, to use for tea at six. Set in a warm place. When ready to cook add two eggs well beaten. Bake in waffle irons.

FOR THE TEETH.—At the American Dental Association some time ago the Committee on Dentifrices and Washes recommended the following receipt for a tooth powder: Prepared chalk, three pounds; pulverized Peruvian bark, two pounds; orris root, one pound; white crushed sugar, one and a half pounds; castile soap, one ounce; carbonate of soda, one ounce; oil of sassafras, eighty drops. To make a tooth paste add to the foregoing three ounces of glycerine and a sufficient quantity of honey to make the preparation of the proper consistency.

HOW TO COOK OLD FOWLS.—For the possible benefit of some other young housekeeper, I wish to tell them how to cook an old chicken. Prepare as for roasting, then boil three hours in a covered pot, with one quart of water, to which add two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, after which put into a pan in a hot oven for about one hour to brown. The liquor in the pot to be prepared for gravy; should the water boil away too much, more should be added. The result is, the meat is as tender as young chicken, and some think richer and better.—Ohio Farmer.

REMEDY FOR CANCER.—Colonel Ussery, of DeSoto, Louisiana, says that he fully tested a remedy for this troublesome disease, recommended to him by a Spanish woman, a native of the country. The remedy is this: Take an egg and break it, pour out the white, retaining the yolk in the shell; put in salt and mix with the yolk as long as it will receive it; stir them together until the salve is formed; put a portion of this on a piece of sticking plaster and apply to the cancer about twice a day. He tried the remedy twice in his own family with entire success. It has also been tried on two cases in Rhode Island, with perfect success. Such a remedy is within the reach of every one, and should be known to the whole world.

THE PLURALITY OF WORLDS.

The suggestive but not very satisfactory book of Mr. Proctor, Other Worlds than Ours, contains the latest theories of the constitution of the solar system. We find it unsatisfactory, because it mixes the points upon which there is substantial agreement among physicists and astronomers with those upon which Mr. Proctor's own notions are novel, and not yet generally accepted. The fact is, however, that astronomical physics have made recently such rapid progress as to preclude the thorough digestion of the new facts accumulated. We must expect a period of conflicting speculations, and the reconsideration, perhaps the rejection, of many established dogmas. Thus the nebular hypothesis of Laplace, the belief in which has been gaining ground for many years, and has been notably strengthened by discoveries of more recent date than its first announcement, is now attacked from a new side by Mr. Proctor, who propounds in its place a theory of meteoric aggregation, according to which the sun and planets have grown to their present form and state, and are still growing, by accumulations of cosmical matter.

With regard to the fascinating question of life in other spheres, made so interesting by the famous discussion of Brewster and Whewell, in the last generation, Mr. Proctor's conclusions may be summed up as follows:

1. The physical condition of the sun precludes the idea of any life, vegetable or animal, at all similar to that with which we are acquainted.

2. Mercury is exposed to solar heat so intense that without some protection life cannot exist. A rare atmosphere would not (as some, arguing from the cold on the tops of mountains, have supposed) afford such protection. It would merely cause alternations of intense heat and cold. A dense atmosphere, full of clouds, would be a better protection; and this is in fact (though not conclusively) indicated by the telescopic observations of Mercury. As an alternative view, Mr. Proctor suggests that the polar regions of Mercury may be suitable for organic existences, while the equatorial zones are so fiery as to boil away the seas, if seas there were. But such a hypothesis involves the assumption that the equator is but slightly inclined to the plane of the orbit; if this inclination is as great as that of the earth, or (as has been said) even greater, then the polar summer must be intensely hot. The density of Mercury—one-sixth greater than that of the earth—and the force of gravity at his surface—seven ounces to a terrestrial pound—would not interfere with life, but would enable the elephant to be as agile as an antelope.

3. Venus strongly resembles the earth in many respects; gravity at her surface is nearly the same; she has an atmosphere, in which the spectroscope faintly and somewhat doubtfully indicates the presence of aqueous vapor and nitrogen. The question of climates is the vital one; and this cannot be settled without ascertaining the inclination of her axis. A leading opinion among astronomers has been that this inclination is very small (15 degrees to 35 degrees,) or in other words, the inclination of the equator to the orbit-plane is very large (55 degrees to 75 degrees)—that of the earth's equator being only 23 1-2 degrees. Now if this observation of Venus is correct, or nearly so, farewell to decent, inhabitable climates upon the Planet of Love. Not even a lover could endure the swiftly alternating passion and despair of her summers and winters. But Mr. Proctor declares the evidence in the case to be insufficient, and pleads the other analogies between Venus and the Earth as reason for surmising their climatic peculiarities to be similar.

4. Mars is the planet upon which we can most clearly trace peculiarities of surface, and atmospheric conditions permitting life. The astronomers have constructed detailed maps of Mars, naming the supposed seas and continents after distinguished observers, such as Laplace, the elder Herschel, Tycho, Arago, Cassius, Lockyer, Secchi, Malder, Huggins and Dawes. There are icefields at the poles, a reddish land and a greenish sea, an atmosphere, clouds and mists. The fancy of a French astronomer, that the vegetation of Mars is red, instead of green, seems to be untenable, since the occasional loss or resumption of color, which he attributed to a change of season, has been observed to occur quite suddenly and swiftly, and is probably due to the intervening mists in the Martial atmosphere. On the whole, Mars is the most promising planet for emigrants who would like to explore and settle some locality beyond the reach of terrestrial civilization.

5. As for Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune, Mr. Proctor believes them to be themselves suns, giving heat, and perhaps light also, to their systems of satellites. It is upon the satellites that he is inclined to locate life. His discussion of the conditions of Saturn is particularly clear and striking, this being a subject to which he has devoted much attention, and upon which he has published a separate volume.

6. In dealing with the question of satellites, however, Mr. Proctor is obliged to confess at once that the moon, the only one of which we have any accurate knowledge, is doubtless uninhabited, being without visible atmosphere or water, and subjected to fierce daily alternations of heat and cold. The lunar atmosphere, according to the hypothesis he favors (if there ever were one, as seems a priori certain) has retreated into cavities on the body of the satellite, just as our ocean, if it were sufficiently limited in amount, might sink entirely out of sight in the earth's interior. But the extinct and lifeless condition which we see in the moon must be, according to Laplace's theory, that of every other small satellite; and even if Mr. Proctor succeeds in displacing the nebular hypothesis as the adequate account of the origin of the solar system, the loss of heat from all cosmical bodies by radiation into space must remain a fact, a vera causa, and must bring about the extinction of interior activity in satellites.

On the whole we see little hope for organisms analogous to our own, or to those we observe on the earth, except in Venus and Mars; yet it must be admitted that those modern discoveries which have demonstrated the existence in the solar system and the starry universe of matter, as we know it, give us new reason to speculate the extra-terrestrial existence of life as we know it. At all events, when balked in the surmise, it is still open to the bold student to inquire whether the planets and stars may not have been in the indefinite past, or may not be destined to become in the indefinite future, the abode of sentient beings. The earth and the career of man upon it being doubtless finite, we can scarcely dare to say that before these began, the Deity had, or that after these end, he will have, nothing to do in the creation, preservation and development of life.

SAVE YOUR CLOTHING! SAVE YOUR LABOR!

ITEMS OF IMPORTANCE TO EVERY HOUSEKEEPER.

THE WOMAN'S FRIEND

WASHING MACHINE!

Only four months since it was first introduced to the New Orleans public, and large numbers have been sold.

It washes by beating, instead of rubbing—the only true principle, as time has demonstrated.

A Home-manufactured Article.

THE UNDERSIGNED offers this Machine to the public as the Simplest and Best Washing Machine of the age, while the cost is the lowest. It is the invention of a Kentuckian, and is operated by rocking, and washes the clothes by beating instead of rubbing. It will wash 10 shirts or 25 ordinary pieces of clothing or two single blankets at a time, and it will thoroughly Wash, Rinse and Blue 100 pieces ordinary clothing in FORTY-FIVE MINUTES, without the least wear of the clothing, the breaking of a button or the pulling of a thread. The most delicate fabrics can be washed with it

WITHOUT THE LEAST INJURY.

It gives a grass-bleached whiteness to the clothes. To blankets and woolen clothes it gives a new appearance and feeling. Its construction is so simple that it will last for years with care, and cost less than wash-tubs in the aggregate. Any one can repair it, as there are no cog-wheels or cranks to replace.

The directions for its use are very simple, and every machine will do what is represented, if the directions are followed.

To verify what is stated, I have obtained a few certificates from responsible parties, which are annexed hereto.

PRICE, $12. WITH WRINGER, $18.

EDWARD THOMPSON, Manufacturer and Proprietor,

fe22 1m 184 PETERS STREET, NEAR JULIA, NEW ORLEANS.

GREENSBURG, LA., November 1, 1871.

I hereby certify that I have one of the "Rocker or Woman's Friend Washing Machines," and have found it the Machine for country use, as it will wash dirty clothes, such as farm-laborers wear rolling logs, etc. Any machine will wash clothes that are slightly soiled. A. W. CARRITH.

Mr. Carrith, in a letter accompanying this certificate, makes the following statement: "My wife, who understands fully the principles and process of washing, says it is useless to wash ordinarily soiled clothes through more than one hot water, but I could not well embody this in a certificate."

NEW ORLEANS, November 8, 1871.

I take pleasure in stating that the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," purchased of Mr. Thompson in September last, gives me excellent satisfaction. I have used it personally, and can say that it will wash the dirtiest clothes and give them a grass-bleached whiteness. I have washed Swiss muslin dresses with it without the least injury. I have washed blankets with it and found (as stated in the circulars) that it gives them a new appearance and feeling. One week, during a temporary illness, my little girl twelve and boy ten years of age done the entire washing—I simply put in the water and soap. I will give any further information I may possess to those interested, by calling at my residence. MRS. A. BOUCHEREAU, 232½ Eighth street.

NEW ORLEANS, November 18, 1871.

MR. E. THOMPSON—Dear Sir: I have used your Washer for the last three months, and as a practical man (scouring daily) I pronounce it the best in the market; I could not spare it. I will explain its merits to any one, by applying to P. VOLNEY,

Dyer and Scourer, 89 Bienville street.

NEW ORLEANS, November 7, 1871.

I certify that the "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," purchased of Mr. Thompson last June, has done the entire washing of my hotel, from the largest quilt and blanket to the smallest collar, ever since, to my entire satisfaction. It will wash clean the dirtiest pieces, and will not damage the most delicate. It has saved me a great amount of labor. Any one can see it in operation at my hotel on Monday of each week.

JOHN REINHARDT,

Proprietor Verandah Hotel, New Orleans.

SYLVESTER-LARNED INSTITUTE

FOR YOUNG LADIES,

102 and 104 Carondelet street,

New Orleans, November 15, 1871.

MR. E. THOMPSON—Dear Sir: Having used for over two months your "Woman's Friend Washing Machine," and tested it most thoroughly under my own eye, I am prepared to say with confidence that it does all you claim for it, if the simple and plain directions are followed. The Wringer especially is a great success. Altogether the Machine and Wringer are wonderful labor-saving machines, and the machine is very properly called "Woman's Friend."

Without it, not less than double our present number of servants would be required to do our work—hence the economy of it is evident. Every family should have one. Yours truly, J. S. PAGAUD.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE "DOMESTIC"

IS THE "KING"

Of Lock-Stitch Sewing Machines.

ON SITTING DOWN TO THE "DOMESTIC" the first expression is frequently an exclamation of surprise: "Why, how easy it runs!" The value of this feature is apparent from the fact that no power is so costly as that of human muscle; but when it is remembered that the health of multitudes of women is permanently injured each year by using heavy-running machines, its importance seems incalculable. Over fifty per cent. of the average power used by other machines is saved in running the "Domestic."

All improved kinds of Sewing Machines. The Willcox & Gibbs, and the Silent Family Sewing Machine, to run by hand or foot—recommended by the medical faculty as the only one fit for use by delicate ladies, on account of its lightness.

The expectation of more liberal supplies has caused a decided decline since our last issue in most articles of Western produce, but corn has ruled still more in favor of sellers. In flour we notice a reduction of 75c. in good treble extra and $1@$2 in choice, in pork $1.25@$1.50 ₱ bbl., and in bacon about ¼c. ₱ lb., while corn has advanced 1@2c. ₱ bushel. Sugar has shown but little change, but molasses has been unsettled.

On Saturday the demand was slack throughout the day and the movement checked also by moderate supplies, many factors covering up their samples, being unwilling to offer them at the ruling rates. Buyers moreover claimed concessions, predicated on the Liverpool and New York dispatches, which factors generally refused to admit, and although some sales were made at a reduction of ⅛c., yet on the whole there was hardly a sufficient cause for any reduction in quotations. The sales embraced 3,800 bales. On Monday, with further discouraging telegrams, the tendency was still more in favor of buyers, and sales were made at a decline of ⅛c., and in some cases of ¼c. from Friday's rates, but even then concessions failed to impart any spirit to the demand, and the movement was moreover checked by most factors being unwilling to accept the ruling rates. The business was confined to 1,850 bales, good ordinary closing at 21@21⅜c., low middling at 21⅜@21⅞c., middling at 22@22⅛c., strict middling at 22⅜@22½c., and good middling at 22⅞c. On Tuesday, notwithstanding the absence of Liverpool advices, the market opened with a firmer feeling on the part of factors, and buyers coming forward more freely, the sales reached 5,900 bales at firm prices, but on the whole showing no change from the rates current at the close on Monday. Exceptional sales were made at above and below quotations.

The receipts proper at this port, since the first of September, (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas,) are 758,646 bales, against 972,151 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 620,248 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 136,646 to France, and a decrease of 464,000 to Great Britain, and of 123,383 to other foreign ports.

VOL. XVIII. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 7, 1872. NO. 10.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Baltimore, Feb. 28.—Hon. Reverdy Johnson, in a speech before the American Peace Society, last night, deprecated the injection of consequential damages into American claims before the Geneva arbitrators, under the Washington treaty, as not contemplated by the high joint commission that framed that instrument. If the speaker had the ear of the President he would advise their withdrawal from the case.

San Francisco, March 2.—Advices from Arizona show that the massacre at Marlinez station was committed by Indians, who entered the premises on the pretense of being friends, and cut the occupants to pieces with knives. It is believed these savages came from Dale Creek Indian reservation.

The United States steamer Saranac has arrived from Magdalena bay.

Sioux City, Iowa, March 4.—The excitement over recent gold discoveries is on the increase. Major F. D. Pease, agent for the Crow Indians in northwestern Dakota, arrived here to-day, and says the reports are far below the real facts in the case. He brings several rich specimens, and says that the tribe over which he has charge have long known the exact location of rich deposits of gold, and have repeatedly killed white men who attempted to penetrate the country for the purpose of exploring it.

Jackson, March 5.—The Legislature begins to manifest a disposition to give attention to important business.

Senate.—Considering a bill to regulate fees and salaries of public officers.

House.—Considering a bill relative to the State penitentiary.

One hundred and seventy-five convicts from the Mississippi penitentiary have been leased, at fifty cents per day each, to work on Forrest's railroad from Memphis to Selma. A heavy bond was signed for the safe keeping of the convicts.

In the United States Court witnesses for the defense were examined in the Meridian Kuklux case. These witnesses include the leading citizens of Meridian, and all give an intelligent account of the troubles there. It is generally conceded that the case for the government has failed.

Philadelphia, March 5.—It is estimated that $1,000,000 worth of goods were damaged by the fire in Jayne's building. The fire did not reach the lower stories. The burning of the cupola, one hundred and twenty-five feet above the pavement, was a magnificent spectacle. The Chestnut street front escaped inundation.

Washington, March 5.—Senator Scott has agreed to accept Senator Kellogg's amendment to the Pacific railroad bill, changing the eastern terminus from Marshall, Texas, to Shreveport, Louisiana. A big fight over it is anticipated in the Senate.

There was a full meeting to-day.

Mr. Voorhies declines candidature for the Ohio Governorship.

FOREIGN.

London, Feb. 29.—The Times says England might pay nothing save what she is required to in obedience to the decision of the Geneva tribunal of arbitration. She has never dreamed of offering any compromise of the difficulties outside of the treaty. If the treaty is a failure it is the fault of the American government.

A miscreant fired a pistol at Queen Victoria to-day, while she was riding on Constitution Hill. The shot did no damage. The would-be assassin was arrested.

London, Feb. 29, midnight.—The excitement to-night over the reported attempt on the life of Queen Victoria is intense.

While the House of Lords was in committee discussing the ecclesiastical bill, Lord Granville entered and said he hoped their lordships would excuse this sudden interruption of their proceedings, but he had an announcement to make which it was proper should be made without delay.

He then proceeded to state that at half-past five o'clock this evening, the Queen, returning from a drive, had reached Buckingham Palace; as her carriage stopped at the gate a young man ran to the side of the carriage and presented a pistol within a foot of the Queen's head. The Queen bent her head down to avoid the shot, but the pistol did not explode.

The fellow in one hand held a paper granting a release to Fenian prisoners, which he shouted to the Queen to sign, threatening her at the same time with the pistol. He was instantly seized by the Queen's attendants, and prevented from doing further harm. It was then found that the pistol was unloaded, and that it was of such a primitive construction that, if it had been loaded, it probably could not have been discharged.

Her majesty was very calm, and showed courage, which she has often before exhibited. She had directed that a statement of the circumstances be immediately made to both houses of Parliament, in order to prevent exaggerated rumors. The would-be assassin gave the name of O'Conner, and is about nineteen years of age. His behavior at the police station is wild and incoherent. He boasted that he tried to reach the Queen during the procession of Tuesday.

Paris, March 1.—Marshal Canrobert arrived here to-day.

The raising of the state of siege will not be agitated at present in the Assembly.

Prince de Joinville has been reinstated in rank as admiral in the navy, and Duke D'Aumale as general in the army.

A committee of the Assembly has reported in favor of the restoration of their property to the Orleans princes.

General L'Admirault threatens to resign the governorship of Paris because the Rappel newspaper has been permitted to reappear.

Vienna, March 2.—The Emperor Francis Joseph, by an imperial decree just issued, declines to recognize the Old Catholic bishops, or the opponents of the dogma of infallibility, as a portion of the Catholic ecclesiastic hierarchy of Austria.

London, March 3.—There is the best reason to believe that the British government is prepared to consent to let the arbitration of the Alabama claims proceed under agreement, and that in no event shall the sum awarded for damages exceed a certain stipulated amount.

Rome, March 4.—Pere Hyacinthe delivered an address at a Protestant meeting to-night on the diffusion of the Bible.

London, March 4.—Dispatches from Calcutta announce that the expedition against Looshair having accomplished its object, the war is practically ended, and peace will soon be proclaimed.

It is reported that a treaty has been concluded between Brazil and Paraguay by which the former continues to exercise a protectorate over Paraguay for ten years, and the latter undertakes to pay the expenses of the protectorate, and cedes territory to Brazil.

Rome, March 5.—It is stated Prince Frederick Charles, of Prussia, who was recently here, said Germany would defend Italy should France attack her.

Berne, March 5.—The revision of the Federal constitution has been completed by the centralization of the common and criminal law of the country, which, having been already adopted by the National Council, was yesterday approved by the State Councils. Sessions of both councils have been prorogued.

Calcutta, March 5.—Gen. Brownlow telegraphs, under date of twenty-seventh ultimo, that the northern Howling chiefs have submitted—bringing peace offerings and binding themselves to peace with the usual oath and ceremonies, and all captives had been recovered.

A very disastrous fire occurred about two o'clock on Thursday morning, February 29, in the upper stories of the double tenement three-story brick building, Nos. 164 and 166 Canal, between Dryades and Baronne streets, in the apartment occupied by Messrs. Wagener & Meyer, dealers in pictures, picture frames, looking glasses, etc. The flames spread with fearful rapidity to the second story of the building (occupied by Prof. Dolbear as a commercial college) and also to the adjoining building, No. 162 Canal street, occupied by Miss Talbert as a private boarding house.

But for the active exertions of the fire department the entire property must have burned to the ground, and with it the buildings adjoining toward Baronne street, which were at one time regarded as in imminent danger. As it was, however, the destruction, so far as the fire is concerned, was confined entirely to the second and third stories of the buildings named.

I have found nothing yet which requires more courage and independence than to rise even a little, but decidedly above the par of the religious world around us.—Dr. J. W. Alexander.

THE NEW YORK OBSERVER YEAR BOOK FOR 1872.

BY ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD, D. D.

The almanac part of this handsome annual we suppose to be correct.

We are told in a recent number of the Observer that the publishers "have received more than one thousand commendatory notices of the New York Observer Year Book by the press in all parts of the country." Such diligence and success in hunting for compliments has rarely been equaled; it can never be surpassed. Would that there had been more diligence in the search for facts! Then the compliments had been better deserved. Perhaps, however, the estimate of "more than one thousand commendatory notices" is only guess-work, as so much of the Year Book's statistics seems to be. Guessing is so much easier than counting!

The New York Evening Mail tells us that the Year Book is "a most astounding work in the amount of matter that it contains." We regret that it is equally "astounding" as to the amount of mistakes it has made.

The Year Book's digest of revenue and postage laws we have had no occasion to compare with official documents; in these matters it would be difficult to make blunders, and we presume that these tables are reasonably accurate.

Our attention has been directed chiefly to the educational and religious statistics of the South, as reported in the Year Book. Our examination forbids us to say with the Cincinnati Daily Times—which "indorses it as reliable in every particular"—"Its compilation of religious and educational statistics are exceptionally full and accurate."

As to the comparative importance attached by our editor to the different religious bodies, whose statistics he professes to give, that is a matter about which we may differ. As to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, we should, perhaps, be satisfied that the editor has allowed us something less than one page; we are certainly not jealous that "our little sister," the Episcopal Church, is paraded through nearly nine. But we venture respectfully to suggest a doubt as to the propriety and economy of keeping a page of statistics "standing" for a whole year! How else shall we account for the fact that the statistics of the Church South are verbatim the same with which we were favored in 1871—and those taken from the reports of 1869. Only three years behind! The editor should be better posted about the mission work of Timbuctoo.

The Year Book has not even revised the list of Annual Conferences, although the General Conference, which changed them so materially, met in May, 1870. Bishop Keener is not on the list, while the late Bishops Soule and Andrew are put down among the deceased Bishops of the Northern Methodist Church, with foot-notes to explain their connection with us.

The editor has undertaken to give us a list of American clergymen who have died during the year 1871. If the Year Book be "reliable in every particular" the Southern States offer unparalleled advantages to invalids; among nearly four hundred clergymen who died during the past year, we have scarce a score of Southerners. Alas! our one church suffered a heavier bereavement. We learn from this list that "Rev. James O. Anderson, D. D.," died March 2, at Mobile, Alabama. This substitution of Anderson for Andrew we might attribute to the blunder of the proof-reader, were there not other inaccuracies almost as bad.

We have a chapter entitled "Church Work," purporting to set forth the contributions of the Christian world for 1871. We do not regret that the Methodist Episcopal Church South does not appear on this list; we would hardly take pleasure in having public attention called to our missionary contributions. But we are not excluded from this department because the editor's good nature inclined him to hide our faults, nor because our membership was too small, or our contributions too meager to deserve a line in the statistics of Christian contributions. The fact is, our editor did not know what nearly six hundred thousand Southern Methodists were doing for the cause of missions.

How the editor managed to make so many egregious blunders in the statistics of Southern and Western colleges we cannot imagine. We are unable to determine which is greater—his sins of omission or commission.

The Year Book mentions six colleges in Alabama, and is wrong, or defective, as to five—putting down our Methodist University, at Florence, as a Presbyterian school. The Georgia colleges have fared worse, if possible. Eight are reported—two of which do not exist. One of these—the Cherokee College, at Cassville, Georgia—we suggest be left out of the next edition; General Sherman burned it down when he burned up the town. We can assure the editor of the reliability of this statement; it has not been a long time since we looked upon its ruins, and speculated upon the contribution made by the destruction of an institution of learning to the preservation of the American Union. If the editor is interested in the necrology of Southern colleges, we can tell him that General Sherman burned a Methodist college in Cassville at the same time he made an offering of the Cherokee College, to the great grief of our Baptist brethren. If the Year Book intends to "build the tombs of the prophets," we, as well as the Baptists, ask a monument for our dead.

The old Wesleyan—mother of all the female colleges in the world, but "fairest of all her daughters"—at Macon, Georgia, he does not mention. This omission is not designed as a reflection upon female colleges, for the Masonic Female College, at Covington, is reported. The late president of Wesleyan Female College, Rev. John M. Bonnell, D. D., is set down in the Year Book as president of a Baptist college, supposed to exist at Griffin, Georgia! Mercer, he leaves at Penfield; Oglethorpe, at Milledgeville. As their locations have not been changed more than two years, the editor is excusable. An excellent institution, fifteen years old, Bowdon College, he leaves out; this is unpardonable.

We are glad that the editor is better posted as to the colored schools in Atlanta and elsewhere. In this connection we regret to say that he has not heard of the existence of the "Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America," over which Bishops Miles and Vanderhorst preside—although it numbers a full hundred thousand souls.

Of Wesleyan University, Millersburg, Kentucky, he has not heard; Central College, Missouri, he does not locate; Randolph Macon he leaves at Boydton, with Colonel T. C. Johnson as president; Wofford College, according to our wide-awake statistician, is without a president, or a place, although Dr. Shipp has guided its fortunes for a dozen years, and Spartanburg is not hard to find. The Pacific Methodist College he supposes to be still at Vacaville, with Dr. Thomas as president; of our college in Oregon he is not informed. He is equally unfortunate as to the University of Missouri, Columbia, Missouri. Of the University of Tennessee our friend has heard, but is not informed; he puts it down as a Presbyterian institution, without a head! This may surprise General Smith, its chancellor, as well as our Presbyterian friends.

Our readers may need an increase of faith when we tell them that we have only given them a few specimens that lay along the path.

We mention these things in good temper, and from the best of motives; we find in these statements a reason for charity. The Year Book has been worth more than $1 to us; it has enabled us to read several bitter and slanderous Northern editorials without a feeling of resentment. The Year Book proves and illustrates what we have long suspected—the invincible ignorance of certain Northern editors as to Southern affairs. What do the average editors—writing "more than one thousand commendatory notices" of the Year Book—know of the South, its history, spirit, character or wants, when a famous statistician can perpetrate such blunders as we have indicated? It is preposterous! Sins of ignorance we are ready to forgive; but with the willfully and incorrigibly ignorant it is sometimes difficult to be patient; especially when they feel "a call" to lecture us upon our faults, and expect us to receive their censures and misrepresentations not only with meekness, but gratitude.

We cannot believe that the editor of the Year Book is other than an estimable gentleman, but he has driven us to the reluctant conclusion that he is "slow," and not as well acquainted with the affairs of his country as we hope he will be before he publishes his Year Book for 1873.

From a very hurried glance at the contents, we judge the book well worth consultation by those engaged in teaching, and by those who contemplate engaging in this important calling. The author, in his plan and treatment, covers the whole ground, and his hints and instruction are doubtless of great value. For sale by J. A. Gresham, Camp street, New Orleans.

Stellafont Abbey, or Nothing New, by Emma Marshall, is another beautifully bound 12mo, and a most interesting and well-written story. Father Hyacinthe's New Paper.

The first number of the Esperance of Rome, founded by Father Hyacinthe, appeared on the twenty-fifth of last January. The new publication is printed in French, and will be issued three times a month. The programme is drawn up with remarkable ability. It says: "If, with all the deference that is due to the church, we dare to require reforms, let it be fully understood that we do not thereby renounce our title as Catholics. We do not seek to incite pulpit against pulpit; we only ask for the reform of the church in the church; and if we often frankly condemn the abuses committed by those who pretend to be its sole representatives, we shall often, also, console ourselves with the recollection of its good acts and its greatness."

Among the contents of the first number are a paper by Father Hyacinthe on the Association of Old Catholics lately held at Munich, some articles by Andre Altagene entitled a "Reply to the Letter of the Pope to the Bishops of Switzerland," and a "Discussion with the Reactionary Clergy." Father Andre's opinions on the reform of the church have gained him great disfavor in certain quarters. Ever since 1854 the Holy Roman Inquisition have instituted prosecutions against him. It required all the manifestations of his rights as a French citizen, and the protection of Napoleon the Third, to shield him from the dangers with which he was threatened. He left the Order of the Capuchins in the same manner as Father Hyacinthe left that of the Carmelites.—New York Observer.

General Reunion.—Zion's Herald, advocating the union of all the Methodist bodies, says that the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States will never feel perfectly happy till they all get back again under the old roof-tree. The Standard of the Cross adds: "Neither shall we feel perfectly happy till all the reunited Methodists are back again under our still older roof-tree." The Religious Telescope adds: "The weeping prisoner of the Vatican will not feel perfectly happy, either, till all these, reunited, shall find shelter under the old roof-tree of the mother church, as papists are fond of styling their communion."
